I have taken a good "jolt" me about it, tell me I'm an easy mark for patent medicines if you like, and advertised medicines are humbugs, etc., but I maintain that they are nearly always complaining of dull aches and pains and poor digestion, while I am afraid of sleep and my kind of fare and feel good and ready for my work all the time, me, and I believe I owe my good digestion and sound health to the prompt regular use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, year in and year out, and all the "jollying" in the world will never convince me to the contrary.

I used to have heartburn about three times a day and a headache three times a week. Now I eat and after standing for this for hours or five years I began to look around for a switch and found it in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. The investment I could make would be a fifty cent box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and I have learned about fifty cents a month for three years and what I stand by is that that is what I spend every day for them. I feel like shaking hands with myself for I can keep my stomach and digestion in first class order for fifty cents a month. I don't care for any better life insurance.

My druggist tells me they are the largest seller of all the stomach medicines and that they have established their popularity and success by merit. He does not advertise. They bring results, and results are what count in a patent medicine as much as in selling barbwire.

Chance For Canadian Trout.

Ottawa, March 16.—In a report to the Department of Trade and Commerce, Mr. Natalis Rondeau, Canadian commercial agent in Paris, states that small trout from Norway put up in tins with oil are finding a ready sale in France. He thinks that Canadian trout ought to successfully compete with the Norwegian fish.

Ex-Governor Dying.

Vancouver, B.C., March 16.—Ex-Lieutenant-Governor McInnes has had another attack of heart trouble, and is in a very critical condition. He is hardly expected to live through the night.

Seventy-five people out of every hundred need Scott's Emulsion just at this season; the other twenty-five would be benefited by it—there's scarcely anyone whose general condition would not be improved by Scott's Emulsion at this time of the year. It puts on solid, healthy flesh and builds up the whole body.

That is what Scott's Emulsion is guaranteed to do. As Scott's Emulsion has been the standard for thirty years this guarantee means something.

By reason of the great scarcity of cod liver oil just now substitutes of all kinds are being offered to the public.

Insist upon Scott's Emulsion and you will get the pure oil and the best emulsion made.

Scott's Emulsion never changes in quality, purity or effect.

THEY DROVE PIMPLES AWAY.—Face covered with pimples is unsightly. It tells of internal disorder. Cathartics which should long since have been condemned. They gripe and purge, but are not performing that which is the ability way they should, and those pimples are why. You know that the blood protects. Dr. Carter's Little Liver Pills drive them all away, and will have the skin clear and clean. Sick headache, and dizziness will be another witness to their excellence.

If you have a good business, it is always better to stay where you are. Unsuccessful changes rarely end advantageously and the whole body gives up to weakness. Then the blue mind is filled with gloom and dismal forebodings. The result of derangement of the digestive organs. Constipation come to sad to the distress. If only the wished could realize how easily to the oblivion for a while and temporary relief, Dr. Carter's Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep, but will act as beneficially that the whole body will be refreshed and restored to happiness.

A WONDERFUL CURE.—Mr. David Smith, Oak Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of those who wish to say a few words about Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery about a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent cold, was run down and with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, and used it reluctantly to cure the sore but all to no purpose. Then I was induced to try Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspepsia Cure, and before I had used about one-half, the sore showed signs of healing. Before I had the time that bottle was done, it had absolutely disappeared and my general health was wonderfully improved in all ways of a very bilious habit and had a good quick and human pain with little effect. But since using I bottle of Dr. Hamilton's Pills Pectoral my biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is better than for 20 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured, as it is by far the best health restorer I know."

Many things in life can be had always make the best shed.

Mr. Jeffery's second bear in mind that Dr. Thomes' Eclectric Oil has nothing in common with the many deteriorating class of so-called medicinal oils. It is a constantly pure and really efficacious liniment for rheumatism, stiffness of the joints and muscles, bruises, burns and scalds, being an excellent specific for rheumatism, sciatica, bronchial complaints.

Much talk, many lies.
It's pretty tough when a man can't get credit for his good intentions.

These two detestable qualification, constipation and biliousness, are the same effectual, are to be found in Dr. Carter's Little Liver Pills. In young Children like it.

It takes a journey to voice the opinion of a lawyer.

For relief from indigestion, biliousness, constipation or torpid liver, without disturbing the stomach or interfering with your daily work, use Dr. Carter's Little Liver Pills, they will please you.

The average watch represents but 11 per cent of the value of a horse.

They make one feel as though life was worth living. Dr. Carter's Little Liver Pills after eating—It will relieve dyspepsia, aid digestion, give tone to the stomach. Try them.

That tired, languid feeling and dull headache is entirely overcome by the use of Carter's Little Liver Pills before retiring. Try them

WATERS.

Pale, Anaemic People

With thin, watery blood always suffer greatly from the cold as well as the sudden and violent changes of our Canadian winter. They are particularly susceptible to Chills, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, La Grippe and even Consumption. They should take FERROL, instead of which they usually resort to extra warm clothing and avoid the cold, fresh air as much as possible—a very great mistake. What they require is a coating of good, healthy fat, a supply of strong, warm, red blood and supported tissues and all this they may have with very little trouble or expense, by taking a course of which will infallibly enrich the blood, increase the weight and tone up the nerves, making clumsy clothing quite unnecessary, and crisp, cold, fresh air a joy, instead of a thing to be avoided.

FERROL

MRS. IDA LACHMUND.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MRS. IDA LACHMUND.

An Energetic Woman Who Owns and Operates Two Steamboats.

Steamboating is the unusual business in which Mrs. Ida Lachmund is engaged. She is a resident of Clinton, Ia., and her steamers ply up and down the broad Mississippi river, upon which her home city is situated.

This energetic western woman is the owner of two large steamboats, and she has the entire supervision of them. This means that she has a crew on each vessel, and as each crew contains twenty-six men, and as Mrs. Lachmund closely watches the machinery of her possessions to see that no defects exist and buys all the stewards' supplies, her life is an especially busy one.

What is more, it is also a successful one financially. The unusual undertaking of this feminine boat owner averages the towing of from 35,000,000 to 40,000,000 feet of lumber in a season, which consists of the six months from April to November, and this makes a splendid income for the woman who has entered this strange business.

Do You Keep a Scrapbook?

The very widewake house mistress has her scrapbook, and if not a scrapbook, a box of assorted and labeled envelopes, and if not assorted envelopes a patent index contrivance with all the latest frills of fashion in its dexes. Book, envelope or patent indexer or any other scrap collector, it is all the same—she keeps the hints that fall by the wayside and has them ready to pin upon when she comes to their good counsel.

Each house mistress has her own best way of collecting and arranging scraps. She will not go amiss if she makes her plan as simple as possible without neglecting any department of the household, which has as many divisions as a kingdom. Cuisine is one grand division, which may be subdivided, the decisiallocation in a good cookbook forming a trusty guide.

House decorating, house furnishing, house cleaning, the care of beds, linens, baths, servants, suggestions for entertaining, are other departments to be endeavored.

Some suggestions that she meets with may be learned, relating to a prevailing mode or fad for this or that; others pertain to the eternal fitness of things, and hence merit a more honorable place among the scraps.

It is the part of prudence in the almost trackless wilderness of suggestions opened nowadays for the education of the housekeeper to exercise the best judgment with which she is endowed in collecting the scraps that fit with her individual circumstances.—Chicago News.

Let the Children Have Pets.

Nearly all children love animals and should be allowed to have one of some kind for a pet wherever possible. One of the hardest things to exercise in the bringing up of children is foresight, and yet it is the most important and imperative of necessities in the mother who conscientiously tries to do her duty. How often do you hear: "Oh, what's the use? We may all be dead a year from now!" This is both true and trite, yet is a most pernicious mode of reasoning. A child who cares for a helpless kitten is unconsciously fostering the instinct of motherhood, and if that he or she is goodful to the little creature produces the same glow which we experience in after life when we minister to the wants of the tiny little toddlers who have not yet learned to do for themselves. Seldom will a child forget to feed a pet if he is once given the responsibility, all of which cultivates thoughtfulness and diverts from self. They do not know that the sweetest thing in life is to be needed, that we need to be needed above all else, but we know and should not rob them of this keenest and most innocent of pleasures. Instead of enumerating the disadvantages and drawbacks of having a cat or dog around the house when the desire is wistfully expressed by the little folks, look ahead and remember that you are here given the opportunity of planting the seed of a better, stronger and more unselfish solicitude for the care of those little human pets without which no life is fully lived.

The Woman Who Works.

If a young woman is compelled to earn her own living, there are many avenues open to her. There is the commercial world of typewriting, bookkeeping, stenography, etc. There are the fields of literature and art, and by art I include embroidery and designing, and there are the professions. First of all, a woman should decide in which of these various walks of life she is both adapted. Then, with a definite purpose, she should push into her chosen line of work, determined to let nothing stand in the way of her success. If she is not compelled to earn her own living, but is simply entering the business world in order to procure a little extra pocket money or become independent in a measure, it is far better for her to remain at home and perfect herself in household duties—learn to make her own clothes, trim her own hats, make dainty cakes for herself and do many other of the nice little domestic tasks that fall to the lot of women. If she has a calling in any line, however—though she may not be compelled to earn her own living—she by all means let her cultivate her particular talent. In fact, she will do so anyway. "Poverty, discouragements—nothing will keep her from it. What is best in her is bound to manifest itself though it may require the patience of Job in attaining results.—Chicago Tribune.

Horseback Riding.

There is nothing that so develops the beauty of women as horseback riding. It not only develops beauty of form and complexion, but maintains it. Aside from the beauty of face and form which attracts, equestrianism develops a beauty of character which makes friends for the rider by those of them. It is universally admitted that American women are the most beautiful. And the most beautiful American women are the equestrians. Who has not seen or heard of the sweet Kentucky belle with her Venus-like figure, bright, laughing eyes, a beautiful complexion that would put the damask rose to shame, a pose, a grace, artistic lines that are beyond the poet to describe or the artist to reproduce? This beauty of face, form and character is the inherited and acquired result of equestrianism.—New York Medical Journal.

Couches and Nerves.

Couches have saved more minds and nerves and bodies than all the doctors and medicines put together. It is the only really restful beauty of home keeper has, did she but know it, and the only fault I have to find with women is as to this, that they do not use their couches half enough. When distracted by the infinite cares of the household and wearied out by this but and that, she can throw herself down for a moment's rest and by the time bubbles to straighten themselves out in their own accord. By these means hysteria is avoided, many of the nervous troubles to straighten themselves out in their own accord. By these means hysteria is avoided, many of the nervous troubles and the women's chances for eternal salvation are helped tremendously.—Philadelphia North American.

Kitchen Work.

If you would preserve your daintiness, which is an essential to beauty, don't let yourself store away kitchen fumes in clothing and hair. Don't imagine that a sprinkling of white rose or lavender water will hide the odors. Make a point of having your kitchen thoroughly ventilated during cooking hours. Tie your hair in a handkerchief if the fumes are strong. Try your best to change your clothes the minute you leave the kitchen. This is not an easy matter to arrange, but so much the better if you can accomplish it. Give the kitchen clothes and the hair frequent airings, wash the hair and hang it out of the window.

The Wonder Ball.

The wonder ball much in use in Germany is good as a means to both interest and amuse a child. It is made by winding a hank of worsted into a ball, stopping every now and then to wind in some little present. The smaller or most expensive gift should be placed in the center, while the bigger boxes of pure chocolates may be only partially concealed near the surface. The recipient of the gift should knit until the little presents fall out. The wonder ball might well prove a source of entertainment to an invalid.

A Candy Test.

The mother who purchases the candy she gives to her children can know whether they are eating pure sweets or not by soaking a bit of the candy in cold soft water. If there is any adulterant in the bottom of the glass the presence of some sort of impurity or adulteration is indicated; usually chalk or alba, and while the adulteration may not be exactly harmful the child is not taking pure food into the stomach.

The Nervous Woman.

If only the fidgety, nervous women could see themselves there would be fewer sanitariums for nervous prostration. The woman who would be calm and self possessed should practice relaxation every day and see how much it will do for her. She will no longer be a terror-caught to friends and will find it a great benefit to herself.

Tinting Curtains.

To tint lace curtains cream color add an ounce of yellow ocher to two ounces of starch and mix in the usual way with boiling water. It is best to soak a pair of curtains at the same time, for thus one can insure both being of the same shade of color.

To clean wall paper use a little dough made of flour mixed with a little washing soda. The dough will not injure the paper, and the work can be done more rapidly.

Old stockings cut down the seam make excellent cloths for polishing furniture and floors, as well as soft iron holders.

A short, stout woman should dress her hair so that it will give an appearance of additional height.

Soap should never be used for washing pudding cloths.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Czar Rockefeller.

(New York World.)

Directly and indirectly Mr. Rockefeller controls the fortunes of 475 companies and corporations in the United States.

The aggregate capital of these is $5,188,368,528. This is more than twice the national debt of the United States.

More than 1,400,000 men, women and children are employed by these 475 companies.

Nearly 6,000,000 human beings, more than one-fourteenth of the whole population of the country, are dependent for the necessaries of life upon the earnings of those employed by these companies, or in other words they are dependent upon Mr. Rockefeller.

Mr. Rockefeller rules fifty banks and trust companies in New York and other cities.

He dominates many great insurance companies.

Mr. Rockefeller controls 60 per cent. of the railroads of the country. His total railroad mileage is 45,000.

He is the greatest single power in the transportation companies of New York, and he controls those of several other cities.

Mr. Rockefeller can practically fix the price of cigars, cigarettes and smoking tobacco for the entire country.

Mr. Rockefeller can change the tariff on telegrams and cable messages.

Mr. Rockefeller can fix the price of steel. That means that he fixes every article made of steel in any form.

Mr. Rockefeller controls absolutely the enormous oil industry and all of its by-products.

No Such Thing As Luck

In Successful Decorating

Successful decoration must be the outcome of study—of thought rather than of mere chance.

In the chance room there will surely be something wrong.

Possibly the color. Perchance Drawing — Likely both.

Whether Chamber, Drawing Room, Living Room, Library or Den, the room must be treated with thought of surroundings, of furniture of complexion, of lighting, of size.

The environment of a room with North or East exposure must not be blue, while either West or Southern exposure may use blue to advantage

How about Crimsons, Greens and Brown—where may these colors be used—just ask your decorator, if he is worthy the name he can tell you.

FIRE BRIGADE DID EXCELLENT SERVICE.

CONSIDERABLE DAMAGE CAUSED LAST NIGHT BY BLAZE IN PREMISES OF GREAT EASTERN STOCK COMPANY.

A few minutes before 9 o'clock last night some young men who were walking along the west side of Front street noticed smoke issuing from the store of the Great Eastern Stock Company. Upon investigation it was found that the premises were on fire at the rear, and the flames had apparently been at that early hour in the evening, raised considerable headway. An alarm was sounded and in a short time the brigade was upon the scene.

When the firemen commenced operations smoke was pouring out of the front of the building in dense volumes, whilst in the rear the flames were making much headway. To many onlookers it seemed that the building was doomed, but the firemen fought from the front and rear of the building and soon were masters of the situation. The damages done to the building and stock is considerable.

The fire evidently started behind the large drug warehouse in situated in the back part of the store. As there is considerable light material there, such as paper and boxes, it is made great food for the flames. How the conflagration is not known. Some of the employees were in the store until 8 o'clock, and when they left everything was apparently all right.

To the fire fighters is due much credit for confining the flames to a comparatively narrow space. They were aided in their efforts by an excellent pressure of water.

The building is the property of Mr. James Gordon, and it is estimated that the damage done will amount to about $6000; $2000 of which is covered by an insurance of $2000 in the Acme Company and $1000 in the Hand in Hand.

The loss on the stock was valued at from $8000 to $10000. The latter is probably about 10 per cent. of this amount, which is covered by an insurance of $5000 in the Equity.

After the firemen had concluded their arduous duties they were entertained by Ald. Ketcheson and Mr. Wm. Thompson, who set up "an oyster supper for the "fire laddies" in recognition of their fine work.

A SLUGGING MATCH.

Ottawa, March 16.—The heavy hitters in the debate on the address yesterday for the Opposition were Messrs. Lapgrain, Casgrain, Bennett, Smith, of Wentworth, and Jabel Robinson. Mr. Bourassa was the only Liberal speaker. The clash of the day was between Mr. Chas. Casgrain and Henri Bourassa, and threw some light on a phase of French-Canadianism that is rapidly projecting itself into Dominion politics.

Mr. Casgrain varied a severe criticism of the Government on general principles, to pay his respects to the League Nationale of Quebec, an institution which echoes the anti-Imperial fire of Bourassa.

Bourassa Resents.

The platform of the League Nationale denounces the recruiting of soldiers in Canada by Great Britain. It declares that Canada should not participate in Imperial wars; that there should be no naval schools in this country; that there should be communication by Parliament at the opening of each session all correspondence between Canada and Great Britain and the other colonies in regard to Imperial questions. It demands for Canada the right to make or abrogate commercial treaties with any part of the world, including Great Britain, and specifically excludes this country from all Imperial councils. These principles Mr. Casgrain read from a small pamphlet, but before he had time to comment the Bourassa stood up to protest that the last of the list of principles had been only partially read.

Reply to Bourassa.

"If the part I have omitted is no better than that which I have read it matters but little difference," replied Mr. Casgrain.

"And is this," he went on, holding out the pamphlet scornfully, "is this the platform of the Liberal party? It is the policy of the Liberal party in Quebec!"

These stabs at the League Nationale angered Mr. Bourassa, and when 15 minutes later Mr. Casgrain concluded his speech the member for Labelle proceeded to explain his relations to Canada and the Empire. He concluded by asserting that if was the French-Canadians who preserved the integrity of the Empire in times past, when the English-speaking element was a handful of the population.

Mr. Taylor, the Conservative whip, moved the adjournment of the debate.

MEDICINE FOR MEN.

SOMETHING THAT WILL BANISH WORRIES AND BRACE UP THE SYSTEM.

Has it ever occurred to you that you need a medicine as men—not as old men or young men, but as men? Are you never conscious that the special wear and tear of life which men sustain need repair? Worry wears a man out quicker than work but worry is not an accident, it is a symptom—a symptom of nervous exhaustion. Other symptoms are nervous headache, morning lassitude, that makes it difficult to get out of bed; a weak feeling in the back; indigestion; biliousness after slight exertion; irritable temper — perhaps some nervous pain such as neuralgia, sciatica or incipient paralysis. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is a medicine for men, not directly upon the source of discomfort. They restore manly vigor and energy, improve the appetite and tone up the nerves and the whole system. Mr. Neil H. McDonald, Estmere, N.B., is one of the many men who has proved the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. He says: "I am glad to be able to say that I have found Dr. Williams' Pink Pills all that is claimed for them. I was completely run down, my appetite was poor, and I suffered very much from severe headaches. Your medicine did not give me the needed relief, so I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I used only a few boxes when my former health returned, and now I feel like a new man."

Weak, nervous, broken down men—and women, too—will find new health and happiness in a fair trial of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. But be sure that you get the genuine, with the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" printed on the box and around every one. Sold by medicine dealers or sent by mail at 50c a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MUNICIPAL TELEPHONES

Chief Railway Commissioner Blair's Judgment Holds Contract Between C.P.R. and Bell Co. Valid.

Ottawa, March 16.—The delivery of judgment yesterday morning on an application of the municipal telephone of Port Arthur to interfere with the passenger and freight statutes of the C.P.R. at that town developed a serious difference of opinion among the members of the Railway Commission. Mr. Blair, the chairman, held that the Bell Telephone Company under which the latter was given the exclusive right to operate telephones on the stations of the former, was legal and binding, and failed to maintain the exclusive feature of the contract entitled the companies in question to compensation. The Port Arthur system would therefore be granted the order asked for, subject to compensation, but the order would be held in suspense until the terms of compensation had been agreed upon.

Mr. Bennett's View.

Mr. Bennett objected to the statement that the agreement was valid and binding, but he did not go as far as the chairman. He was not ready to say that an agreement between two companies for their mutual advantage should preclude a municipal telephone system from reaching a railway station. He regretted the law in a sense as intending to apply to the general public as well as to railway, telephone or telegraph corporations. The order ought to go, and the question of compensation to the C.P.R. should be determined later. He would give no opinion as to the legality of the agreement, but by reason of the fact that no party could take advantage of another without remunerating them.

Dr. Mills' Opinion.

Dr. Mills, the third member of the Commission, declared that the exclusive privilege in the agreement between the C.P.R. and the Bell Telephone Company aimed at creating a monopoly, was intended to prevent competition in the telephone business, interfered with the public interest, and as against public policy, and in consequence debarred the contracting parties from all claims for compensation. Reasonable compensation ought to be granted to the C. P. R. for the use of their property by Port Arthur, and the expense of operating the telephones at their stations.

The judgment of the chairman of the Commission is the one which goes into effect, as section 10 of the Railway Act provides that the chief Commissioner's view shall prevail upon any question which is the opinion of the Commissioners is a question of law. The judgment in the case of Port Arthur also applied to the town of Fort William.

Bespokes.

"No, thank you," said Miss De Mure, "I don't care to meet any new young men."

"Ny?" exclaimed Miss Gaddle. "You are select all of a sudden!"

"No," replied Miss De Mure glancing dreamily at her new ring. "I've merely been selected all of a sudden."

Received Tumultuously.

"He says he created quite a furore with his new play," remarked the first actor.

"Huh!" snorted the other. "He means he created quite a row range—Git off the stage!' 'Shoot him!' etc."

DEFEAT ON A SNAP VOTE

A Wild Scene in the British House of Commons.

John Redmond Springs a Surprise on the Government and Wins on a Vote—Old Irish Secession Estimates Reduced—Balfour Refuses to Resign, and on the Next Two Votes Scored Majorities of 20 and 22 Respectively.

London, March 16.—The Government was defeated in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon by a vote of 140 votes on a motion of John Redmond, the Irish leader, for reduction of the Irish education estimates. As it was in the course of a snap division, engineered by the Nationalists, the Government refused to resign, but it was regarded as another straw showing the direction of the wind. The motion was made with the object of calling attention to Irish grievances. The division was taken almost immediately after the announcement of the discussion when the Liberals and Nationalists were in strong force, but there was great excitement over the cheering, especially from the Irish benches.

Didn't Wish to Waste Time.

The Opposition immediately moved to adjourn, but Premier Balfour opposed the motion. He declared, amidst much laughter, that it was obvious the Government had been defeated on a proposal to reduce a grant. He did not think it worth considerable amount of financial business to be transacted before March 31, and he did not see why any time should be wasted.

Mr. Balfour added that the honorable member had succeeded in reducing the vote for Irish education by $500 and the Government accepted the opinion of the House on the subject.

Mr. Redmond retorted: "We have defeated the Government."

It was then that Mr. Redmond moved another motion. This was defeated by 171 to 146 votes, the Government majority being 25.

Scene of Excitement.

The Government in the interim had succeeded in mustering enough Unionist Irelanists to save the day, as in the event of a second adverse division the Ministers would have been bound to resign.

The defeat of the Government was the result of a successful coup planned by Mr. Redmond, and the senior Irish leader arose triumphant, while Sir Thomas Esmonde, Monday evening chairman, began to ask questions for yesterday, and knowing that the majority of the House expected the Irish members to occupy all the afternoon in discussing Irish education, Mr. Redmond and Sir Thomas decided to force a division almost immediately after questions time, when the greater number of the Government supporters would still be lunching at their clubs. The manoeuvre succeeded to perfection. Mr. Redmond arose holding a large sheaf of notes in his hand, as if intending to make a long opening speech; but to the astonishment of all, exactly as in the secret, the Irish leader spoke only a few words and then sat down, while his party demanded the division for which such careful plans had been laid.

Great Excitement Roused.

A scene of indescribable excitement occurred when Sir Thomas Esmonde read Anthony J. Dunne, the two tellers, went to the right of the Speaker's chair, thus showing that for the first time in many years the Unionist Government had been beaten.

When the clerk of the House handed the division paper to Sir Thomas Esmonde there was a perfect hurricane of cheers from the Opposition, lasting several minutes. William Redmond, in his exhilaration, scatched a hat from the head of a Unionist member and waved it. Other members rushed in, and a terrible din prevailed. Gradually, however, quiet was restored to enable the House to vote to be called out. Mr. Balfour, who was in the distinguished strangers' gallery at the time, appeared immediately confounded at the jubilant uproar.

Message to Ministers.

The cheering of the Opposition was resumed when Mr. Balfour entered the chamber, and he was greeted with derisive cheers and cries of "Hear, hear!" and "Another message for Joe!" The Premier, who had by this time regained his accustomed composure, philosophically surveyed the excited House. The long-sustained jubilation did not tend to the advantage of the Opposition. The Government whips had time to collect their disordered forces from all parts of the House and various haunts in London. Driving and running furiously came the sedate supporters of the present Government. When another division was taken on the motion to report progress, Mr. Balfour had 25 votes to the good.

Balfour's Majority 98.

Just before the suspension of the evening session of the House of Commons a division on a motion to reduce the supplementary vote of the army estimates, resulted in 128 for the motion and 226 against it, a Government majority of 98.

Looked on as a Joke.

London, March 16.—The members of the Government and their supporters last night professed that they regard yesterday's division more in the light of a joke than anything else.

Balfour Is Warned.

The Times regards the adverse vote as of small intrinsic value when brought about to a party that only the night before defeated the Opposition. No party leader cares to accept too many small annoyances. The constituencies, when appealed to, may condemn the slackness of the Unionist members. The vote shows that the Liberal party is dependent on the Irish members.

TEMISKAMING RAILWAY

Second Reading of the Bill Passed By the Legislature.

Public Ownership Grows in the Minds of Legislators—Dr. Pyne Wants the Railway Owned By the Government Operated By the Administration For Ten Years—Mr. Ferguson and Others Advocates Government Ownership.

Toronto, March 16.—The Legislature yesterday passed the second reading of Mr. Latchford's bill for the extension of the Temiskaming Railway from New Liskeard to Lake Abitibbi. The discussion took up the whole afternoon and while not objecting to the extension the Opposition took occasion to criticize the Government for the excess of cost over the estimates and the manner of awarding the contracts. During the discussion, a strong sentiment in favor of public ownership and operation developed. Dr. Pyne's piece said the experiment in state ownership was manifested by Ontario, that it would prove successful, and that as far as it had gone it had been satisfactory to the people. He advocated a Government railway from Toronto to North Bay in connect with the Temiskaming Railway, with branches extending into various portions of New Ontario—and in such a case the Province would have an asset worth more than cash or bonds in the bank.

Let Province Operate Road.

Another notable speech was that of Dr. Pyne, who wants the Government to operate the road for ten years as an experiment. He proposes to introduce an amendment when the bill is taken up in committee, and that time, Dr. Pyne said he believed in the civilizing and developing power of railways and looked for the coming up of a the great clay belt by means of this and other railways. He agreed with Mr. Pettypiece in regard to state-owned railways, and pointed out the success of the system in Birmingham, Manchester and Glasgow. The present was an opportune time to build the road and help to open up the clay belt by giving settlers the benefit of cheap rates.

Mr. Murphy, junior member for Ottawa, followed Mr. Pyne's speech. He was followed by Messrs. Hislop, Hendrie, Whitney, Whitney, Ellis, Mr. Ross, Foy, Crawford, Nesbitt and St. John. The motion then passed and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

More Pay For Teachers.

The pay of separate school inspectors and teachers was discussed at the legislature yesterday when Hon. Mr. Harcourt's bill was read a third time, provides for an increase for inspectors, Mr. Meadows, Lindsay, Carscallon of Hamilton, and Matheson, Stormont, opposing the change, which asked consideration for the teachers. The bill then went into committ, taking up the estimates of the Provincial Secretary's department.

Mr. Ernest Lapointe moved a bill respecting the Ottawa River Railway Co.; Mr. St. John, to regulate the overcrowding of street railway cars; Mr. Richardson, respecting the Nepigon Railway Co.

The following bills passed their third reading: Respecting the assessment of James Graham of Belleville, respecting an agreement between the Grand Trunk Pacific and the town of Fort William; respecting the H. G. and B. Railway Co.

Belleville Gets There.

The Private Bills Committee ratified a bylaw of the city of Belleville to borrow $50,000 for the Belleville Ferry Company for $50,000. The bylaw was carried by the ratepayers by 350 to 335.

Halifax Mayor's Predicament.

Halifax, N. S., March 16.—At the opening yesterday of the criminal sittings of the Supreme Court, Judge Hitchie ordered an indictment prepared against the Mayor of the city, A. B. Crosby, on a charge of interfering with the administration of justice. A prisoner under a criminal charge was released from custody at a city police station, and could not be found. The Mayor is thus held responsible for the release.

10,000 Out of Work.

New York, March 16.—Ten thousand men engaged in the building trade country will be out of work to-day because of the failure to agree on the acceptance of a plan of arbitration offered by the employers to be operated for one month. If at night an unsuccessful attempt was made by the Civic Federation to bring the two bodies together.

Give Space to Canada.

London, March 16.—(C.A.P.)—J. G. Colmer, leading Notes on Some Canadian Questions to-day at the Colonial Institute, urged the British papers to devote more space to Canadian affairs. J. M. Courtney said the belief that the future of Canada depended on the United States was as ancient as the buffalo.

For Harmony of Interests.

Bremen, March 16.—The Weser Zeitung says the German Steel Trust is about to begin negotiations with the American and British companies toward a delimitation of their respective spheres of interests in the world's markets, so as to avoid ruinous competition with each other.

Hopes She Will Die.

St. John, N.B., March 16.—The girl, Millie Gee, who was shot on Sunday, will probably die. She suffers intense agony. The prisoner, George Gee, her cousin, says that he is not sorry for the deed. "I hope to God she will die," is the most that can be got out of him.

Dynamite Explosion Kills Two.

Halifax, March 16.—In a dynamite explosion at St. Margaret's Bay, on the construction work of the South-western Railway, two men were killed.

Majority of 114.

London, March 17.—(C.A.P.)—The Irish development grant debate ended in a handsome majority for the Government of 114.

SIXTY-THREE MILLIONS

Enormous Sum Cabinet Asks Parliament to Grant This Year.

An Increase of $8,825,364 Over the Estimates of Last Year and the Supplementaries Yet to Come—Half a Million For National Transcontinental Railway Surveys—Fifty Thousand Appropriated For Canadian Marconi Service.

Ottawa, March 17.—Sixty-three million dollars in round figures is the amount that the Government asks Parliament to grant this year. This represents an increase of $5,825,364 over the estimates of last year.

For the national transcontinental railway surveys and other expenses, half a million is asked.

A new car for the Governor-General will cost $18,000.

Trent Valley Canal gets $22,500.

Dominion public buildings improvements, renewals, etc., $8,000.

Drill hall, additional accommodation for new corps, revote $20,000.

Addition to examining warehouse revote $20,000.

Military buildings, magazine, revote $3,000.

Three thousand is appropriated for a steamship service between Canada and Mexico.

The appropriation for salaries on Toronto postoffice is $220,326, an increase of $14,332.

Debate on the Address.

The debate on the address, remarkable only for the fact that the Government side of the House held religiously aloof from it, ran its course at 5.30 yesterday afternoon. A quartette of speakers, three Conservatives and one Liberal, spoke away the afternoon.

Notes in Three Lines.

In three days' debate the Liberals put up only three speakers. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the two French-Canadians who came unexpectedly into the debate. These are new tactics, the significance of which the next few days may reveal.

Following the close of the debate on the address the Ministers rained blue books on the table of the House. Among these gaudy works of facts and figures were the estimates between the covers of which are stowed away the appropriations amounting to nearly $63,000,000. The Government is therefore ready for the practical business of the session and the estimates will be taken up without delay. It is apparent that the Government desires to rush the session, and there are indications that the House is willing to be rushed.

Dr. Daniels of St. John, Mr. Charles Marcil, Mr. Bennett, Mr. Northrup and Mr. Lancaster were the speakers yesterday.

Millions to Subsidies.

Railway subsidies amounting to $1,463,000 were paid by the Dominion Government last year, according to the public accounts submitted to the House yesterday.

The chief beneficaries were C.P.R. for western branches, $199,000; Atlantic and North Western, $185,500; Algoma Central and Hudson Bay, $203,000; Quebec bridge, $132,000; Midland, $190,186; Canadian Northern, $57,485; Crow's Nest, $60,000.

Steel and Iron Bounties.

Nearly a million and a half was paid on account of bounties on iron and steel, and $130,469 was expended in connection with the South African contingents and the Halifax garrison.

At the close of the fiscal year the balance at the credit of the depositors in the postoffice and Government Savings Banks agounted to $66,771,129, an increase of $2,333,140 over the balance held in 1902. Part of this increase, $1,729,252, represents interest added to the various accounts and the remainder, $603,847, the excess of receipts over withdrawals.

RUSSIA'S MAIN ADVANCE

Land Battle Is Coming As It Has Crossed the Yalu River.

Czar's Army Occupies a 40-Mile Base From Wiju to Changtong—Baltic Fleet Will Not Go By Northwest Passage As It Is Too Risky—Last Bombardment at Port Arthur Rendered Every Part of the Fortress Unsafe.

London, March 17.—There is much interest manifested in the report that the Russian main advance is crossing the Yalu, but this is not yet confirmed, and, according to The Daily Chronicle's Pingyang correspondent, all the Russian troops have left North Corea, 20,000 of them being concentrated at Kuliuncheng, north of the Yalu River, in Manchuria.

The Daily Telegraph's Sebastopol correspondent says it is semi-officially announced that Russia has abandoned as impracticable the idea of sending her Baltic squadron to the Far East by the way of the Behring Straits.

A Port Arthur despatch says that Admiral Witzsof has been appointed chief of Viceroy Alexieff's naval staff and has gone to Mukden.

A correspondent of The Times at Tokio says that the Russians are occupying an area having a fortyfive-mile front, from Yalu to Changtong, and extending south to the Pakchon River.

Too Risky.

Paris, March 17.—The Echo de Paris has a St. Petersburg despatch, which says that the idea of the Russian Baltic squadron going to the Far East by the northeast passage has been given up as too risky adds the despatch. The squadron will start in July and go by way of the Cape of Good Hope.

Looks Bad For Stark.

St. Petersburg, March 17.—Official orders were published yesterday relieving Vice-Admiral Stark from the command of the Port Arthur division of the navy, ostensibly on account of illness. No successor will be appointed.

Land Forces Crosses Yalu.

Yinkow, March 17.—A credible natives arrived here yesterday, bringing a report as late as March 12 from Fonghuangcheng, to the effect that the main body of the concentrated Russian forces had crossed the Yalu, leaving small bodies of troops at Antung and other points to guard the river.

Port Arthur Fortress Unsafe.

The last bombardment of Port Arthur rendered every part of the fortress unsafe. Residents assert that fragments of Japanese shells fell everywhere, and that some railway coaches and buildings were destroyed, though most of the damage on the shore was unimportant.

Tokio in Doubt.

Tokio, March 17.—Tokio is unadvised regarding the naval plans and movements of the Russians, and is in doubt whether the remnant of their fleet is still at Port Arthur or en route to Vladivostock.

Late yesterday afternoon a telegram reached the Navy Department, saying that seven Russian ships have been reported as passing Port Lazareff. The report was not circumstantial.

British Ship Stopped.

Alexandria, Egypt, March 17.—The British steamer Elswick Torer, which arrived here yesterday, reports having been stopped by a Russian warship which was cruising fifteen miles outside of Alexandria.

"KILL EVERYTHING BLACK."

German Sock Revenge For Awful Atrocities in Africa.

Berlin, March 17.—Letters from German Southwest Africa have arrived here giving details of the ghastly treatment of German settlers, 123 of whom were killed outright or tortured to death in the district of Okahandja alone. Women outraged and dismembered, and with pieces of their bodies nailed to the doors of houses, and boys mutilated are frequent spectacles. The expeditionary columns on coming in sight of a farmer's house would see the hands of its former occupants fastened to the roof.

The letters express longings for revenge and a determination, as one writer says, "to kill everything black."

Duke of Cambridge Ill.

London, March 17.—The Duke of Cambridge, cousin of the late Queen Victoria, is in a critical condition. Recent bulletins regarding the duke's health have been of a reassuring nature, but yesterday morning His Royal Highness, who has been ill a long time, was seized with a recurrence of hemorrhage of the stomach and an official bulletin just issued admits that grave anxiety is felt regarding the outcome of the attack.

"HEADS I WIN; TAILS, YOU LOSE."

It has become the opinion of all men, except Bible-bound "Barnacles," that this country must fight the Government's Grand Trunk Pacific scheme, because, if the scheme goes through, the country must lose whatever happens, the scheme being so arranged that the company cannot lose anything and the country cannot gain any benefit. From a public point of view, the G.T.P. bargain is as bad as it could be made, and it is not by any means easy to say which is the worst part of it. But, it may be asked, what could be worse than that section of the "modified" bill, which, as the Halifax Herald points out, enables the company to unload on to the country any part of the road and branches it finds unprofitable and to retain only the parts it finds to its advantage. That, certainly, is the effect of the following clause, though it is so worded as to conceal its full meaning somewhat. We quote:

"11. In case, during the currency of the lease of the Eastern Division, the company shall have constructed a branch line or lines running from a point or points of the said Eastern Division, the Government shall, if at the expiration of said lease it shall determine to undertake the operation of the said Eastern Division, take over such branch line or lines as the company may elect so to retain, at such value as may be agreed upon, or if may, in case of failure so to agree, be determined in the manner provided for in paragraph twenty-four, clause (2) of said contract, which hereby is made applicable to cases under this paragraph. If any such branch line or lines shall have received any grant or grants under the provisions of any act of the Parliament of Canada, the amount of such grant or grants, without interest, shall be deducted from such value and the difference only shall be payable by the Government upon taking over such branch line or lines."

The full meaning and effect of this clause might not be perceived in a casual reading, but if carefully considered it will be found that the following comment of the Winnipeg Telegram is fully borne out and justified:

"One there be any possible defence of this clause? No option at all is left to the Government with respect to those branch lines. It must buy those the company wants to get rid of and it cannot buy those the company wants to keep. We recognize the Liberal press to present any explanations of this arrangement which could make it consistent with fair bargaining principles.

"It must be remembered that the Government is undertaking to build a single line of railway running from Winnipeg north of Lake Nipigon and Lake Abitibi to Quebec. The only two places connected by this line of railway will be Winnipeg and Quebec. In order that traffic may reach Port Arthur or Fort William, Southern Ontario and Montreal must be obtained from those points. It will be necessary to construct branch lines. Now the G.T.P. has been authorized to construct these branches and it may construct many others. If at the expiration of the lease the Government decided to operate the line it had built, it might of course do so, but it could not get to the head of the lakes, or to Montreal and Ottawa except by running over Southern Ontario unless the G.T.P. saw fit to allow it to do so. On the other hand if there were any branches that were unprofitable or were badly managed or for any other reason were useless to the G.T.P. or the Grand Trunk, the Government would be compelled to buy them.

"At the same time the company is to have the right for another fifty years to maintain power and haulage rights over the Government's line. That is to say, the G.T.P. can run trains over the Government's line to connect with its own profitable branches, while the Government would be loaded up with all the unprofitable branches and shut out of all the important ones. Seriously, did anyone ever hear of such a bargain before? "Heads I win; tails, you lose," is nothing to it."

The Telegram proceeds to say that, if there be any possible defence of such a bargain on the part of the Government the public should be informed of it. And it may be set down as a fact that such a defence is possible it would be made. But no such defence is possible, and the Government apologists appear to have come to that conclusion, for little or no attempt is being made to defend this "mad railway deal," as a contemporary calls it. The Government is not relying upon reason or argument, but solely upon the vote-it-throughcrude in Parliament, who appear to think that there is no course for them but to "hang together," and that they can depend on the people to condone any amount of inequity and rascality so long as Government patronage and boodle is victoriously distributed at election times. But surely the electors of this generation cannot treat thus lightly the future interests of this country for a hundred years to come.

Coal, it is said, is getting very short in the city. The supply, we mean, of course; not the weight.

If things don't improve pretty soon cranks people may have to fall back on a brisk season of kerosene, which was so highly recommended last winter.

Clear up, however; we'll probably get all the coal we want next summer.

"Railroad commission is a good thing," said an observant gentleman this morning. "But what Hamilton needs more than anything is a free bay bridge, which would increase our trade fully $100,000 per year."

We were all pleased to see the flags up to-day, of course, but was it necessary for the prices of eggs and potatoes to go up, too?

The estimates, brought down yesterday, contain this item: "Belleville, armory, $10,000." That will do nicely for a start, but it is to be hoped the Government will not stop at that. We were led to believe that the new armory would be a $50,000 building.

On Trent Canal construction the Government proposes to spend $100,000, so we need not look for its completion for a few days yet.

A seedless apple has been grown in Colorado. It has been foretold for some time in fact the fruit men need it coming.

The Balfour Government's majority was yesterday 117, which does not look as though it were on its last legs.

GRAND ORANGE LODGE.

MET YESTERDAY AT KINGSTON WITH 200 DELEGATES IN ATTENDANCE.

Kingston, Ont., March 16.—The Provincial Grand Orange Lodge of Ontario East met in annual convention in the City Hall at 2 o'clock this afternoon with nearly 200 delegates in attendance. This is the forty-fifth annual session of the lodge.

Grand Master's Address.

The Grand Master in his address urged a higher per capita fee; the order was heavily complicated too cheap a scale. If the ground had been properly worked twice the membership would be the result. The rising generation should be shown that the order is necessary to the well-being and stability of the country, and should be brought into active membership before drifting into other orders.

"If the True Blues do not join the Orange order in building a Reservoir to perpetuate the names of Wolfe and Hill, then the Grand Master urged that the Orangemen go ahead themselves. Moral and financial support was urged to Prescott and Russell Orangemen to prevent school property purchased originally by the taxes of Protestants being diverted into Separate school uses.

The Grand Master urged that our Sunday school libraries be well supplied with wholesome and distinctively Protestant books, so that our young people may be so well versed in the Protestant doctrine that they will at all times be able to give a reason for the faith that is in them.

He recommended the Militia Department for trying to have the youths in the schools properly drilled. Assistant effort in this direction would eventually result in nearly every able-bodied male in the land being ready to fight for his country, if need be.

Grand Secretary's Report.

Mr. F. M. Clarke, of Belleville, Grand Secretary, in his report referred to the alleged boycotting of Protestants in Ireland by a new Roman Catholic association. The Irish Attorney-General had condemned the association, as also had Roman Catholic bishops, but it still existed. The constitution of the Irish Society was spoken of as an event Orangemen rejoiced over. Complaint was made that many secretaries failed to send in their reports. A proposal to increase the per capita tax had been submitted to the members, with the result that 84 lodges with 3,475 members, voted for, 31 lodges, with 2,307 members, against, and 304 lodges, with 5,854 members, did not vote at all. During the year there were 91 initiated, 224 joined by certificate, 191 were reinstated, 385 withdrew by certificate, 341 were suspended, 23 were expelled and 114 died, showing a net increase of 223. There are now 24 county, 81 district lodges and 378 primary lodges working under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge, with a membership of 12,720, and carrying lodge property to the value of $180,506.

Treasurer's Report.

Robert Gordon, Toronto, Grand Treasurer, reported the receipts to be $3,499.55; expenditure, $1,333.91; balance, $2,165.64. Mr. Gordon stated that the funds were in a healthy condition owing to the increase in per capita tax from 10 to 15 cents. He thought recommended a further increase to 25 cents and the appointment of an organizer, who could do great good for the order in Eastern Ontario.

At the conclusion of the reading of the reports the Grand Lodge appointed its committees and adjourned till to-morrow that reports might be drafted.

GRAND BLACK CHAPTER.

Kingston, Ont., March 16.—The Provincial Grand Black Chapter of Ontario East consulted to-day. There was no burning question up for discussion. Everything was harmonious. The order shows an increase of twelve per cent. in membership during the past year.

The following officers were elected: Grand Master, E. J. Hughes; Deputy Grand Master, J. Earl Halliwell, Stirling; J.D.G.M., J. R. Orr, Madoc; Grand Chaplain, S. A. Dupras, Belleville; Deputy Grand Chaplains, J.M. Whitelaw, Omemee; J. McKee, McLennan, Norwood; Grand Registrar, John Reilly, Lindsay; Deputy Grand Registrar, J. R. Tye, Athens; Grand Treasurer, T. C. McConnell, Springbrook; Grand Secretary, W. A. Adams, West Huntingdon.

FORMER RESIDENT DIES IN THE WEST.

MR. CALVIN A. GIBERSON A VICTIM OF PNEUMONIA.

In a recent issue of the Western Globe, published at Lacombe, Alberta, appears the death notice of Mr. Calvin A. Giberson, who for many years was a resident of this city, being an employee of the Rathbun Foundry. An attack of pneumonia was the cause of death. Mr. Giberson was born in Prince Edward County in the year 1852. He removed from this section of the country some years ago. Deceased was a member of the C.O.F., under whose auspices he was buried. His wife and daughter survives. Mrs. H. Hudson, of this city, is a sister of Mrs. Giberson.

A Talented Bellevillian.

The Toronto News in speaking of the production of "A Country Girl" in that city, says: "Special mention should be made of the capital local hits introduced by Mr. Mostyn in the topical song, "Peace." His verses on street car crush, the Alaskan boundary award, the shipping trust, and the fiscal policy of Mr. Chamberlain, were smooth and witty that they took the house by storm. They had such a good Canadian flavor, too, that they were specially acceptable." The reason for the Canadian flavor is obvious, for the verses are the work of a former Bellevillian, Mr. Joseph Nevin Dapley, now connected with the press department of the Augustin Daly Co. Since Mr. Dapley's work in this line has to do mostly with U.S. affairs he must find it rather pleasant to get back to his native heath and expatiate upon home topics.

HEAT AND MOTION.

Various Theories About the Connection Between These Agents.

The idea that heat is a kind of motion was entertained by Plato, who makes Socrates say: "For heat and fire which generate and sustain other things are themselves begotten by impact and friction, but this is motion. Are not these the origin of fire?"

Bacon defined heat to be "a motion acting in its strive upon the minute particles of bodies." Newton, Boyle and Hooke considered heat to be motion. Locke described it as "a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the objects which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot; so what is on examination heat in the object is nothing but motion. This appears by the way heat is produced, for we see that the rubbing of a brass nail upon a board will make it very hot."

Many scientific men have held heat to be matter, and in spite of Rumford's vigorous exposition of its fallacy this material theory held its ground until a comparatively recent date, when Sir H. Davy took up the subject and by his experiments proved conclusively that this view is unsound.

In Academy and Literature a good story is told of Mr. Whistler in connection with his first official visit to the art school established in Paris as the Whistler Academy. The great man, advancing into the room where the students were working, took his stand, hat and stick in hand, and addressed them, apparently seriously, in a few words expressing the honor he was doing himself and themselves in showing Paris and the world that he, Whistler, was in his school and that they, the students, were also there. Then followed a tour of the room, Mr. Whistler speaking to each student in turn somewhat as follows: "Ah, and where have you studied before?" "At John's." "Ah, you couldn't have done better!" And to the next one, "Ah, and where have you studied before?" "With M. Dougureau." "Ah, you couldn't have done better!" So Whistler went the rounds, repeating the formula in each case without perceptible alteration in tone. Finally, the question being put to a very young man, the answer almost upset the general gravity, "Ah, and where have you studied before?" "I have never studied before." For just the fraction of a moment Mr. Whistler eyed him curiously and then, with perfect gravity, but with an enthusiastic accent, he said, "Ah, you couldn't have done better!"

Leading Figures at Gaelic Mod.

The Marquis of Tullibardine, who, with the Marquis of Breadalbane, will be one of the leading figures at the forthcoming Gaelic Mod at Greenock this year, is one of the few members of old Highland families who still retain the Gaelic. He does not lay any claim to fluency in the language, although Gaelic was his first language, and as a child he was compelled to speak it in the family circle. But his English schooling and his subsequent soldiering in Egypt and South Africa have knocked much of the native language out of him, though it has not quenched his Celtic spirit. He can get along quite well with a Gaelic gillie, and now that he is at home, and is establishing the Scottish Horse, a body which is to be composed of men accustomed to the hills, he has promised to recapture his old ability in the ancient tongue.

"What's that?" cried a chorus of feminine voices.

"The secret service!".

His Chance.

"That boy never will be worth anything."

"I wouldn't be so sure of that. He may marry well."

Suspicions are weeds of the mind which grow of themselves, and most rapidly when least wanted.

THEY KNOW IT.

Thousands of people throughout the country know that the ordinary remedies for pile—ointments, suppositories and appliances—will not cure.

The best of them only bring passing relief.

ANCIENT ENGLISH INNS.

Round and about London and its ever extending suburbs there may still be seen inns and inverns of great age and interesting associations.

The Angel inn, Highgate Hill, dates back to the time of Richard the Third. Originally it was called the Salutation inn. It is built entirely of wood.

Another famous inn is the Old Red Lion Stag at Edgware. Nobody knows when it was originally built, and it would seem as though each successive proprietor has endeavored to place his mark on its architectural aspect, for many parts of it have evidently at different times been rebuilt. In the stables, it is alleged, Dick Turpin had his horses shoes turned, so as to make his pursuers imagine he had gone in an opposite direction.

Among the very oldest of suburban London inns are the Plough, at Kingsbury Green, and the King James and Tinker inn, at Enfield. The first is said to be 850 years old, and the latter was reputed to have been first built as an inn and under another name 902 years ago.

Its present name is derived from an encounter which King James I. is said to have had with a tinker at the door of the inn. The tinker's conversation so pleased the king that he made the mender of kettles "a knight, with five hundred a year."—London Mail.

THE SURGEON'S PROBE.

See That He Sterilizes It Before He Uses It.

It frequently happens that the doctor has occasion to probe a wound or a sore.

Notice him when he does it. He opens his case of instruments. He takes out a long, slender silver or hard rubber rod which is from six to ten inches long, with a smooth, round end. Some of them are as small as a darning needle. Others are as large as a pencil.

Watch the doctor closely when he takes this probe and attempts to use it. If he does not take the precaution to see to it, stop him. Don't allow him to touch your sore with it. He has been using it on some one else and may poison you if you allow him to use it.

Call his attention to the fact that he boils all instruments when he operates on any one, and he should also boil his probe before he uses it on you either for a sore or wound. Make him do it. Tell him you will furnish him with hot water, and then see that it is and clean it carefully before he uses it.

Otherwise he will use it on you and slip it back in his surgical case and use it on the next person. In this way he scatters infectious dirt.

ORIGIN OF ORATORIOS.

They Were First Introduced in the Church of Rome.

St. Philip de Neri, a Florentine priest, in 1551, first introduced dramatic services in his oratory. In order to draw the young or careless to church he and others who followed him led had hymns, psalms and spiritual songs or cantatas sung either in chorus or by a single favorite voice as special attractions.

These pieces were divided into two parts. Sacred stories or events from Scripture written in verse and by way of dialogue were set to music, and the first part was performed before the sermon, which the people were induced to stay and hear that they might not miss the performance of the second part.

The subjects in early times were the "Good Samaritan" and the "Prodigal Son," but by the excellence of the composition, the band of instruments and the performance brought the music of oratory into great repute.

Afterward any such rendering of sacred musical drama obtained the general appellation of "oratorio." The first oratorio in England was performed in London in Lincoln's Inn theater in Portugal street in 1732.

How Rocks Grow.

Rocks do not grow in the sense that a plant grows. They only increase by accretion, and they may undergo chemical change. The old sea bed, being lifted up, becomes sandstone and limestone. The volcanic ash and lava strewn over the plains become tufa, hard enough for building stone. The pebbly shore of a river becomes conglomerate. The simple mineral does grow, however, when it takes a crystal form. The sparkling prism of quartz increases from an atom to a crystal as large as a forearm by a process of addition and assimilation, wonderfully slow, but beautifully regular, exactly as crystals of ice form on the window pane.

The Fragrant Lemon.

Lemon trees of California are a thing of beauty and a joy forever. The lemon is the emblem of productiveness. At all seasons of the year can be found on the lemon tree the blossom, the tiny formed lemon and lemons in all stages of growth to the full grown fruit. It is a perpetual bearer. The blossom, the leaf, the wood, the fruit and all parts of the tree are delightfully fragrant.—Country Life in America.

A Lover of the Mountains.

"Do you like mountain scenery?"

"I might as well."

"Might as well?' I fear I don't get your meaning."

"I might as well like it, for I can't change it."

TRACKS IN SNOW.

By the Way.

A few days before the recent January thaw I started for a tramp through the snow-covered woods. The thermometer stood at 10 below zero, as the snow was over 20 inches deep on the level, the exertion of getting through it kept me glowing warm, albeit I had gone half a mile, and when occasionally I got out of the woods the air seemed almost springlike.

Whether we enjoy winter or dislike it depends largely on whether we are prepared for it or not. Cold weather has no terrors for us if we know that we are not going to be cold in it, and half the nuisance of snow is gone if we are sure that we can go where we like without getting our feet or clothing wet.

Some Precautions.

In other words, with warm clothing and a pair of rubber boots, or snowshoes if the snow is deep enough, there is nothing to prevent any healthy person from enjoying himself in the worst weather that winter can turn out. For a winter walk in the country an overcoat is a mistake; it trails in the snow and continually gets in the way. What one requires is some form of clothing which will permit perfect freedom of movement.

With such clothing one can afford to dress lightly for, as every cross-country athlete knows, a man can keep himself warm in zero weather with practically no clothing at all if he is allowed to keep moving at his best pace.

A pair of gloves, however, will go a long way toward making one enjoy a walk on a bitterly cold day. Not kid gloves, but a good big pair, which allow for a generous air space around your hands inside, and with gauntlets which come over the cuffs of your overcoat and keep out not only the wind but the snow.

And if you are going along alone in bad weather it is a wise precaution to tell your friends which direction you intend to go, and the length of time you expect to be gone. When the snow is deep and the air intensely cold, a sprained knee or a broken leg may mean death, if attention does not arrive in time.

A Red Squirrel at Home.

I had not gone far into the woods, when, in passing a low-growing wild apple tree, a noiseless rise in the surface of the snow beneath it had been disturbed in an irregular manner. If was furrowed, and here and there there were holes leading into little runways, which extended downward as far as I could see. The holes were much too large to have been made by a meadow mouse, and quite too small for a muskrat, and I doubt if I should have discovered what animal had made them, if the impudent head of a red squirrel had not appeared suddenly at one of the holes.

He had a look of astonishment on his face and a small apple in his mouth. He dropped the latter on the snow in front of him, but retained the former for five seconds or more, until, with a frightened squeal, he darted to the invisible regions below.

The little apple, lying upon the snow, told a pathetic story of the little fellow's hunger, and of his efforts to satisfy it, and I wondered if he had any sense keen enough to tell him where each individual apple lay, or whether he tunnelled blindly, with the hope of finding out one occasionally.

Paths Made by Rabbits.

Further on I came to a stretch of half-open country, covered with bushberry and other bushes. And here I found the paths which the rabbits had made the night before, and all along these paths the twigs of the bushes under which they ran had been cut off clean, as though with a penknife, by the sharp front teeth of the rabbits.

And thus the snow, which had done the animals an injury in one way, by covering up their food up on the ground, served them well in another way, by lifting them to a height at which they could crop the tender twigs near the top of the bushes.

The grouse, too, had made use of the deep snow as a platform, from which to pick the barberries. In spite of their natural snowshoes, the birds had sunk quite deep in many places, and their trail was little less than a gutter.

And as I passed one of the bushes, I saw an old bird's nest which had been roofed by a white-footed mouse, and as I touched a twig, the tenant put his head out at a door and see what the matter was. But I stood very still, and presently he went in again, perhaps to curl up and go to sleep again until the fall of night should make it comparatively safe for him to go out in search of food and to leave his lacelike trail on the surface of the moonlit snow.

The Nursery Convenience.

But the most delightful incident of my walk occurred when I was nearing home. A flock of hungry chickadees flew into a maple tree above me, perhaps knowing that I had something to do with the many square meals they have enjoyed this winter. One of them hopped to a branch close above my head, and I felt in my pocket for some broken nuts.

Taking off my glove, I extended the hand containing the offering, and I had his earnest attention in a moment. Down he came close to me crying "Dee-dee-dee," and peering into my face with his beady black eyes, as much as to say, "Is it all right? Come now, is it?" But without waiting for a reply, he flew upon my finger, calmly picked up a piece of nut, and flew back into the maple tree. With my finger delightfully tingling, from the delicate grasp, I went home feeling as though I had shaken hands with a fairy.—Ernest Harold Baynes, in Toronto Sunday World.

Finding by Intuition.

A man asked the clerk of a biz hotel in Kansas avenue if a person whom he named was staying in the house. The clerk said he was, but he was not in at the moment. "I had never seen the person for whom I had inquired," said the man who tells this story. "I had never had a description of him. I had formed no idea as to what manner of man he as we often do in such cases. I took a seat in the corridor, intending to ask the clerk again later on. I read a newspaper for a half hour and stirred to the clerk's desk to repeat my inquiry when I bumped into an individual by accident. We both apologized. In a second I said to him, 'Are you not Mr.——?' I don't know what impelled me to make the inquiry, but as quickly as I had asked him as quickly did he reply that he was Mr.——, the very person whom I wished to see. I suppose Canon Taylor might explain it but banged if I can."

Tobacco Smoke and the Blood.

Two or three mouthfuls of tobacco smoke or three cigarettes were shaken up with a few drops of blood diluted with water in a bottle. Almost immediately the blood assumed the pink color characteristic of blood containing monoxide gas, and further observations with the spectroscope confirmed the presence in the blood of carbon monoxide. Similarly a few mouthfuls of smoke from a pipe and a cigar were tried, and the results were even more marked. In this experiment, as well as the other experiments in particular of the evil effects of cigarette smoking, for it is chiefly cigarette smoke that is inhaled, an indulgence by which the poisonous carbon monoxide is introduced directly into the blood. This effect of tobacco smoke upon the blood appears to us to be of considerable significance.—London Lancet.

Christmas Tree Legend.

There is a legend in Germany that when Eve plucked the fatal apple immediately the leaves of the tree shrivelled into needle points and its bright green turned dark. It changed its nature and became an evergreen, in all seasons preaching the story of man's fall. Only on Christmas does it bloom brightly with lights and become beautiful with love gifts—the curse is turned into a blessing at the coming of the Christ Child, and we have our Christmas tree.

Grows in the Clouds.

So far as is known, the highest elevation at which flowers are found growing is 17,000 feet above sea level. The homely little plant which has the distinction of being the loftiest grower in the world is found on the upper slopes of the Himalayan mountains, near the line of perpetual snow. The season during which vegetation may appear above the surface in this region is less than four months in length.

BRITISH EMPIRE LEAGUE.

Daily Intelligencer.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Not Contents but Common Sentiment Binds the Empire Together.

Ottawa, March 17.—The annual meeting of the British Empire League in Canada, held here yesterday morning was rendered important by a notable speech by Sir William Mulock. The Postmaster-General declared that public opinion here would heartily welcome closer relations between Great Britain and Canada, but he deprecated any interference by Canadians in the fiscal struggle now being waged in Great Britain. He also differed from those people who thought to bind Canada by contract to come to the rescue of the Empire in time of need. The best guarantee that Canada would be ready was assistance rested in the hearts and affections of the people, and from Canada's past loyalty her future policy might be gauged. Lieut.-Col. George T. Denison, presided, and the attendance included Messrs. J. W. Clark and John T. Small, Toronto; Sir William Mulock, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Sir Sandford Fleming, Mr. Tarte, M.P., and several Senators and members. A number of appropriate resolutions were passed, and the officers of last year were all re-elected.

EX-LIEUT. GOV. McINNES DEAD.

Succumbed to Heart Trouble at Vancouver, B.C., Tuesday Night.

Vancouver, B. C., March 17.—Ex-Lieut.-Governor McInnes died about 10 o'clock Tuesday night. For some time he has been suffering with heart trouble, and on Monday had a bad attack. He leaves a widow, two sons, T. S. E. McInnes, barrister, this city, and W. W. B. McInnes, M.P., of Victoria, and one daughter, Mrs. James Wilson, wife of the Superintendent of the C.P.R. Telegraphs on the Pacific division.

Hon. Dr. Thos. Herbert McInnes was the fourth son of the late John McInnes, a native of Inverness, Scotland, and was born at Lake Ainslie, N. S., in November, 1810.

Liberal in Gaspereau.

Guysboro, N. S., March 17.—The by-election in Guysboro County yesterday resulted in a victory for Dr. H. Sinclair, ex-M.P.P., the Liberal candidate, who defeated S. R. Gilfin, Conservative, by a majority of 396 votes. The total vote polled was very large, 1,311, and is an increase of 137 over the total votes at the last general election. Sinclair polled 2,025 votes and Giffin 1,629. At the last general election the provincial Premier Fraser had a majority of 339, the vote standing: Fraser, Liberal, 1,928; Dempsey, Conservative, 1,589. In previous contests, however Mr. Fraser's majority had not exceeded the hundred mark, being 78 in 1896 and 86 in 1891.

Coming to Ontario.

Halifax, N. S., March 17.—The Allan steamer Sardinian, from Glasgow and Liverpool, yesterday landed 200 passengers, all British, and not only three for United States points. A large number of the passengers are for Toronto, Chatham, Brockville, St. George, Sault Ste. Marie and other parts of Ontario.

To Observe the Sabbath.

Ottawa, March 17.—Fifty members of the Commons, presided over by Mr. Gilmour, M. P. for Muskoka, board Rev. Messrs. Moore and Shearer yesterday against the necessity for Sabbath observance laws. Another meeting will be held on Friday.

Owen Sound at Last.

Owen Sound, March 17.—The C. P. R. has at last overcome the long-resisting Owen Sound branch. At 9 o'clock last night the very weary army of workers, after over two weeks of continuous labor, entered in triumph. It has cost the railroad over two weeks, and a round sum of money to accomplish the job. The connection with Orangeville is now established, and is not likely to be disturbed again, since spring is almost here.

Edward Nealon Finished.

New York, March 17.—Incensed because the girl he loved had entered the Ursuline Convent, and had not replied to the letters that he sent to her, urging that she reconsider her resolve to devote her life to religious work, Edward N. Nealon of Toronto, who recently came here, shot himself within a block of the convent in which she sought retreat. Nealon died instantly.

Mr. W. F. May, Inspector of Fumm Libraries, is a great traveler and has been observer. Recently he has been taking notes of the cost of living in the several places he has visited in the province, and has concluded that Shelburne, a village less than 1,000 miles north of Toronto, is the cheapest place in which to live in the province. Good chickens sell at 15 cents each, the best of butter at 15 cents per pound, new laid eggs at 15 cents per dozen, potatoes 35 cents a bag, pork five cents per pound, and other things in keeping. When turkeys were selling at 18 cents per pound in Toronto last winter they could be purchased in Shelburne at 8 cents.—Toronto Telegram.

THEY DROVE PIMPLES AWAY.
A face covered with pimples is unsightly. Cuticle ointments and Sarsaparillas which should long since have been corrected. Torpid liver and kidneys are not performing their functions in the healthy way that should, and these pimples are to let you know that the blood protests. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will drive them all away, and will leave the skin clear and clean, the blood pure, and there will be neither witness to their excellence.
If you have a good business, it is always better to stay where you are. Sleeplessness, Nervousness, Unsteadiness and the whole body give evidence of weakness, when the mind is filled with gloom and dismal foreboding, the result of derangement of the digestive organs. Sleeplessness seems to add to the distress. If only the wished-for sleep came, there would be no cobition for a while and then, perhaps, only a dose of Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep, but will set to beneficially that the subject will wake refreshed and restored to happiness.
Whose pale gets hopping and he never goes on or cotch.
A WONDERFUL CURE.—Mr. David Smith, Con Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I was very much run down, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with indigestion and also had general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy and was not rewarded to cure the sore but all to no purpose. At last I decided to try using Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle and when I had used it about half, felt that it showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was gone the sore about disappeared and my general health was greatly improved. I got rid of my old way of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. I am now on the third bottle of the Vegetable Discovery, the continuance of which I believe will make my general health is excellent. I am 63 years old, but determined to live and continue it for some time after they think they ought to. It is by far the best health restorer I know."
The biggest brave does not always take the biggest bite.
THE PUBLIC should bear in mind that Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is not nothing in common with the impure, unscientific, and often dangerous medicinal oils. It is eminently pure and safely administered for all forms of lameness, stiffness of the joints and muscles, and sores or hurts, besides being an excellent bottle for rheumatism, coughs ash, bronchial complaints.
Much talk, many lies.
It's pretty thoughtful when a man can't even get credit for his good intentions.
These two desirable qualifications, pleasant to the taste and at the same time effective, are to be found in Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator, Mother Graves.
It takes money to voice the opinion of a lawyer.
To get relief from indigestion, biliousness, constipation or tapeworm without disturbing the stomach or purging the bowels, take a few doses of Carter's Little Liver Pills, and you'll dose you.
The average watch represents but 12 hours of human labor.
The man who says he has not enough ills worth living. Take one of Carter's Little Liver Pills and you will find it will relieve dyspepsia, aid digestion, give tone and vigor to the system. Never be without a thing like this because you can't do much.
That Lingering Cough, Hacking and Bad headache is very disagreeable. Take two of Dr. Hamilton's Pills at night before retiring, and you will find relief, and never know the reason why.
No prayer ever failed to be heard because it was too short.
The loss of a teaspoonful contracts the perspiration as sudden transitions from heat to cold. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, used, quickens the circulation and increases the perspiration, but then these are conditions to checked the consequences must be bad. The most common disorders of half-checked perspiration, or what commonly goes by the name of catching cold, Coughs, colds, sore throat, &c., if attended to by the use of this medicine will but if allowed to run their own course generally prove the fore-runner of more dangerous diseases. Nine-tenths of the consumptives date their first attack from a cold, or some disease that are caused by wet feet. Nothing else is offered more numerous than are generally supposed. Lung Balm, a most effectual cure medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs is Allen's Antiseptic Pneumptive Syrup. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, which frees the lungs from vexed phlegm, thus changing the secretions from a dry nature to a healthy one.
On occasion knowing what one means is the height of politeness.
Have you tried Holloway's Corn Cure? It has no equal for removing those troublesome excrescences. So many have testified who have tried it.
A long portage makes a heavy canoe.

CHERRY'S BAD HEART

Put him "down and out" so far as working was concerned, but Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart made a man of him again.

Heart weakness and fainting spells were so bad that Wm. Cherry, of Bay View, Ont., had to quit work. His sufferings were very great. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured him. Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart; it must be a wonderful remedy. It is. It did all this and took five bottles. To-day he takes his place with the best men at his trade, does a full day's work as any of them, thanks to this great remedy.

The Filigree Ball

BY ANNA KATHERINE GREEN

AUTHOR OF

you speak again of the jealousy aroused in you by your wife's impetuosities. Was this increased, or diminished by the tone of the few lines she left behind her?"

The response was long in coming. It was hard for this man to lie. The struggle he made at it was pitiful. As I noted what it cost him, I began to see the new and curious thoughts concerning him and the whole matter under discussion.

He had now overcome the remorse roused in me by those few lines, he finally rejoined, "as to a consideration for me—"

"Yes?"

The coroner's exclamation showed all the surprise he felt. Mr. Jeffrey faltered under it; then grew pale as if only through our amazed looks he had come to realize the inherent inconsistency to which he had laid himself open.

However, he endeavored to explain, "that Mrs. Jeffrey showed an impressionable disposition, and by taking all the blame of our misunderstanding upon herself. It was generous of her and will do much toward making my memory of her a happy one."

He was forgetting himself again, and his long, many and attempted explanations were full of contradictory ideas. The coroner's first question was:

"I should think so! She paid a heavy penalty for the confessed folly of love. You believe that her mind was unsettled?"

"Yes."

"You really think that?"

"Yes."

"Is anything that passed between you?"

"Yes."

"May I ask you to tell us what passed between you on this point?"

"Yes."

He had uttered the monosyllable so often it seemed to come unconsciously to trouble him. But he recognized almost as soon as we did that it was not a satisfactory reply to the last question, and, making a gesture of apology, he added, with the same unconscious air which he had characterized these replies:

"I beg pardon. Her strange guest's unaccountable death more than once, and each time with a shock, it was with an unnatural excitement and in an unbalanced way. This was so much so that on all that the subject presently was tabooed amongst us. We had come to the mutual agreement as all allusion to it, she continued to talk about the house itself and of the previous deaths which had occurred there till we were forced to forbear. It was only after she was nearly herself after crossing the threshold of the deadly house to be married. The shadow which had fallen upon her was not at that instant upon her life. May God have mercy—"

He presented the aspect of one who is quite done with life, even its sorrow.

But men in the position of Coroner Dodge and myself have no compassion. Everything the bereaved man said deepened our conviction that he was acting a part. To make sure that this was really so, the coroner, with just the slightest shade of sarcasm, quietly observed:

"Your late partner's wife's mind—the wife you were so deeply angered on the morning of her death, and on an hour which you should have spent with her, went through its ancient rooms in the hope—of what?"

"Of finding what you have not. The words which came from his lips were not unexpected.

"I was restless—mad—I found this out after leaving. I had no real purpose in mind."

Not when you looked at the 'old picture?'"

"The old picture in the south-west chamber. Come, look at that, you didn't you? Got up on a chair on purpose to do so?"

Mr. Jeffrey rose. But he made a direct reply.

"I did not give a look at that old picture; got up, as you say, on a chair to do so, and found that the freak of an idle man, wandering, he hardly knows why, from room to room. An old and neglected house!"

His tormentor did not answer, simply looked over at his own line of inquiry. But Mr. Jeffrey did not fail to perceive with the calmness he had shown prior to the last attack, that no word came from the unwelcome guest, he paused in his rapid pacing and, casting aside with a most impulsive gesture his hitherto imperfectly held restraint, he cried out:

"Why do you ask me these questions? Do you entertain a suspicion? Is it not plain enough that my wife took her own life under a misapprehension of her state of mind toward her, that you should feel it necessary to take up these personal matters, which, however interesting to the world at large, are of a painful nature to me?"

"Mr. Jeffrey," retorted the other, with a sudden grave assumption of dignity not without its effect in a case of such serious import, "we do nothing without purpose. We ask one question and one only in this interest because the charge of suicide which has hitherto been made against your wife is not entirely sustained by the facts. It is least, when we alone when she took her life. Some one was in the house with her."

It was startling to observe the effect of this declaration upon him.

"Impossible!" he cried out in a protest as forcible as it was agonized. "Yes, impossible!" he said more slowly. She could have had no one there; she would not. There is not a man living before whom she would have fled—that deadly shot; unless it was myself—unless it was my own wretched, miserable self."

The remembered whisper in which those final words were uttered carried with it such a sense of horror and strange and unaccountable reason had been gradually turning toward that conclusion, but not to easily admit of such a thought, even in the solitude of my own chamber.

Coroner Dodge endeavored to explain, "that Mrs. Jeffrey showed an impressionable disposition, and by taking all the blame of our misunderstanding upon herself. It was generous of her and will do much toward making my memory of her a happy one."

He was forgetting himself again, and his long, many and attempted explanations were full of contradictory ideas. The coroner's first question was:

Save Your Children's Eyes

Astigmatism is a very common, but a very little understood ailment of the eyes. It is the cause of most eye trouble. It does not mean that the eyes are weak or have any disease. It means that the two eyes do not focus on the same point; therefore, the muscles of the one eye which focuses incorrectly are constantly straining to pull that eye around into focus with the other eye. That straining eventually causes headaches and nervous troubles. If neglected, it will cause serious eye-weakness. All school children should have their eyes tested so as to find the defect in yesterday. Many adults also need examination for it. We make no charge for such an examination, and have every necessary scientific apparatus for the examination perfect and thorough. Come in and talk it over with us anyway.

VICTIMS OF A RECOIL

By Louise J. Strong

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure.

"Wh-e-ew! This is the hottest day that ever broiled!" Mr. J. Sanborn, elderly, somewhat portly and very irascible, glared about, defying contradiction.

Mr. Sanborn, with an eye out for offense, observed the bristling and reiterated dogmatically, "The very hottest day!"

"The very hottest day!" Mr. Sanborn bawled stubbornly.

"Not even the hottest this season! On the 10th the thermometer registered 16 degrees higher," his opponent explained with aggravating exactness.

"Then the thermometer lied! All thermometers do!"

"My thermometer is exact! It's the best made."

"I don't care if it's the only one made. It lies if it says there's ever been a hotter day than today!" Mr. Sanborn snapped his face in exaggerated distress.

People were smiling at the absurd contention, and a girl across the aisle giggled. Both disputants looked at her, and with a gesture of authority the old gentleman ordered:

"Here, miss, you look cool and reasonable. Tell this lump of obstinacy that today is frigid beside the 10th."

"Oh, don't ask me to be umpire. I don't know anything about thermometers. I always go by my feelings," she cried.

"The only sensible way," Mr. Sanborn affirmed.

"The way of nimnies and numskullsl" stormed the old gentlemen.

"Your station, sir," the conductor interrupted. The old gentleman bounded off, trailing his statements and assertions to the platform.

The train started. Mr. Sanborn stuck his head out the window and shouted, "The very hottest day!"

Then he settled back and laughed. The girl laughed, too, and slipped across into the old gentleman's place.

"I wound him up," Mr. Sanborn explained with satisfaction.

"I expect he thinks it is pretty hot by now," she smiled, "but, really, you know, we have had hotter weather."

"Oh, yes," he assented unexpectedly. "I suppose I'm doing my own roasting."

"Burning?" she intimated.

"Like a boiling kettle. Think I'd explode but for easing off on the old temperament," he chuckled in memory of the exploit.

"You should take things easy in hot weather. It's the only way to keep cool," she remarked sagely.

"Take things easy! Look here, when you've had a blow that's knocked all your life plans helter skelter you don't feel either easy or cool."

"No; that's true. One might make new plans," she suggested.

"New plans!" he scoffed. "I don't know why I'm the one to make concessions. He owes all he is to me."

"He?" she interrogatory, and he continued: "You see, it's my nephew. I've raised him and been a father to him—done my duty by him too; given him the best advantages money'll buy. And all I've asked of him is that he'll go ahead and be a credit to us."

He paused reminiscently.

"And hasn't he?" she asked. A glow lit his face.

"He has! He's been on top all the time, takes honors everywhere, and he stands to pull off the biggest of all now."

"I should say that was satisfactory," she commented.

"Satisfactory! I'm chock full of pride! But I'm justified in being proud. He graduates from Cornell university—in little colors, mind you—with the honors of his class. Why, with my money behind him he might be anything he chose anywhere. And what does he do but deliberately kick over his own prospects. Here I've been planning all sorts of things for him when he gets through travel, where and as long as he pleases; marriage with the best he's ever laid eyes for it, and the young jackanapes has gone and engaged himself to a milkmaid."

"A milkmaid," she repeated faintly.

"I disinherit a daughter, he said, but they're all milkmaids. I suppose her dad raked up a little money and sent her to the university to take on manners polish and take in some young idiot like Maurice. Let's the star, and she couldn't do better, though she might find some with more money."

"Have you been long married?"

"No, nor want to either. I know how she looks; overgrown and coarse, with big red cheeks that he, the simpleton, calls 'rose of nature,'" he quoted contemptuously. "He can go to the farm with her and make a field hand for the old man, and I'll try to crawl out from the ruins. Jings, I wish I'd trained him in the business back there in Chicago!" He struck the seat excitedly and went on: "He kept it from me till his last letter. I've been boiling ever since—110 in the shade. I came pretty near not going to the graduating fandance, and I've looked to it for years."

"Then you are to be there tonight," she said.

"That's what I'm on the road for. He spoke of my coming a day or so earlier, but I don't want to see him till afterward. It might not be good for his nerves, and I naturally want him to do his best before the public."

"Naturally," she assented, adding: "I'm going there too. I have friends in the class."

"Why, that's all right," he exclaimed. "I'll even strangers; and we'll probably each be alone. Why not sit together?"

"Thank you, we will. It is kind of you to suggest it," she replied, hiding an amused smile.

By exchange of courtesy they introduced themselves and had become very good friends by the time they reached their destination.

"Shall I call for you?" he asked at parting.

"Why, no, thank you. We will meet in the hall," she returned, with a flash of repressed merriment.

"I say good young lady, but not quite so perfect as you suppose," he muttered, watching the slender figure flit away.

When in unaccustomed and uncomfortable evening dress he was conducted to his seat he scarcely recognized her in the resplendent creature the center of an intense effective throng, but when he did he breathed an "ah, ha!" of satisfaction, adding, with a chuckle: "I see, I see! But I think the little girl will boomerang!"

She detached herself presently and made her way to him, murmuring an apology for omitting to mention that she had attended the university the previous year.

The eager question she admitted that she had met Maurice. To his equally eager question concerning the milkmaid she hesitated uncertainly.

Which was not strange, seeing that Mr. Sanborn had no name for her, the young blackbird having alluded to her merely as "a farmer's daughter, the girl of my choice."

"I am sure that short, thick, homely girl is the one—the third from the end," Mr. Sanborn groaned.

"Oh, perhaps not," she comforted, subduing a smile.

"She's the one," he assented as positively and aggressively as he had proclaimed the state of the weather. The opening exercises prevented further discourse.

In spite of his heated resentment Mr. Sanborn swelled with pride at the overwhelming success of his nephew and joined in the applause that called him out again and again.

"He's pulled them off, as I told you he would," he boasted to the girl, who, with flushed cheeks and wet eyes, had burst her gloves in expressing her approbation. "It would be glorious if not for that beefy creature he's talking to," he added, shaking himself nervously.

Maurice got away from the congratulations at last and reached them, saying with outstretched hand, "Well, uncle, I hope you are satisfied with me."

"Um—yes, pretty well!" his uncle grunted, his eye fixed significantly upon the thick, homely girl across the hall.

Seeing which, Maurice said, with a sly glance at the girl beside him:

"May I introduce you to my farmer's daughter, uncle? She's—"

Mr. Sanborn broke in, exclaiming: "Why, I know her man and am talking with; done business with him! I'll just introduce myself and have it out with her too!" he growled over his shoulder, slipping like an eel through the crowd.

"Good heavens!" Maurice cried aghast. "If he should say anything impertinent to Miss Millicent!"

"Who is Millicent? And she the president's niece! He'll say anything! Stop him—stop him—he can't!" a young man queried laughingly.

They looked through the crowd in an agony of apprehension. There was no pleasantry in the situation for them.

Mr. Sanborn had arrived, shaken hands with the gentleman and was speaking to the young lady, who listened with evident surprise.

"Look at her! There'll be an explosion soon! Oh, why did we undertake the silly trick?" Maurice's companion moaned in his ear.

His uncle bounced urgently, preventing Maurice's reply.

"I suppose you know my nephew and his milkmaid?" they heard Sanborn's daughter," Mr. Sanborn said, to the gentleman in the reluctant couple approached.

Then he burst into a roar of laughter at the blank faces of the wilted young conspirators.

Causeway of Beading Pillars.

Nature has hewn many upright pillars from the rock at various prehistoric periods, but as far as known she has completed but one group of beading pillars. The causeway at Staffa, in Scotland, is after this original design. The stone shafts rise perpendicularly to a height of fifty or sixty feet, when they curve inward in a long, sweeping line at once graceful and massive. In some places a perfect Roman arch has been formed in this way. The formations are so symmetrical as to suggest the hand of the architect.

Antiquity of Flax.

Pins of various sorts have been in existence ever since our first parents clothed themselves in palm leaves which grew wild in the garden of Eden. As a matter of fact, pins claim a very high antiquity the earliest form being a natural thorn, which is still used to some extent for fastening the dress by the peasant women of upper Egypt. In prehistoric times pins were also made of the small bones of fish and animals.

"The Birth of St. Patrick."

(Samuel Lover.)

On the eighth of March it was some people say,
That St. Patrick at midnight, he first saw the day;
While others declare 'twas the ninth he was born,
And 'twas all a mistake between midnight and morn;
For mistakes will occur in a hurry and shock,
And some blamed the baby — and some blamed the clock.
'Till with all their cross-questions, 'twas one could agree,
If the child was too fast—or the clock was too slow.

Now the first fraction fight in auld Ireland, they say,
Was all on account of St. Patrick's birthday.
Some fought for the eighth—for the ninth more would die,
And who wouldn't wish to share either—sure they blackened his eye.
At last both the factions so positive grew,
That each kept a birthday, so Pat he had two;
Till father Mulcahy, who showed them their sins,
Said "No one could have two birthdays but twins."

Says he, "Boys don't be fighting for eight or for nine,
Don't be always dividing—but sometimes combine;
Combine eight with nine and seventeen to the two,
So let that be his birthday"—Amen! said the crew.
"If he wasn't a twins sure our history will show,
That at least he's worth any two saints that we know!"
Then they all got roaring drunk—which completed their bliss,
And we keep up the practice from that day to this!

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

A GREAT PLAY COMING.

Julia Arthur's magnificent production of Bergerat's play, translated and adapted by Charles Henry Meltzer and Charles Frederic Nerdlinger, "More Than Queen," will be presented at the Grand Opera House on Wednesday, March 23rd. All the scenery and "stage effects" of the original production will be used and many of the people who participated in the principal cities will be in the piece throughout the principal cities they have been visiting in the east. Notable among these is Mr. Van Hunnigan, who "created" in the original production the part of Napoleon. Many actors have aspired to win fame as the "Little Corporal" but none have been so successful as Mr. Humphrey. Miss Anne Sutherland will play the part of Josephine, originally acted by Miss Julia Arthur, who left the stage on her marriage with Mr. B. P. Cheney. Miss Sutherland is well known as a prominent star and has won fame as a leading lady both in Charles and Daniel Frohman's organizations.

Some dealers have been telling people that Lenten Papers are out, this is the most absurd kind of a statement and must only come from ignorance or want of stock—About as much Lenten used now as ever and when we tell you we have 48 shades to select from, you may understand

Successful decoration must be the outcome of study—of thought rather than of mere chance.

In the chance room there will surely be something wrong.

Possibly the color. Perchance Drawing — Likely both.

Whether Chamber, Drawing Room, Living Room, Library or Den, the room must be treated with thought of surroundings, of furniture of complexion, of lighting, of size.

The environment of a room with North or East exposure must not be blue, while either West or Southern exposure may use blue to advantage.

How about Crimsons, Greens and Brown—where may these colors be used—just ask your decorator, if he is worthy the name he can tell you.

We solicit your test of our ability on this or other decorative subjects.

TONSILITIS IS GOING AROUND

And everybody is wondering what to do. Here is a simple cure: Use a gargle of Nerviline and water as recommended in the directions, and rub your throat and chest vigorously with Nerviline. This has been tested and proved successful a thousand times. Nerviline is a specific for tonsilitis, and, in fact, we know of nothing that is so good for breaking up colds, curing tight chest and all muscular pains. Try a bottle of Nerviline; price 25c.

SPECIAL MEETING OF BOARD OF TRADE.

Matter to be Further Discussed at Public Meeting to be Held Shortly.

A meeting of the Board of Trade was held in the city building last evening, but the attendance was not large, owing, as one member remarked to the fact that the meeting was not advertised. Those present were Mayor Chown, ex-Mayors J. W. Johnson and R. J. Graham, Messrs. C. M. Bell, C. J. Boswell, S. G. Metallack, W. P. Ellis, R. Bridges, H. H. Ponton, T. Thomas, C. Clapp, Col. Ponton, Ald. Gordon, Ald. Ketcheson and Rev. A. H. Dymond. Messrs. A. E. Wood and A. B. Turner, of Boston, who are interested in the proposed construction of the Belleville Electric Railway, were present, and the former gave an address.

Mr. C. M. Bell, Vice-President, was chairman, and in opening the meeting he expressed regret at the unfortunate absence which had befallen the President and the Secretary of the board.

Mr. H. P. Thomas acted as Secretary, and read a number of communications, one being from the Peterboro Board of Trade, in reference to the sitting of the Board of Commission of Transportation which will be held at Peterboro on the 31st inst.

An Objection Filed.

Mr. J. W. Johnson said he did not like a clause of the wording of the circular, which set forth the value of the Trent Valley Canal scheme should be advocated as a powerful offset to the Kingston route, via Welland Canal. The Welland Canal route was a part of the history of Canada, and especially Ontario. He would advocate the Trent Valley Canal scheme as an auxiliary to the present waterways, but not as a scheme to do away with the Welland or any other canal. The Welland Canal was the pride of Canada, and millions of dollars had been expended in improving it and enabling larger vessels to pass through it.

Col. Ponton said the construction of the Trent Valley Canal would be an advantage in the way of saving miles and it would also be an advantage in bringing down grain from the great northwest. It would be an inland canal and not a river.

After some further informal discussion Messrs. Bridges and H. H. Johnson were appointed as delegates from the Board to the sittings of the Commission on the 31st.

School of Forestry.

The following resolution was moved by Mayor Chown and seconded by ex-Mayor Graham:

"Resolved, that in the opinion of this Board of Trade of the City of Belleville, the Legislature of Ontario should establish a public grant in as large a measure as the finances of the province will justify, the development and complete equipment of the plant, physics, and especially of laboratory work and equipment and practical staff in connection with the School of Forestry in the establishment of a School of Forestry and the appointment of competent and practical staff in connection therewith at the University of Ontario, the services of the professors to be utilized in connection with the school of forestry, and the laboratory work in connection with the Provincial Dairy School, and that the consideration of these portions of the province best adapted for the work be referred, urging reforestry and pointing out to the various districts the benefits and advantages to be derived therefrom, and the best methods of effecting the same."

"This Board of Trade would respectfully point out that the commercial progress of Germany and other European countries in modern times, has been largely due to scientific development and research.

And this Board would further point out the large and well-watered areas in the north part of the County of Hastings, which are well adapted for the growth of timber, in addition to the large deposits of metals and minerals of all kinds which are being developed, and to the ease with which proper settlement effected, founded on laboratory and experimental work, will largely result."

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Ontario Electric Railway.

Mr. A. B. Turner was called upon and gave an address of considerable length in reference to the proposed Ontario Electric Railway. He said his opening remarks the speaker was a member under which the Ontario Electric Railway Act was granted by the Ontario Parliament in the year 1902, which gives the company the right to build and operate its line from the city of Toronto over the Government military road in an easterly direction to the boundary line of the province of Quebec, and another line from the city of Brockville to the city of Ottawa. The company also has the right to extend its branch lines for a distance of thirty miles. It is intended to eventually complete the entire line, but the construction of the line between Toronto and Kingston will first be completed, as electric road was a matter of travel, and immediately upon its completion an immense amount of local travel, which is not now in existence, would be created by the building of this road, in addition to being a convenient and cheap means of travelling, namely two cents per mile, the hauling of freight would be an important factor and the company proposed to handle freight for one half the present schedule charge. This means much for the merchants and manufacturers. It would mean for Belleville citizens alone, thousands of dollars a year. The freight trains would be run at night and freight would be handled with all possible despatch. The express service would also be found profitable. Cream and time of travel were gone into by the speaker minutely. The proposed schedule was such that cars would run every half-hour and the time consumed for running from Belleville to Toronto would be four and one half hours. The cars in the winter would be nicely upholstered, well heated, well lighted and would be provided with a baggage compartment, smoking compartment together with the main passenger compartment. The building of this road, he contended, would induce manufacturers to locate in the city. In closing the address Mr. Turner unfolded the final part of their mission in appearing before the Board of Trade, and that the proposed company desired Belleville to do in the matter. The city is asked to appropriate $50,000 and purchase first mortgage bonds of the road at 95 per cent. of their par value, and the citizens, as individuals, are asked to subscribe to the stock of from one to five shares. He stated that the proposition would not increase the tax rate one lota, as the municipality can borrow money at 4 per cent. per annum and it would actually receive in return a net income of one and one-quarter per cent. The bonds are due and payable at the end of 20 years, and the trustee under the mortgage will be some reputable bank or trust company in Montreal or Toronto. There was no reason why this road, running as it will through one of the most populous and fertile sections of Canada, should not earn the average receipts of similarly situated electric roads. They believed it would, and do more than that, which would make it a profitable investment for all concerned.

Following the address a large number of questions were asked by some of the members present, and these were satisfactorily answered by Mr. Turner.

C.P.R. Connection Advocated.

Mr. Johnson said that Belleville should be connected with the main C.P.R. at Tweed, and he thought that an electric road to that place would be profitable.

Mr. Turner—No doubt, it would and also might be built after a while as an auxiliary branch.

Some Pertinent Questions.

Mr. Johnson—Is yours a Provincial or Dominion charter?

Mr. Turner—A Provincial charter.

Mr. Johnson—Is Kingston or Toronto to reserve an active interest in the concern?

Mr. Turner said those places have not yet been solicited, but in reference to the matter, he spoke of the right of way. He said that the company proposed purchasing the right of way, as it was to use the highways, as the cars would at certain places run at a speed of 40 miles an hour.

Mr. Graham—Suppose the city buys the $50,000 stock, how would we know that you would not sound the water for more than it cost?

Mr. Turner said that would not be done. It would be bonded at $25,000 per mile, and would cost more than that to construct and equip.

Col. Ponton—Will you have power as well?

Mr. Turner said they had already enough power in sight to run the road and would probably have power to sell but would not promise to do so. In answer to a question he said that the company wanted to get the municipalities to endorse the bonds, and he thought that this is being done then they would be more readily sold.

Mr. C. J. Boswell asked if the Belleville Electric Railway and other similar roads were running in the United States was given free.

Mr. Turner said he understood that there were rails down in one of our streets and that when the company could make some arrangement with the city to use an auxiliary or extend a belt line. If this is done only five cent fares will be charged in the city.

After some further informal discussion it was decided to call a public meeting and have the matter thoroughly discussed. The date of this will be announced later.

Before adjourning the following resolution, moved by Col. Ponton, seconded by Mr. Graham, was adopted:

That this Board of Trade, having hear the instructive address of Mr. A. B. Turner, of Boston, upon electric transportation, thank him therefor and express the opinion that additional facilities for passenger, freight and express traffic with competitive rates and convenience of time table, would be of great benefit and advantage to the city of Belleville and vicinity, and respectfully recommend to His Worship the Mayor, that a public meeting of citizens be called to consider the project of the Ontario Electric Railway, at some convenient date.

DIED AT GOOD OLD AGE.

MRS. ATKINS, 81 YEARS A RESIDENT OF THIS DISTRICT, DIED THIS MORNING.

An aged and respected resident of this city passed away at an early hour this morning in the person of Mrs. Elizabeth Jane Atkins, the widow of the late Mr. Richard Atkins. Deceased, who was a Miss Carscallen, was born in the township of Thurlow 81 years ago. During her long life Mrs. Atkins had always resided in the city and vicinity. A week ago she was attacked with pneumonia, which caused her death. Deceased had been for over half a century a member of the Methodist Church. She three sons and three daughters who survive have lost a beloved mother. The sons are Henry, of Thurlow; George and Clavell, of this city. The daughters are Mrs. Jas. Fargey, of Winnipeg; Mrs. Charles Brookes, of Buffalo, and Miss Jennie, at home.

SEVERAL MILLINERY OPENINGS TO-DAY.

WHAT BELLEVILLES FAIR LADIES WILL WEAR DURING THE COMING SEASON.

MISS IRWIN'S.

A veritable bower of beauty to-day was Miss Irwin's spacious show rooms. The many beautiful millinery creations were fairly dazzling to the eye. "How dainty the shapes!" "How delicate the colors!" "What harmony in shading!" could be heard on all sides. Truly clever brains and nimble fingers fashioned them. Only an artiste can be successful milliner this season. Many of the shapes are quite small, others are as large as ever, on the picture order and worn off the face. In small hats the Tarpeda, Louis XV., the Marquis and Princess are favorites. Fruits and quantities of flowers are used, from the lilac rose to the large poppy. Some hats are made entirely of flowers. Some rich plumes for large hats are quite correct. Fancy braid shapes will be much in blended until it is fairly bewitching. Daintiness, beauty and individuality characterize Miss Irwin's hats. Some very handsome all black hats and a large assortment of mourning ones were on exhibition. Headgear for the little tots was not known. The new weaves and girdle belts were much admired.

MISS CAMPBELL.

The millinery parlor of Miss Campbell was to-day thronged with ladies, who were kind in their praises of the display of feminine headwear. Hats and toppets of the latest styles and artistically trimmed were to be seen on every hand. One of the new features in hats is the close turned-up back, which is usually backed with soft flowers. Careful attention has been given to the trimming of hats by Miss Campbell and her able assistants. In children's headwear everything is new and up to the season. In addition to headwear many useful articles for ladies' wear are to be found in this place of business.

Secretary Hewitt's Answer to Brockville.

Brockville Times: The following letter speaks for itself without comment:

Toronto, March 12, 1904.

Geo. A. Wright, Esq., Brockville Hockey Club, Brockville, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Your letter of the 11th received to-day. I might say that the belated notification to the Brockville club was due to the fact that I did not know that you intended to play Belleville until I accidentally saw an item in a Belleville paper announcing a game. It is customary for clubs wishing to play games with a club whose status is doubtful to enquire at headquarters as to whether or not it would be right to arrange a game. If the Brockville club had made an enquiry of me, they would have been notified in plenty of time as to the game.

The fact that the Belleville club has entered a league against the O.H.A. debars them from playing with Brockville. You will, therefore, kindly cancel the return game with Belleville as you state in your letter is your intention. Sincerely yours,

W. A. Hewitt,
Sec. O.H.A.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERT TONIGHT.

MOODS AND TEARS.

One Woman's Views About Weeping at Theatrical Performances.

"There is just this about crying at the theater," said the average woman—"you'll cry if you're in the mood for it and you won't if you're not, no matter how harrowing or nonsensical the play may be. Like most average women, I rarely cry either at the theater or anywhere, but I long ago discovered that it depends entirely upon my mood at the time. I once went to a genuine comedy and found the tears filling my eyes just because I happened to be blue at the time, and I've been at many a play with all the women around me mopping their eyes and drying their pocket handkerchiefs on their fans while I, being for some reason or other unlifted, sat there dry eyed, almost smiling.

"No matter what my mood, however, the thing sure to keep me from weeping at the theater is any emotional display on the part of her who is with me. I can attend the weepiest kind of a play unmoved with my sister, for she starts in way ahead of time, making me feel more like laughing than crying, and then when the true lachrymose opportunity arrives it finds me pathos proof. This is the only way by which I may make myself immune from weeping at theaters upon all occasions."

TIPPING IN LONDON.

No End to the Fees to Servitors In Hotels.

As an old Londoner I have seen changes in the manners of the city which amount to a complete transformation. I remember well the time when there wasn't really a good restaurant in all London and when we had to be content with dining and supping in the back parlors of public houses. You got very good food in those dark, low ceilinged, stuffy rooms, and I remember when you were considered to be doing very well when you handed the somewhat time worn and ill clad waiter twopence or threepence as a tip.

Nowadays you go into a restaurant which is palatial, and you see men, especially if they belong to the Stock Exchange, giving huge tips that in my old times would have paid the price of a whole dinner for half a dozen friends. And the tipping never seems to stop. You tip one waiter for one thing and another for another, and you tip the carver, and then you tip the man who gives you your wine, and as you are leaving you tip the porter who puts on your coat and the other porter who calls your cab. It is, in fact, becoming almost impossible for men of moderate means to go to most of the restaurants of today.—M. A. P.

Marine Insurance.

Marine insurance is very old. The earliest voyages, the Phœnicians, practiced a kind of insurance. The master before sending his small bark to the edge of the earth, mortgaged her against her return. If she came back he returned the loan with a heavy premium.

IN HONOR OF ST. PATRICK

How the Legislators of Ontario Will Recognize the Day.

Cumulative Voting Finds Dr. Nesbitt and the Attorney-General on the Same Side—Compensation For Railway Employes Discussed in the Assembly—The Case of the Grand Trunk—Natural Gas Export.

Toronto, March 17.—In honor of St. Patrick the Legislature will not sit to-night. Just before adjournment last night Mr. Whitney called attention to the anniversary, and asked what the Government proposed to do regarding an evening session.

"We'll all wear shamrocks during the day and not sit in the evening," was the Premier's comforting remark.

The cumulative system of voting as applied to the election of the Board of Control in Toronto was discussed during the sitting. Dr. Nesbitt brought up the matter when he moved the second reading of his bill to amend the Municipal Act. He condemned the system, saying it opened the way for the control of affairs by the worst elements of both political parties.

The Attorney-General concurred in Dr. Nesbitt's opinion that the system had been unsatisfactory in Toronto, but he did not know whether it was the fault of the system or the way it was worked out. The bill went to the Municipal Committee.

Compensation For Workmen.

An amendment to the Workmen's Compensation Act, fathered by Mr. Lennox, and moved by Mr. Whitney, came up for discussion. The Grand Trunk Railway contributes $12,500 a year to the Employes' Provident Insurance Association on condition that the members enter into a contract barring them from taking advantage of the right to claim damages for injuries arising out of the negligence of the company or its employes. By subscribing to the contract the employes are barred from taking action to recover. Mr. Hanna's amendment provides that no contract shall be considered binding on the employe. Mr. Hanna pointed out that the employes were compelled to become members of the society.

The Attorney-General urged that there was a difference of opinion among the employes as to the wisdom of the compulsory feature. But both parties should be given the opportunity of presenting their views. He had no doubt that if the clause was dropped it would result in the abandonment of the society.

It was rather remarkable that the Grand Trunk had not, Mr. Whitney did not take advantage of the decision to sit until the last few years.

The bill was referred to the Legal Committee.

The long series of "Lost" when Mr. Taylor asked the second reading of the bill to amend the Game Protection Act by compelling deer hunters to wear red distinguishing marks. After discussion the bill was withdrawn on the suggestion of the Attorney-General.

A number of other bills were put through various stages.

Natural Gas Export.

The debate on the question of exporting natural gas was resumed by Mr. Whitney, and several members took part. The discussion resulted in the following motion which was carried, after amendments had been defeated:

That in the opinion of this House, the Government of Ontario should at once communicate the Government of Canada to prohibit the exportation of natural gas from Ontario into the United States of America, or, failing that, to place an equitable export duty upon all natural gas exported; and that in no case should any action be taken by the House in the way of terminating the licenses or disconnecting the pipes without due enquiry into all the circumstances relating to the matter either by a committee of the House or a Royal Commission, so that due regard may be had to the best interests of the people of the Province, which interests would be probably affected.

A large number of questions were asked and answered.

Agricultural Libraries.

Mr. Carnegie moved:

That in consideration of the fact that agriculture is the chief industry of the Province, this House is of the opinion that the Government should take every opportunity of establishing libraries in farming communities for the dissemination of useful information on agricultural topics.

A number of returns of information on various subjects were ordered by the House.

First Readings.

Mr. Whitney introduced a bill respecting the Township of Mulmur, Dundas County; Mr. Little (Cardwell), respecting the Simcoe County Mutual Fire Insurance Company; Mr. Powell, to authorize Cyrus B. Parnell of Bermuda to practice financial surgery in Ontario; Mr. St. John, respecting the Toronto & Suburban Railway Company; Mr. McCart, to consolidate the floating debt of the Town of Oscoela; Mr. Pettypiece, respecting the Strathroy & Western Counties Railway Company; Mr. Smith (Pel), respecting the Toronto, Hamilton & Buffalo and Toronto & Mimico Railway Company; Mr. Cameron (Port William), respecting the Town of York; Mr. William; Mr. St. John, respecting the Town of Toronto Junction; Hon. Mr. Ingram, to amend the Factories' Act; Hon. Mr. Gibson, entitled the Statute Law Amendment Act, 1904.

Third Readings.

The following bills were read a third time: Respecting the City of St. Catharines (Jessop); respecting the City of London (Beck); to consolidate the debt of the Village of Stirling (Pearce); respecting the Sandwich, Windsor & Amherstburg Railway Co (Auld); respecting the City of Ottawa (Powell.)

DOMINION ALLIANCE.

Executive Experts and Demands Immediate Legislative Action.

Toronto, March 17.—The executive of the Dominion Alliance met yesterday with a pretty good attendance and discussed various matters of interest in the movement. The legislative action was fully threshed out, and as a result two resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The first, moved by Alex. Mills, and seconded by Hev. Dr. Chown, was:

That the emphatic declaration of the will of the electorate, expressed in the plebiscites and the referendum, and the definite promises of successive Provincial Premiers, warrant us in expecting and demanding immediate and effective legislative action; and this meeting therefore calls upon the Government to introduce into the Legislature during the present session a bill providing for the abolition of the bar room, the treating system and drinking in clubs, with the imposition on the wholesale traffic of such other restrictions as shall most effectually curtail its operation and remedy its evils."

Hev. Dr. Carman moved, and D. Ross seconded, the second resolution, which was:

That this meeting believes it to be the earnest desire of the temperance electors of the province that the Government and the Legislature of both parties shall advocate and support legislation on the lines above set out."

F. S. Spence occupied the chair.

Sunday and After Hours Traffic.

Toronto, March 17.—The Brewers' Association has been considering asking for the transaction of the usual business privileges on Sunday. A deal of discussion occurred over the proposed change in temperance legislation. Some of the members left the meeting that the present licensees were not satisfactory. Instead of new legislation a rigid enforcement of the present law was all that was required. The sense of the meeting was decidedly in favor of the present legislation with the exceptions of the Sunday closing and the early closing regulations. John Carling was re-elected president.

Vienna, March 17.—The palaces of Emperor Francis Joseph and Archduke Clothilde at Budapest were saved by a mob of students and workmen because the buildings were not decorated in honor of the anniversary of the revolution of 1848.

ACROSS THE YALU RIVER

Japanese Outposts Are Driving the Troops of Russia.

Russian Fleet Returns to Port Arthur.

—Jap Soldiers Marching 25 Miles a Day—Japanese Are Now Holding Anju and the Line of the Chengcheng River—Mikado Is Rushing Troops to Chemulpo.

London, March 18.—The correspondent of The Daily Mail at Chefoo, who has just visited Chinampo, Corea, says:

"On the way to Chemulpo we passed a constant succession of Japanese transports. Three thousand Japanese landed at Chemulpo at the end of last week."

The correspondent adds that the Russians are retreating across the Yalu River before the advance of the Japanese outposts, and that their force in this district numbers 20,000.

The Daily Mail's Wei-Hai-Wei correspondent learns that Viscount Aoke, formerly Japanese Minister to Germany, is going to Seoul to establish practically a Japanese Administration of Corea.

Under date of March 17, the Che Foo correspondent of The Standard reports that provision trains are arriving hourly at Port Arthur, the railway being intact.

The Daily Telegraph's Tokio correspondent, cabling March 17, asserts that the Russian fleet has returned to Port Arthur. If this is correct, the correspondent adds, it is evident from Rear-Admiral Baron Von Stackleburg's report that the Russian raisers which left Vladivostok returned to that port without an attempt having been made to unite the fleets, or if an attempt was made it was unsuccessful.

Found No Jops in 30 Miles.

The Che Foo correspondent of The Paris edition of The New York Herald, cabling under yesterday's date, asserts that a portion of the Russian fleet made several cruises within a radius of 50 miles of Port Arthur without finding any trace of the enemy.

London papers also have vague rumors of alleged movements of the opposing forces in the vicinity of the Yalu River.

It is stated that the Russians are again negotiating for the purchase of Welsh coal, and it is reported from Hamburg that Russia is trying to place contracts with German shipyards for several new torpedo boat destroyers to be delivered this year.

According to a despatch from Antwerp to The Daily Telegraph, Russia has acquired twenty large Antwerp transport steamers and has insured each of them for $250,000.

A Tokio correspondent of The Times says that the Russian and the Japanese scouts are now separated only by the River Chengcheng, just north of Anju. The despatch adds that the foreign correspondents will leave for the front either on March 20 or 23, but their destination is still unknown.

A Times' correspondent at Wei-Hai-Wei, cabling under yesterday's date, says: "I arrived at Pingyang Inlet March 15, and proceeded to Chinampo. Navigation was difficult, owing to the drift ice. I found anchored there both war vessels and transports. Disembarkation has been difficult, but the Japanese have brought all necessary appliances. Pontoon jetties have been built and extend for hundreds of yards, and the transports brought their own landing barges."

The correspondent describes the landing movements and the dispersal of the forces with some detail, and says: "Despite the terrible weather the infantry marched 25 miles daily, each man carrying nearly 100 pounds. It was a severe test, but they did well. Covered by this force, a large force is now disembarking within easier distance of the Japanese objective, while preparations are reported to be proceeding at the only practicable port on the east coast of Corea. The Japanese are now holding Anju and the line of the Chengcheng River. The actual front points to a further retirement of the Russian forces.

"Despite their command of the sea the Japanese omit no precaution. It would be unfair to the Japanese to give the numbers and designation of their forces, but landings were made long enough ago to permit a general reference to them without prejudice to the operations. The weather generally is improving."

WAR NOTES.

Che Foo, March 18.—While entering Port Arthur Wednesday, the 16th inst., the Russian torpedo boat destroyer Shorri struck upon an unplaced mine and was blown up. Four of the crew were saved.

Tientsin, March 18.—Lloyd's agent, "direct" Port Arthur will be open between March 15 to 30, and steamers have been chartered for spring shipments."

Omak, Siberia, March 18.—The troops passing through this town are well supplied with warm clothing. The Cossacks supplied their own.

Che Foo, March 18.—Warnings have been received here cautioning previous reports to the effect that the Russians have laid mines along the Liaotung Peninsula.

Seoul, March 18.—Marquis Ito arrived at Chumulpo yesterday. He was greeted by a delegation of high Corean officials.

Che Foo, March 18.—A letter from Port Arthur says that the garrison there consists of 2,500 men.

St. Petersburg, March 18.—The first headquarters of the Manchuria army after General Kuropatkin's arrival will be at Liaoyang.

Tokio, March 18.—Gen. H. P. Hamilton of the British army in India, arrived here yesterday. He will accompany the Japanese forces as a military observer.

An Important Question.

London, March 18.—Answering a question in the House of Commons yesterday regarding the movements of the Russian armored cruiser Dmitri Donskoi in the Mediterranean, her searching merchant vessels, etc., Premier Balfour said that as to what steps His Majesty's Government proposed to take to stop these operations, Premier Balfour, while admitting the great importance of the question, would not have time to inquire into the facts before he would be able to give a complete answer.

Canadian Missionaries All Right.

Ottawa, March 18.—Lord Strathcona has cabled as follows to the Secretary of State: "Admiral has received telegram from Commander-in-Chief, China station, reporting His Majesty's ship Phoenix arrived at Gensan with Canadian missionaries from Songchan, who did not require further passage."

Canal Lighted By Electricity.

Ottawa, March 18.—It has been determined not only to light the Welland Canal by electricity instead of gas, but by the same motive power to operate the gates, valves, bridges and sluiceway of the canal.

Sealers Tied Up.

Halifax, N. S., March 18.—A special from Meat Cove, C. B., reports three sealers in the ice at St. Paul's Island, one being in a critical condition. Names not obtainable.

TO UNMAKE GOVERNMENT.

John Redmond Urges Voters to Put Home Rule Above Everything Else.

London, March 18.—A banquet was held at the Hotel Cecil last night, presided over by John Redmond, the Irish leader, and attended by the members of the Nationalist party in the House of Commons and prominent Irishmen in London.

John Redmond, proposing the toast of "Ireland, a Nation," said that the opportunity for which they had waited for so many long and weary years had almost arrived—the opportunity for Ireland to be the deciding factor in the making or unmaking of the Government of Great Britain. The coming general election would witness the defeat of the Unionist Government.

Mr. Redmond urged the Irish voters in Great Britain at the next election to put the question of home rule above everything else. He said that the future depended upon the power and unity of the Irish party in Parliament.

SERGT. MITCHELL AND WIFE.

Succumb to Burns From Furnace Fire Which Caught Her Dress.

Toronto, March 18.—One of the saddest fatalities that has happened in Toronto in a long time occurred yesterday. Patrol Sergeant Samuel Mitchell of the police force and his wife are both dead from injuries received from fire.

About 10 o'clock yesterday morning, while Mrs. Mitchell was attending to the furnace, her clothing caught fire. Her screams awoke her husband, who had a short time before come off duty. He rushed to the basement and in his endeavors to save his wife was badly burned. Both were taken to the General Hospital. Mrs. Mitchell died at 2 p. m. and the husband at midnight.

LIBERALS WIN AGAIN.

Capture the Parliamentary Division of East Dorset By 83 Votes.

London, March 18.—The polling Wednesday for a candidate to fill the vacancy in the Parliamentary division of East Dorset caused by the accession of Hon. Humphrey N. Sturt to the peerage on the death of his father, Lord Alington, resulted in a victory for the Liberals, C. H. Lyell, the Liberal candidate, defeating Mr. Van Haute, the candidate of the Conservatives, by 83 votes. At the general election of 1900 Mr. Sturt defeated A. Allen (Liberal), by 96 votes, while at the previous general election in 1895 Mr. Sturt was returned unopposed.

Want Pledge Fulfilled.

Hamilton, March 18.—This resolution was adopted by the Royal Templars yesterday afternoon: "This Dominion Council respectfully claim at the hands of the Ontario Government the fulfilment of its pledge to legislate to the limit of provincial powers in the direction of the prohibition and sale of intoxicating liquors as beverage."

CONSERVATIVES ARE CONFIDENT.

The Liberal-Conservative party of Canada has entered upon the fourth session of the present Parliament imbued with a spirit of calm confidence, born of that strength which a year ago enabled it to make a fight for good government unprecedented in the annals of Canadian political history. The Opposition has had its head straightened by the recent endorsation of thousands of recruits to its polley of "Canada for Canadians" and it goes without saying that the significance of the vote in its favor will serve as an incentive to renewed efforts to safeguard public interests. At the head of the Opposition, too, is one now recognized as a fitting leader, Mr. R. L. Borden. Three years have served to bring out in that gentleman qualities which have made his name a household word from ocean to ocean and stamped him as a leader of men and a statesman. Mr. Borden enjoys the reputation of a man whose whole nature is permeated with high ideals. He regards honor among public men as sacred. He is a Canadian who believes that his native land has within its confines the people and the resources which unite to make a nation, and his line of action in the matter of the preservative party has been to promote the employment of these elements for the advancement of Canada. With an able debating power behind him, he and his followers took with confidence to the Canadian people to support a policy which has done so much to uphold Canada, and which will in proper hands still further advance her interests.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Are we ever going to stop shovelling snow?

Only two weeks to Good Friday and still the snowbanks rise.

This last storm will probably "ball up" the railroads again. Another case of "splendid isolation" for Peterboro'.

What do we care about the war? The snow shovel is mightier than the sword.

We object to any aggregation of singers taking liberties with the National Anthem. They should sing it as it is written, and have no more right to mutilate it than they would have to put a yellow border round the Union Jack. The Police Magistrate, we understand, threatens, if this occurs again, to give everybody connected with it 30 days.

WHAT WILL HAPPEN.
(Ottawa Citizen.)

That Dmitri Donskoi cruiser will fire a gun across the bows of a British cruiser in the Red Sea one of these fine days and when the ensuing disturbance subsides and the Britisher is picked up they will have an opportunity to explain that they didn't know it was loaded.

When the snow begins to melt in earnest on the country roads there will be fun to be had in a pretty pickle, and they may become impassable for a few days. We've growled a lot about the winter, but it really looks as though the worst was yet to come. Cheer up, though; the fall wheat is all right.

One of the legends of St. Patrick says that the snow caused snakes to disappear from the plains of Tara. What a pity the good saint did not pay us a visit yesterday and banish the surplus of snow we have at present. That would have been a popular miracle, indeed!

It may not be out of place to mention, as the city now owns the local gas plant, that a company, composed of Canadian and U. S. capitalists, has made to the city of Montreal an offer of the most remarkable kind. It is to this effect: The city is to acquire the plant and premises of the Montreal Gas Company, at an arbitrated price, and is to lease them to the new company, which will pay an interest on the purchase money, and much of extending the service, at the rate of four per cent. per annum. The lights of the streets will be furnished at the rate of $15 per annum. The gas for use in houses will be sold at 80c per thousand feet for the first five years and thereafter, and for a period of ten years, at 75c per thousand feet. Here is municipal ownership of gas on a new plan. The city owns the plant and a syndicate operates it under an agreement in which the city's interests are fully safeguarded. "The offer of the new company," says the Witness, "it is estimated, would result in a direct saving to the citizens of Montreal of $250,000 per year in gas bills, besides which there would be a corresponding reduction in the cost of electric light. Canadian bituminous coal would be used in the manufacture of gas by the new company, and the coke that would be made in connection with the production of gas by the process to be used, it is declared by the promoters, would be better than coke made from anthracite coal." Perhaps it would be well while for the Chairman of Gas to enter into correspondence with the company which offers to do such remarkable things for Montreal.

Hon. Geo. W. Ross, it seems, wore a shamrock and a worried look yesterday, as per usual.

Sicard's permit to travel in South Africa has been cancelled, and now if they'll only bar him from the rest of the British dominions the Government will be entitled to 99 per cent. of King Edward's subjects.

The backbone of winter is still in better shape than the backbone of Abe than behind the snow shovel.

Sports and Pastimes

SPORTING NOTES.

Brockville Times: Belleville hockeyists are soaring high. The management is endeavoring to arrange for a game with the Ottawas, holders of the Stanley Cup.

Beechgroves, junior champions O.H.A., are behind $100 as a result of the season's matches. A benefit concert is to be tendered them in Kingston on the 21st inst.

Winnipeg will give $30,000 in two week's racing at the Dominion exhibition this year.

The Ottawa hockey team during the season just closed has played thirteen games—including eight matches for possession of the Stanley Cup, a greater number than any other team in possession of the trophy has ever been called upon to play—winning twelve and losing one of the games. They scored 100 goals and were scored against for 39 goals.

The Brandon hockey team, which met the Ottawas for the Stanley Cup, stepped off at Toronto on their way home. They all agreed, says the Star, that the Ottawa team is the dirtiest and roughest aggregation that ever came under their notice.

Marvels of Modern Naval Gun.

Within the memory of men who would be seriously offended at being considered old a gun weighing 81-3 tons which would fire a projectile weighing a hundredweight and capable of piercing seven inches of iron at a distance of 1,000 yards was a piece of ordnance to marvel at. To-day there are on British ships scores of guns each of which could, if need be, fire a shell weighing a third of a ton, and capable of piercing three feet of wrought iron at a mile distance, from the cliffs of Dover and land it on French soil on the other side of Calais. Such is the wonderful development in naval ordnance within the last forty years.

The intermediate stages between these two extremes work rapid. After the 61-2 ton gun came in successive guns of 9 12 and 18 tons weight, the latter firing a 400-pound shell able to pierce nine-inch armor. Then came 25-ton and 35-ton guns, as years with months of foot wide; a 38-ton gun throwing a 800-pound shot followed, and then, by a leap, an 80-ton gun was produced—a leviathan, with a bore of 16 inches, able to send a 1,700-pound projectile as clean through two feet of armor as a red hot needle would pass through a pat of butter.

These guns are breech-loaders, all muzzle-loaders and when breech-loading was adopted in 1880, there was a quick relapse to smaller guns of 14 and 22 tons, the size again rapidly growing until from a 67-ton gun we jumped at a single bound to a monster of 110 tons, every firing of which ran into hundreds of pounds, while their service life was measured by about 100 shots.

A much more useful and practicable weapon is the 12-inch Vickers-Maxim gun, which is now the heaviest and most powerful naval gun in a British battleship. This marvellous gun weighs 50 tons, of which 14 tons are represented by 120 miles of wire wound round and round it, and is 42 feet long. It despatches a projectile weighing 850 pounds—the weight of half a dozen men—with such terrific force that it will pierce 28 inches of wrought iron at 1,000 yards, and only four inches less at twice that distance. This projectile leaves the muzzle with a velocity of over 1,610 miles an hour—nearly three times the speed of an express train at its fastest—and with an energy equal to 40,220 tons.

More astonishing still is the flight of this projectile, weighing more than a third of a ton, since with the gun at a proper elevation it would be quite possible to send the shell over the top of the highest mountain in the world, coming to earth again twenty-five miles away from the starting point. With such a gun it would be easy to bombard Calais from the cliffs of Dover.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

A number of young people last evening assembled at the residence of Mrs. J. D. Latta, North Front street, where a pleasant time was spent in social intercourse.

A Front St. merchant suggests that the authorities run the sweeper over the roadway of our main thoroughfare after the top dressing of snow is gone. There would then be good sleighing there, he says.

The acting manager of the Great Eastern Stock Company complains that in our report of the recent fire we were in error as to the losses sustained. The acting manager says that the stock sheets show that the fire carried a $23,000 stock, and the loss is estimated at $12,000.

"HOLY ROLLERS" IN CAMPBELLFORD.

PECULIAR DOINGS OF AN ALLEGED "RELIGIOUS" SECT.

Campbellford Despatch: For some months past a sect known as the Holy Rollers have been carrying on meetings in Campbellford, which, it claims, are of a religious character, but from the manner in which they tumble about the floor prostrating themselves and allowing the audience (boys) to take an active part in their services by throwing snowballs at them, pulling down the stove pipes, and hurling items at them all of which they glory in for the sake of being persecuted as was Jesus by the Jews. Their leader, Preacher F. Woodruff, who hails from the States, was arrested by Constable D. R. Wright on Friday last, a warrant having been sworn out for his arrest on charge of performing the marriage ceremonies without being duly qualified to do so. The one on Dec. 8, when he married Miss Edna Twigg, of town, to Mr. Henry Mitchell, of Wooler, at the home of Mr. Ira Loucks, Seymour. The other marriage was performed in town at the home of Mr. Henry Sharpe, when he married Mr. Sharpe's fifteen-year-old daughter, Elena, who is severely crippled, to Mr. Samuel E. Mack, a young man who came here a few months ago from Springbrook, and who, having refused a license to the Rev. Mr. L. G. Young, procured one at Peterboro.

The prisoner was brought before Magistrate D. J. Lynch, who released him his liberty, by furnishing $500 bail.

The case promises to be interesting.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"MORE THAN QUEEN."

Since the opening of the present run of "More Than Queen," the production of which was originally made by Julia Arthur at the Broadway Theatre, New York, very large audiences have been the rule. Whether this may be attributed to the sterling quality of the drama or to the immense popularity of Mr. Wm. Humphrey, who plays Jack, the original part Napoleon, or of Miss Anne Sutherland, who plays Josephine, the part emayed by Miss Julia Arthur, it is hard to determine. Possibly all of these factors may, each have their share in this prosperous condition of affairs. At any rate the theatre-going public of this city will have an opportunity of judging for themselves next Wednesday, March 23, when "More Than Queen" appears at the Carman Opera House.

AN OLD INDIAN LEGEND.

Tradition of the Origin of Wheat, Corn and Tobacco.

"I have been favored with an Indian tradition concerning the origin of tobacco, Indian corn and wheat, which, although you may have seen it before, I shall relate," said the poet laureate of all the Pascagoulas.

"At some distant period two Indian youths, pursuing the pleasures of the chase, were led to a remote and unfrequented part of the forest, where, being fatigued and hungry, they sat down to refresh themselves and to dress their victuals. While they were thus employed the spirit of the woods, attracted as it is supposed by the unusual and savory smell of the venison, approached them in the form of a beautiful female and seated herself beside them. The youths, awed by the presence of so superior a being and struck with gratitude for the condescension which she had shown them in becoming their guest, presented to her in the most respectful manner a share of their repast; which she was pleased to accept and upon which she regaled with seeming satisfaction.

"The meat being finished, the female spirit, having thanked them cordially for their attention and informed them that if they would return to the same place after the revolution of twelve moons they would find something which would recompense their kindness, disappeared from their sight. The youths, having watched the revolving moons and having returned at the appointed time, found that upon the place on which the right arm of the goddess had reclined an ear of Indian corn had sprung up, under her left a stalk of wheat, and from the spot on which she had been seated was growing a flourishing plant of tobacco.

NEW YEAR'S CUSTOMS.

French families always make a special point of being reunited at the New Year.

The custom of making gifts at the New Year is supposed to have originated with the ancient Romans.

On New Year's eve Chinese merchants pull down their old advertising posters and put up new ones.

In Greece the father of a family, however poor, must give his wife and each child a New Year present of money.

Scotsmen regard the taking of stock or of New Year's day as a very risky proceeding, even though it be in payment of a debt.

In Germany if millet and herrings only be eaten on New Year's day it is believed that money will be plentiful all through the year.

In Japan at the New Year business generally is suspended, both private and public. The Jinrikisha cooly is the only man who works.

Coal In Folklore.

Probably most policemen could have answered the question of the magistrate who asked a burglar in court why he carried about pieces of coal. Among other coal folklore is the burglar's faith that the powdered ashes of a piece confers good luck, and when searched in the police station it is generally found in his pocket. A belief in coal as a talisman is said to have been held by the early Britons, and it is certainly frequently found in their burial places converted into personal ornaments, such as beads, etc. Believers in dreams maintain that to dream of coal is a certain sign of coming riches. Thus, there is the speculum or mirror of divination—that caused such a sensation in the sixteenth century—Dr. Dee, which subsequently formed 'part of the Strawberry Hill collection. It was formed of cannel coal, though the doctor pretended to have received it from the angels.—Sunday Strand.

PILLS AND PILLS.

A prolific cause of Piles is the use of cathartics and pills of a drastic, violent nature.

Followed by a reaction on account of the reasons, drying properties they contain.

There are other causes, but no matter what the cause or what the kind of Piles, Dr. Leonhardt's Hem-Roid can be relied upon to cure—to stay cured.

It's an internal remedy that removes the cause of Itching, Blind, Bleeding or Suppurating Piles.

A 75 cents dose will each package containing a month's treatment.

It can be obtained for $1.00 at druggists.

TRIBUTES TO WIVES

WORDS OF TENDERNESS UTTERED BY GREAT MEN.

The Homage That Tom Hood Paid to the Partner of His Sorrows and Joys—Jean Paul Richter's Dactylic Praise of Caroline Mayer.

Few great men have paid more enthusiastic tributes to their wives than Tom Hood, and probably few wives have better deserved such homage, says the Chicago Chronicle. "You will think," he wrote to her in one of his letters, "that I am more foolish than any boy lover, and I plead guilty, for you was a wooer so young of heart and so steeped in love as I, but it is a love sanctified and strengthened by long years of experience. May God ever bless my darling, the sweetest, most helpful, angel who ever stooped to bless a man!" Here there was no wonder, lived a wife to whom a more delicate and beautiful tribute was paid than those verses of which the burden is, "I love thee, I love thee; 'tis all that I can say?"

"I want thee'much," Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote to his wife many years after his long patience had won for him the dower "that was lent from heaven to show the possibilities of the human soul." She was the only person in the world that ever was necessary to me, and now I am only myself when thou art within my reach. Thou art an unspeakably beloved woman." Sophia Hawthorne was little better than a chronic invalid, and it may be that this physical weakness woke all the deep affinity and tenderness of the man. And he reaped a rich reward for an almost unrivaled devotion in the "atmosphere of love and happiness and inspiration" with which his delicate wife always surrounded him.

The wedded life of Wordsworth with his cousin, "the phantom of delight," was a poem more exquisitely beautiful than any his pen ever wrote. Mrs. Wordsworth was never fair to look upon, but she had that priceless and rarer beauty of soul which made her life "a center of sweetness" to all around her. "All that she has been to me," the poet once said in his latter days, "none but God and myself can ever know," and it would be difficult to find a more beautiful and touching picture in the gallery of great men's lives than that of Wordsworth and his wife, both bowed under the burden of many years and almost blind, "walking hand in hand together in the garden, with all the blissful simplicity and tender confidence of youthful lovers.

It never needed "the wedding touch of a great sorrow" to make the lives of Archbishop Tait and his devoted wife "a perfect whole." Speaking of her many years after she had been taken from him, he said, "To part from her, if only for a day, was a pain and loss intense than the pleasures with which I returned to her, and when I took her with me it was one of the purest joys given to a man to watch the meeting between her and our children."

When David Livingstone had passed his thirtieth birthday, with barely a thought for such "an indulgence as wooing and wedding," he declared humorously that when he was a little less busy he would send home an advertisement for a wife, "preferably a decent sort of widow," and yet so unconsciously near was his fate that only a year later he was introducing his bride, Mary Moffat, to the home he had built, largely with his own hands, at Mabotsa. From that "supremely happy hour" to the day when, eighteen years later, he received her "last faint whisperings" at Shupanga, no man ever had a more self sacrificing, brave, devoted wife than the missionary's daughter. In fact, they were more like two happy, light hearted children than sedate married folk, and under the magic of their merriment the hardships and dangers of life in the heart of the dark continent were stripped of all their terrors.

Jean Paul Richter confessed that he never gien suspected the potentialities of human happiness until he met Caroline Mayer, "that sweetest and most gifted of women," when he was fast approaching his fortieth year, and that he had no monopoly of the resultant happiness is proved by his wife's declaration that "Richter is the greatest, the holiest, the most godlike man that lives; * * * to be the wife of such a man is the greatest glory that can fall to a woman," while of his wife Richter once wrote, "I thought when I married her that I had sounded the depths of human love, but I have since realized how unfathomable is the heart in which a noble woman has her shrine."

Out Went the Bandbox.

Lord Ellenborough, the great English judge, was once about to go on circuit when Lady Ellenborough said that she should like to accompany him. He replied that he had no objection, provided she did not incumber the carriage with bandboxes, which were his utter abhorrence. During the first day's journey Lord Ellenborough, happening to stretch his legs, put his foot through the bandbox before the seat. He discovered that it was a bandbox. Up went the window and out went the bandbox. The coachman stopped, and the footman, thinking that the bandbox had tumbled out of the window by some extraordinary chance, was going to pick it up when Lord Ellenborough furiously called out, "Drive on!" The bandbox accordingly was left by the ditch side. Having reached the country town where he was to officiate as judge, Lord Ellenborough proceeded to array himself for his appearance in the courthouse. "Now," said he, "where's my wig—where is my wig?" "My lord," replied the attendant, "it was thrown out of the carriage window."

A SAFE DIET RULE.

Eat the Smallest Amount of Food That Will Preserve Health.

How shall one determine how much food to eat? Too much mystery has been thrown about this subject. Let your sensations decide. It must be kept in mind that the entire function of digestion and assimilation is carried on without conscious supervision or concurrence. It should be entirely unfelt and unknown, excepting by the feeling of ben etre which accompanies and follows its normal accomplishment. Satiety is bad. It implies a sensation of fullness in the region of the stomach, and that means that too much food has been taken. There is direct correspondence in a healthy animal between the appetite and the amount of food required is extraordinary. As a rule, the meal, unless eaten very slowly, should cease before the appetite is entirely satisfied, because a little time is required for the outlying organs and tissues to feel the effects of the food that has been ingested. If too little has been taken, it is easy enough to make it up at the next meal, and the appetite will be only the better and the food more grateful.

No one was ever sorry for having voluntarily eaten too little, while millions every day repent having eaten too much. It has been said that the great lesson homeopathy taught the world was this—that whereas physician had been in the habit of giving the patient the largest dose he could stand, they have been led to see that their purpose was better subserved by giving him the smallest dose that would produce the desired effect. And so it is with food. Instead of eating, as most people unfortunately do, as much as they can, they should eat the smallest amount that will keep them in good health.—Roger S. Tracy in Century.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE.

She Has Her Trials and Sorrows, but Also Her Rewards.

The minister's wife exercises the statesmanship necessary to maintain a well ordered and cultured home on a small income—a home constantly under inspection by the whole parish. She sets a fashion in becoming dress which tones up the taste of many of her parishioners whose husbands' incomes are two or three times as large as the minister's salary. She is the pastor and the actual head of the too numerous women's and children's organizations in the church, and she manages to keep most of the jealousies of their leaders from coming to the surface. She listens sympathetically to the confidences of the young women of the congregation, and the small wedding fees which occasionally fall into her lap are meager wages for all the time and thought she has given and the teas she has served to bring about these weddings—services which her neighbors may laugh at, but which are the most delicate and valuable of all ministries when they issue in happy homes.

She knows the pains, the joys and the sorrows of motherhood, and she has strengthened the courage of many a shrinking wife faltering on the threshold of an unknown realm. When she has closed the eyes of the darling of her heart in the last sleep she goes out to cheer weary watchers by sick beds and to give her silent sympathy to mourners who will not be comforted. She holds her queenly way in poverty, trial and not seldom under unkind and unjust criticism, and as she grows older a light radiates from her spiritual face which moves discerning friends who otherwise would pity her to say, "Verily, she has her reward."—Congregationalist.

She Was Too Enthusiastic.

"Teaching to me," said an enthusiastic young schoolmistress, "is a holy calling. To sow in the young mind the seeds of future knowledge and watch them as they grow and develop is a pleasure greater than I can tell. I never weary of my work. My thoughts are only of—"

"I am very sorry," interrupted the young man to whom she was talking, "that you are so devoted to your profession, Miss Clare. I had hoped that some day I might have asked you—in fact, I called tonight—but I really dare go on, in the light of what you"—

"You may go on, Mr. Smith," said the young lady softly, "I am a little too enthusiastic at times perhaps."

She Had to Forgive.

Mrs. Winks—Mrs. Ayres and her husband have had a dreadful quarrel just because she gave him a letter to mail and he carried it around in his pocket for a week. Isn't it too silly of her? Mr. Winks—Maybe that would make you mad too. Mrs. Winks—Oh, John, I wouldn't lose my temper over a little thing like that. Mr. Winks—I'm glad to hear you say it, my dear. Just recall that I've still got that letter you gave me last Wednesday.

Escaped Her Notice.

"How did you like the way the minister animadverted upon our collegiate isms last Sunday?" asked Mrs. Oldcastle.

"I didn't notice it," replied her hostess. "He and Josiah were crowded out of our own pew and had to set where we couldn't see him when he wasn't standin' up."

The Spinster Aunt's Opinion.

Carrie—Do you think a woman is justified in marrying a man she doesn't know? Aunt Jane—She certainly wouldn't be justified in marrying a man she did know.

Nothing in It.

"I understand, professor, that Miss Squawker is coming to you to cultivate her voice. Is there anything in it?"

"Not for her."

Fear Absorption.

New Orleans, March 18.—An alliance has been formed by Brazil, Ecuador, Argentina, Chile and Bolivia, to guard against absorption by the United States. The belief prevails throughout Brazil and Argentina that in the event of a revolution in either republic President Roosevelt will intervene and recognize the revolutionists, thus paving the way for the annexation.

An Actor's Blunder.

A theatrical manager tells of an amusing and ludicrous mistake made by a young actor in a play.

The young actor was cast up to this time employed his talents in enacting soliloquies as called for no speech on his part. But in this play he was intrusted with the following line, the only words to be spoken by him during the entire play:

"The king is dead! Long live the king!"

The critical time arriving, it was observed by other players that the young man was trying to proclaim the new monarch in the words just quoted was suffering from a dreadful attack of stage fright. His cue came, but no words could be spoke, so frightened was he.

"Long live the king; he's dead!"—Tid-Bits.

Legal Courtesy.

An instance of legal courtesy occurred in a courtroom not very long ago. A lawyer with Mac prefaced to his name and a brother lawyer engaged in a heated discussion. The latter maintained his position, claiming he could find his authority and turning over to the pages of the statute book, when, quick as a flash, Mac said: "Never mind what you want on page —, section —."

Mac's opponent looked up the reference and found the law governing cases. A ripple of laughter spread over the court.

AN ABSOLUTE NECESSITY.

50 THINKS AT LEAST ONE TRAVELLING MAN.

I would as soon think of starting out for my 12 mileage books and grip as to start on a trip without a box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in my valise, said a travelling man who represents a St. Louis hardware house. Why? I don't pause I have to put up at all kinds of hotels and consequently sometimes have to eat good, bad and indifferent food at the table d'hote day and night and I don't believe any man's stomach will stand that kind of thing without protest, anyway I know mine won't. It has to have something to rest on. I take the Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at the crutch I fall back on.

My friends often "josh" me about it, tell me I'm an easy mark for patent medicine fakirs, that advertised medicines are bumbugs, etc., but I notice that they are nearly always complaining of their aches and pains and poor digestion, while I can stand most any old kind of fare and feel good and ready for any kind of work when I eat, and I believe I owe my good digestion and sound health to the daily, regular use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, year in and year out, and all the "joshing" in the world will never convince me to the contrary.

I used to have heartburn about three times a day and a headache about three or four times a week and after standing for this for four or five years I began to look around for a crutch and found it in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Best investment I could make would be a fifty cent box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and I have invested about fifty cents a month for them ever since and when I stop to think that that is what I spend every day for cigars, I feel like shaking hands with myself for I can keep my stomach and digestion in first class order for fifty cents a month. I don't care for any better "all round" investment.

My druggist tells me they are most popular with the all around medicines and that they have maintained their popularity and success because they do advertise and they bring results, and results are what I count in a patent medicine as much as in selling barbwire.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

ARMOUR MADE MILLIONS.

Chicago, March 18.—With the closing up out of a line of 20,000,000 bushels of May wheat on Tuesday the Armour people brought to a close the most remarkable wheat deal on record. Four million dollars—a million for each month the deal was pending—is the lowest estimate made of the profits that accrue to the big packer and his lieutenants. Several careful calculators believe $5,000,000 was added to the baskets of the bulls.

BALD HEADS COVERED

With Luxuriant Hair and Crusted Scalps Cleansed and Purified by

CUTICURA SOAP

Assisted by Light Dressings of Cuticura, the Great Skin Cure.

This treatment at once stops falling hair, removes crusts, scales and dandruff, destroys hair parasites, soothes irritated, itching surfaces, stimulates the hair follicles, loosens the scalp skin, supplies the roots with energy and nourishment, and makes the hair grow upon a sweet, wholesome, healthy scalp when all else fails.

Millions now rely on Cuticura Soap, assisted by Cuticura Ointment, the great skin cure, for preserving, purifying and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening and soothing red, rough and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings and chafings, for annoying irritations, or too free or offensive perspiration, for nicersative weaknesses, and many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves, as well as for all the purposes of the toilet and nursery.

Complete treatment for every humour, consisting of Cuticura Soap to cleanse the skin, Cuticura Ointment, to heal the skin, and Cuticura Resolvent Pills, to cool and cleanse the blood, may now be had of all druggists. A single set is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, and scaly humours, eczemas, rashes and inflammations, from infancy to age, when all else fails.

Legislature Did a Good Day's Committee Work St. Patrick's Day.

Toronto, March 18.—Shamrocks were worn yesterday in honour of St. Patrick's Day by members on both sides of the Legislature, and there was no evening session.

The new Taxation Bill was considered in committee, but none of the contentious clauses were touched.

In committee, Hon. Mr. Latchford's resolution re. the Temiskaming Railway loan was passed.

In committee, Hon. Mr. Stratton amended his House of Refuge Bill by limiting the amount of debentures for a site to $40,000 instead of $50,000.

Several other bills were also considered in committee.

The Attorney-General moved for the suspension of the rules to receive a petition from T. H. Clergue and others composing the Kaministiqua Company asking for incorporation.

Third Readings.

The following bills were read a third time: To consolidate the debt of the town of Trenton (Morrison); to incorporate the Brantford and Erie Railway Company (Little, of Norfolk); respecting the town of Penetanguishene (Tudhope); to incorporate the Windsor and Tecumseh Electric Railway Company (Lowe); respecting the town of Collingwood (Duff); respecting the Citizens' Casualty and Guarantee Company (Graham).

Thaner Committee For Trial.

Berlin, March 18.—On adjourned Thaner case came up before Police Magistrate Weir at 11 o'clock yesterday and Thaner was committed for trial on each of the two Ayr charges. There were two other charges laid by Chas. J. Fox, manager of the Western Bank, New Hamburg. The first alleged forgery and utterance took place May 14, 1901. The note was made payable to the Western Bank ten days after date, signed by Geo. Case Clemens. The name was signed to this note, along with Thaner's. The other note, also alleged to be a forgery, was uttered at the Western Bank, New Hamburg, Nov. 28, 1900. It was a six months' note for $1,770.

Fog & Leaves Trains.

Galt, March 18.—The G.T.R. main line was closed up yesterday owing to an accident that took place near Cedar Grove early after midnight Wednesday night. A freight train passed through Galt and when reaching Schaw was derailed. Twelve cars in all left the rails and of these ten are badly damaged. All the cars were loaded. It was not until the afternoon that the debris had been lifted clear of the tracks. Traffic was completely blocked.

THEY DROVE PIMPLES AWAY.

A face covered with pimples is unsightly. Yes, and disgusting! Nobody writes which should long since have been corrected. Pimples are not performing their functions in the healthy way "Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will show you know that the blood proteins. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will drive them all away, and will leave the skin clear and white. They will tell their own will be another witness to their excellence.

If you have a good business, it is always better to stay where you are. Disappointments, losses and other unpleasantness and the whole body grieve to stand by you. Then the heart is filled with gloom and dismal forebodings, the result of derangement of the digestive organs. Parmelee's Pills come to add to the distress. If only the behold it, they will be able to be oblivion for a while and temporary relief. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep, but will set so beautifully that the sufferer will wake refreshed and restored to happiness.

A WONDERFUL CURE.—Mr. David Smith, Cox Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of those that I can say a few words about Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia and was in a general debility. I tried almost every remedy recommended, but got nothing hardly to cure the sore but all to no purpose. Then I commenced trying Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and in a few days I found I had used about one-half, the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that I had used the bottle I was about disappeared and my general health was improved. I also, in a few ways of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and various pills with little effect. But since using a bottle of this Vegetable Discovery, my biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am glad to speak excellent 'credit for these facts, and further using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured, as I find it has the best health restorer I know."

THE PERFECT LAXATIVE.

It is well known that Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has nothing in common with the impure, intoxicating oils of the ordinary patent medicine. It is eminently pure and really intended for medicinal use. For lameness, stiffness of the joints and muscles, and all pains it is indeed a healing an excellent specific for rheumatism, neuralgia, bronchial complaints.

Made talk, easy lies.

It's pretty tough when a man can't even get credit for his good intentions.

The Filigree Ball

BY ANNA KATHERINE GREEN

AUTHOR OF

"THE LEAVENWORTH CASE."

He did so and she saw no signs of relief in his face. On the contrary, she watched, with the silly interest of a girl who had nothing else to occupy her mind, to see if he would leave the house in such a mood, and without making peace with his young bride. To her surprise he did not go out at the usual time, but went to Miss Tuttle's room, where for a full half-hour he was closeted with that sister-in-law, talking in excited and unnatural tones. Then he went back to his own room, where he had left his wife, in her own boudoir. But he could not have had much to say to her this time, for he presently came into the room and sat heavily downstairs and out, almost without stopping to catch up his hat.

Is it was Mary's business, and not the witness', to make Mrs. Jeffrey's bed in the morning, but even she could think of no excuse for approaching that room at so unusual an hour. Her mistress was still in bed, when letters came, followed by various messages and somewhat later by a telegram than is done's time to Mrs. Jeffrey's door. She was evidently expected, nor were her appeals answered, except by a sharp "Go away."

Nor was Miss Tuttle received any better, though she tried more than once to force an entrance, especially at eight o'clock, when the hour appointed for the doctor's return. His advice was simple determined to remain alone until the doctor's visit arrived, and so Mr. Jeffrey, she could only be induced to open her door wide enough to take in the cup of tea which Miss Tuttle brought her personally.

The witness here confessed that she had been somewhat excited by these unusual proceedings and by the effect which they seemed to have on the lady's maid, but that she was not ready to notice that Mrs. Jeffrey's face should have been in any way disfigured when she reached out for the tray.

Gladly would Loretta have caught one glimpse of her face, but it was within her power to deny that Mrs. Jeffrey answer a single one of her questions. She simply refused to open her door and kept it till toward midnight, when, after hearing the coming of the bell, ordered the house to be closed for the night. Then the long-shut door was softly open, but before any one could reach it, it was again pulled to and locked.

The next day brought no relief. Miss Tuttle, who had changed greatly by during the night, and who, at night, succeeded no better than before in gaining admittance to her victim, nor could Loretta gain the least word or sign from her mistress. Toward the latter part of the afternoon, Miss Tuttle left, ringing her bell, gave her first order.

"A substantial dinner," she cried, and then, when the dishes ordered were brought up the required meal she sternly dismissed the bell-boy at the door and herself bidden to enter. The sight which met her eyes staggered her. From one end of the room to the other were signs of great nervous excitement and irretrievable suffering. The chairs were pushed into corners as if by the frenzied hands that crossed the floor in an agony of excitement, and the rich carpet under the dinner-cover was hanging half on and half off the open upright, as if she had been dragged from it by forces fruitless falling. On the floor beneath lay several pieces of broken china—vases and ornaments that Jeffrey had evidently spoken, but which, jerked off with the cover, had been left where they fell. The mantel-piece in front of the fireplace lay one of the rugs, tossed to and fro, and the bed itself had been in it on the floor or used it to smother her cries of misery or anger.

So much for the state in which the witness found the boudoir. The adjoining bedroom was in much better case, though it was evident to the lady's maid that it had been in since it was made up the day before. At least, such was the way the witness thought. By this token Mrs. Jeffrey had not slept the night, or if she had she had laid her head anywhere it had been on the rug already spoken of.

She could see no extreme mental suffering, so much more extreme than that in the boudoir, before witnessed, frightened her so that the tray shook in her hands as she set it down on the table among the countless objects Mrs. Jeffrey had always about her. The witness seemed to startle her mistress, who had walked to the window after opening the door, for she wheeled impetuously about and said Loretta saw her face. It was as if a blight had passed over it. Once gay and animated beyond the power of any one to describe, it had become in twenty-four hours a ghost's face, with the glare of some awful resolve on it. Or so it would appear from the way Loretta described it. But such girls do not always see correctly, and perhaps the lady's maid can be credited in that Mrs. Jeffrey was unnaturally pale and that her lips were tightly-like way of incessant movement.

Loretta, who was evidently accustomed to seeing her mistress arrayed in the most elaborate and much beggarmed, laid great stress on the fact that, though it was on the verge of evening and she was evidently going out, she was dressed in black cloth and without even a diamond or a flower to relieve its severe simplicity. Her hair, too, which was always her pride, was piled in a careless mass upon her head as if she had tried to arrange it herself and had forgotten what she was doing while her fingers were at work. Altogether, a strange figure! There was a cloak lying on a chair near which she was standing, and she held a hat in her hand, which Loretta saw no gloves. As the maid's glance and that of her mistress crossed, Mrs. Jeffrey spoke, and the effort she made in doing so was naturally frightful to the girl still more. "I am going out," were her words. "I may not be home till late—that are you looking at?"

Loretta declared that the words took her by surprise and that she did not know what to say, but managed to cover up her embarrassment by intimating that if her mistress would let her change her dress a bit, she would make her look more natural.

At this suggestion Mrs. Jeffrey cast a glance in the glass and immediately turned away. "Not to-night," her. But she seemed to think better of it the next minute; for, throwing herself in a chair, she bade the girl to bring a comb, and sat quiet enough, though evidently in a great tremor of haste and impatience, while Loretta combed her hair and put it up in the old way.

But the old way was not as becoming as usual, and Loretta was wondering if she ought to call in Miss Tuttle, when Mrs. Jeffrey jumped to her feet and went over to the window again, where she stood, fingers fresh haste of one who forces himself to take food in spite of hurry and distaste.

This was the moment for Loretta to have the letter in her hand, but she know how to do so. She felt herself to be under the closest observation and Mrs. Jeffrey till that lady, suddenly becoming conscious of the girl's presence, turned, and in the midst of the moans which broke unconsciously from her lips, made a violent effort at her old manner.

"Loretta," she said, "I am ill; I have been ill for two days. I don't like you to know it, but you can't help that!" Then, as the girl shrank back, added in a breaking voice: "When I am dressed, come downstairs and send no more for several minutes, and then simply throw the door open—I will call you—and then you see me here again I shall be quite like my old self. Forget how I have spoken to you. I shall have to have difficulty in finding the proper words to apologize, but I shall have been."

Of course Loretta promised, but she is not sure that she would have done so had not Mrs. Jeffrey, as if to herself if she had not heard Mrs. Jeffrey stop in Miss Tuttle's room on her way down, and that she had enabled her to go downstairs to her own room without encountering her, she had thought ever to have again. She'd in one of the lower rooms and was able to eat for days. In three hours afterward a man came from the stationer's with a box for Mrs. Jeffrey's suicide in the horrible house, and the lady's maid was not married only two weeks before.

As this last statement appears narrative and concisely told, the coroner had not interrupted it. When at this point in a little more excited Miss Tuttle and a groom broke from Francis Jeffrey's room, and the feelings of the whole assemblage seemed to find utterance in young wife's misery culminating in death by the hand that had been so lately nuptial? What could be more thrilling, or afford more choice to the lady's maid than the part she had played in since it was made up the day before at luncheon? By this token Mrs. Jeffrey had not slept the night, or if she had had laid her head anywhere it had been on the rug already spoken of.

She could see no extreme mental suffering, so much more extreme than that in the boudoir, before witnessed, frightened her so that the tray shook in her hands as she set it down on the table among the countless objects Mrs. Jeffrey had always about her. The witness seemed to startle her mistress, who had walked to the window after opening the door, for she wheeled impetuously about and said Loretta saw her face. Of course Loretta promised, but she is not sure that she would have done so had not Mrs. Jeffrey, as if to herself if she had not heard Mrs. Jeffrey stop in Miss Tuttle's room on her way down, and that she had enabled her to go downstairs to her own room without encountering her, she had thought ever to have again. She'd in one of the lower rooms and was able to eat for days. In three hours afterward a man came from the stationer's with a box for Mrs. Jeffrey's suicide in the horrible house, and the lady's maid was not married only two weeks before.

As this last statement appears narrative and concisely told, the coroner had not interrupted it. When at this point in a little more excited Miss Tuttle and a groom broke from Francis Jeffrey's room, and the feelings of the whole assemblage seemed to find utterance in young wife's misery culminating in death by the hand that had been so lately nuptial? What could be more thrilling, or afford more choice to the lady's maid than the part she had played in since it was made up the day before at luncheon? By this token Mrs. Jeffrey had not slept the night, or if she had had laid her head anywhere it had been on the rug already spoken of.

HOW TO FOLD A LETTER.

Only a Small Percentage of Applicants Know the Right Way.

"I see you have lots of applications," said the advertising manager to the business house manager who had advertised for a typewriter and bookkeeper.

"From all over New England," said the business man, jamming his pockets full. "But what some of the girls who answer are thinking of I can't imagine. Here is one girl who will come fifty miles to take a place at $5 a week."

"Can't you tell much as to their qualifications by their letters?"

"Can I? Well, rather. For instance, there is the writing; there is the spacing of the words; there is the way the letter is put together; there is even the way the letter is folded. Ever think that letters are folded so as to save time nowadays?"

"No," said the advertising man. "It's all I can do to get the stamps to put on 'em. My stenographer folds 'em all right, I guess. How should it be done?"

"Easy enough, simple enough, but folded wrong often enough," said the business man sententiously. "If your typewriter knows her business she takes the sheet and folds it up from the bottom toward the top, leaving the proper width for the envelope, then over from right to left and from left to right—so. Then when your letter is opened it is right side up. See?"

"I see," murmured the advertising man. "And how many applicants fold their letters that way?"

"Oh, three or four out of a dozen, perhaps. Quite a commentary on business as she is taught, eh?" remarked the business man as he strolled away.

FRENCH POLITENESS.

It Is Widespread, Oppressive and Sometimes Deserving.

During one summer which I spent among exclusively French people in a hotel at Saint-Germain I estimated that I lost quite twenty-four hours of each week saying good morning and good evening to the men, women, little children and dogs about me. If you encounter the same persons twenty-five times in the same day, you must smile rapturously, pause, at least shake hands if you do not kiss, ceremoniously inquire how he or she is "going" and ceremoniously bid him or her "au revoir" at parting. Not only every man and woman expects this, but all the little children coddle up to you, shake hands and exact the same amount of ceremony. Then every well regulated French family has a dog that more than likely occupies a chair and eats off a plate beside you at the table, so that it is considered churlish if you do not also stop and tell the dog "bon jour" and a minor's dozen times a day, pausing to take the paw which he is prettily taught to extend to you.

When the washerwoman brings home your linen, there are at least five minutes spent in ceremonious greeting and parting from her. In the operation of receiving and paying for linen you exchange "mercis" and "pardons" not fewer than ten times. Any other servicing person or tradesman who comes to do business with you throughout the day you similarly receive with "bon jour, monsieur," and "au revoir, monsieur," and you thank him and beg his pardon as often as you can possibly get the words into the length of time he has to stay.

No Place For Icemen.

"I had letters to a prominent official in Porto Rico," said a New York manufacturer of artificial ice plants, "and I went down to that island, thinking I had a sure grip on a big thing. I made an appointment by letter and on a certain day and hour was ushered into his office, and we had no sooner shaken hands than he turned to the attendant and said:

"'Jose, bring the gentleman a fresh glass of lemonade and see that it is good and cool.'

"It was hot enough to melt a dog, and I felt rivers of perspiration running down my back, and when that boiling hot lemonade was brought in I knew that I was done. So it turned out. I might have sold red peppers or horseradish, but as for ice—they didn't want any in theirs."

Animals Enjoy Racing.

Little pigs are great at combined play, which generally takes the form of races. Emulation seems to form part of their amusement, for their races seem always to have the winning of first place for their object and are quite different from those combined rushes for food or simultaneous stampedes in which little pigs are wont to indulge. Racing is an amusement natural to some animals, and, being soon taught by others, becomes one of their most exciting pastimes.—London Tit-Bits.

Why He Did Not Tarry.

The importunate lover had just proposed.

"Let your answer be a vowel with a consonant on either side of it," he gently begged her.

The charming girl smiled.

"Very well," she said. "Oil."

A Distrust of Literature.

"You are always more or less skeptical about what you see in print."

"Yes," answered the man who has his own ideas about things. "There may be at the bottom of a well, but it isn't an ink well."

Be good to your neighbors. They know all about your family skeleton and can tell some entertaining stories about it.

READ IT THROUGH.

"I would Spoil This Story to Tell It in the Headlines.

To use an eighteenth century phrase, this is an "after tale." Having happened in a small Virginia town in the winter of 1902, is a story very much of the present. Up to a short time ago Mrs. John C. Harmon, of Melfa Station, Va., had no personal knowledge of the rare cure tive properties of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. "Last January," she says, "my baby took a dreadful cold and I gave him Chamberlain's Cough Remedy as usual, but one of my neighbors told me how it had cured her little boy and I began giving it to my baby at once and it relieved her at once. I hardly think the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy fully realize the great good they are doing, or they cannot recommend it too widely as much as they do in favor. I hope all who read this will try it and be convinced as I was." For sale by all druggists.

Navigation on the lakes this spring will likely be delayed. The ice is reported to be thickest that has blocked the harbors for many years. It is claimed by some that unless tee breakers are brought up from the lower lakes navigation may not be opened until June, but this would seem to be exaggerating the situation.

COLDS ARE DANGEROUS.

How often you hear it remarked : "It's only a cold," and a few days later that the man is on his back with pneumonia. This is all such consequence has arisen, however slight, should not be disregarded. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy counteracts any tendency toward pneumonia. It always relieves and is pleasant to take. IS THE MASK OFF?

"What the nations are about to witness is a grand turning movement on the part of Russia against Britain, dogged opponents, Britain. As an incident of this operation Japan must be crushed. They must be cleared off Russia's flank, otherwise the advance of the Czar's forces cannot be continued across China. Japan stands between Russia and Britain, with which she has now in sight—to turn the British off their position in India and to shatter the British supremacy in the Persian Gulf and the Bosphorus, Lord Lansdowne, the British Foreign Minister, not long ago boldly announced in the House of Lords that Britain would fight any power that might presume to share the advantages of the Persian Gulf. All I have to say is that that is a question of strategy and strength rather than a question of official pronouncements."

Thus spoke a Russian general the other day, according to a St. Petersburg despatch, which, however, strangely resembles a despatch which might be composed in the translation of some New York newspaper office. It is not like "a well known Russian general" to throw aside the mask unless something is to be gained, and it is difficult to understand how Russia secures any advantage by taking the world into her confidence, and avowing intentions which she has hitherto disclaimed. Of course, everyone knows how Russia yearns to establish a foothold in India; how she longs to destroy British prestige in Persia, and how she pants to spread her influence south, through China and Thibet, to Afghanistan. But we do not believe any of these things because Russia told us of them.

British fears have always differentiated between Russia and the Russian people, and it is Russia that the statesmen fear. For the people, the common people, who are little better than slaves, accordant to Anglo-Saxon ideas of liberty, Englishmen have always had sympathy, mingled with pity. But the Russia that has made Siberia notorious, that has enslaved Finland and Poland, that spreads her police spies over all the world, and that menaces India, is quite another Russia, indeed. This is the Russia that is at war with Japan, the Russia that British is always watching. One reason why East feeling should exist more in England than in any other European country is to be found in the fact that London has always been a city of refuge for the persecuted. All sorts of agitators, Finns, Poles, and Jews, congregate there; escaped Nihilists make it their headquarters. In such numbers do they come that their influence is bound to be felt in London. These agitators or patriots (whichever they are) are always crying out against Russia. Many of them are able men, cultured men, and Englishmen who come in contact with them are prone to accept their interpretation of the word Russia. For fifty years or more this anti-Russian movement has been gathering strength. It might never be serious, but added to real grievances it has had a powerful effect on the mind of the average Britson.

Had it not been for this sentiment, Great Britain could never have been dragged into her dead and last open clash with Russia in the Crimea. This war, which did not really concern Great Britain in the first place, was chiefly of France's making. The British Minister at Constantinople, Lord Stratford, had personal grievances against the Czar (who had refused to receive him at St. Petersburg), and his private animosity prompted him to take an anti-Russian attitude. The war grew out of a petty dispute as to equable between France and Russia regarding the custody of some holy places in Jerusalem. It resulted in Russia demanding that the Sultan of Turkey recognize Russia as the protector of the Greek Church in Turkey. All the powers agreed to this, but Turkey, encouraged by Lord Stratford, declined. Suddenly the Porte ordered all Russians out of its dominions, and followed this edict up by attacking some Russian troops. Russia retaliated by destroying the Turkish fleet at Sinope. This engagement, which had some of the features of a massacre, so aroused British public opinion that the Ministry was forced into the arena, and Britain became the ally of France.

In 1856, the very year when peace was restored, the Shah of Persia, thinking Britain was sufficiently engaged in the Crimea, seized the City of Herat, on Russia's advice, thus committing an overt act of war. The expedition of Sir James Outgram quickly ousted Persia of her love of fighting. Then for a few years no offensive move was made by Russia. But in 1870 instigated by Bismarck, she abrogated the treaty by which the Crimea had been restricted, and began fortifying the Black Sea. Britain protested, but was not willing to go to war, especially as Germany supported Russia, and France lay prostrated at the feet of the conquerors. So nothing came of the protest, and Russia carried her point.

Not long after this, Russian intrigue at Cabul brought on the war with Afghanistan, in which Lord Roberts so distinguished himself. The Czar's policy was to establish himself in this "buffer State," and use it as a base by which he might penetrate India, and be an outlet to the sea. In the years which have elapsed this policy has not changed. Russia, the great land country, needs, above everything, southern ports, and south-eastern ports. Britain's policy has been to keep Russia insulated, to seal up the Bear in his cavern. This, too, is the principle for which her stout little ally Japan has gone to war.

No Such Thing As Luck

In Successful Decorating

Successful decoration must be the outcome of study—of thought rather than of mere chance.

In the chance room there will surely be something wrong.

Possibly the color. Perchance Drawing Likely both.

Whether Chamber, Drawing Room, Living Room, Library or Den, the room must be treated with thoughtful proportionings, of furniture of complexion, of lighting, of size.

The environment of a room with North or East exposure must not be blue, while either West or Southern exposure may use blue to advantage

How about Crimsons, Greens and Brown—where may these colors be used—just ask your decorator, if he is worthy the name he can tell you.

We solicit your test of our ability on this or other decorative subjects.

MR. AUSTIN WAY DEAD.

PASSED AWAY AT THE FAMILY RESIDENCE YESTERDAY AFTERNOON.

Mr. Austin Way, who had been a sufferer with disease for some months, passed away yesterday afternoon at the family residence, West Bridge street. Deceased, who was 50 years of age, was a native of Prince Edward County, where he resided the greater portion of his life. Some two years ago Mr. Way came from the Wooler district to take up residence in this city, living a retired life. In the early part of last fall he had a severe attack of typhoid fever, from which he never recovered. Deceased was a member of the Methodist church. A wife, but no family, survives him. Byron Way, a former well-known resident, is a brother of the deceased.

Orange and Green.

A nice little evidence of good feeling was manifested yesterday, when Mr. James Cummins of Toronto, sent a letter to Kingston to Mr. Robert Lidbetter, a boy from Belleville to the Orange Grand Lodge. The letter contained a bunch of shamrocks tied with orange ribbon, and reached Mr. Puffin while the lodge was in session, the Grand Master pinning the "orange and green" on his breast amid loud applause.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY'S CONCERT.

Pretentious Programme Put on by Local Organization Last Night.

A Performance to be Proud of—Excellent Work by Belleville Singers.

The City Hall held a large and fairly representative audience last night, who had gathered to listen to the concert given by the Belleville Philharmonic Society, assisted by Mr. Harry J. Fellows, tenor, of Buffalo. Mr. Fellows is called a tenor presumably because he is able to attain a high scene, though he has not an iota of tenor quality in his voice. However, he is in many respects a fine vocalist, and we'll come to that later on. The piece de resistance of last night's programme was Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," a pretentious work for any amateur organization to undertake. That the local Philharmonic Society gave a highly pleasing presentation, with many bright spots in it, and but few dull ones, is as pure as anything the immortal G. Washington ever told. The attack and retreat of the chorus was good, but the balance was not as perfect as it might have been. Prof. Hunt had a glorious front row of sopranos, but the altos were decidedly weak. Once in a while the tenors came to the front nobly, but on the whole they were hardly heavy enough. Next to the sopranos the bass section was ample. It would do your heart good to hear them accompanying the man of 'em deserved a medal. One would hardly have believed that there was such quality and quantity of excellent bass material in Belleville. The solos and trios, to be it understood, were lacking in nothing but power; had they been stronger the tone color would have been better.

The soloists made a pretty picture as they took their places on the platform. Mrs. Campbell, graceful and debonair, was presented with a handsome bouquet by Mrs. Parker, amid much applause. Mrs. Hunt signalled with his baton and the sing-ing started. It was decided to fall rather flat at first, to put the truth. A stain when it got to the altos yes well-nigh inaudible, but the sopranos and male voices were strong in high scenes, and so a guarantee of something good to come. The first number was a solo by Mrs. Douglas White, with chorus of female voices. Mrs. White displayed some beautiful qualities of voice and method. Next came the "Prince Estatella" trio, and everybody sat back to listen to the star. The reputation was perfect overhead, though in some places rather too flowery. Mr. Fellows has a fine note at the top; fine control and a pleasing stage presence, that's the way Mr. Fellows impressed us during his work on the "Hymn of Praise." His fine voice was rendered with deep sympathy. In the chorus work he was lost, the basses appeared to great advantage. Next came a duet for soprano, sung by Mrs. Parker and Miss Vermilyea. The former lady had the opening number at first her voice evinced a trifle clouded. That quickly cleared away, and become until the music suited her voice to perfection. Mrs. Parker has sang many times in this city, but never so admirably, but never so well as on last night.

ANIMAL ODDITIES.

Statistics show that serpents kill more persons in India than in any other country.

Most reptiles are notoriously deaf, except caymans and crocodiles. The boa seems absolutely so.

The sense of smell in the snail has been found to be limited, as a rule, to a distance of about an inch.

The West Indian crab is a remarkable creature. Although born in the sea, it matures in fresh water and passes its adult life on land.

Shepherds allow their collies one meal a day, and on this allowance health and efficiency are secured. Ladies who are "good" to their pet dogs are rewarded by seeing their pets shaking rapidly into decrepitude.

A One Sided Celebration.

Uncle Ephim had put up a clean collar and his best coat and was walking majestically up and down the street.

"Aren't you working today, uncle?" asked one of his Caucasian acquaintances.

"No, suh. I's celebratin' my golden weddin', suh."

"You were married fifty years ago today?"

"Yes, suh."

"Well, why isn't your wife helping you to celebrate it?"

"Dat's my business wife, suh," said Uncle Eph'm, with dignity, "ain't got nothin' to do with it. She's de lev'enth."

She Helped Him Out.

"That's fine, Mollie," he asked, "about 'Ring in the new?' I've forgotten it."

"So have I," she replied, "but how wid this do:

"This dress I wear
Will never do;
Ring out the old,
Ring in the new!"

Clubs Where Members Talk Much.

Clubs where the members talk much are generally to be avoided. Talk makes mischief. There are one or two rather well known literary and professional clubs in London where members are freely introduced and personal gossip on the fashion, which has been pronounced too dangerous to be used by some of those who, for old association's sake, still keep their names upon the books.

Her Emergency Fund.

"I put $10 in the bank today, George."

"You'll have a tidy little sum there if you keep on. Going to buy something nice with it?"

"Mercy, no! That's my divorce surplus in case I need it."

Mary's Choice.

"Farmer Sawyer, what is your daughter Mary going to be when she finishes at college?"

"Waal, I kinder reckon she'll teach school. She thinks she'd like the vacations."

The Delicate Method.

"Let us talk of something we don't know anything about," he suggested.

"Such as what?" she asked.

"Marriage," he replied, after which they went into executive session.

Discontent is the want of self reliance. It is infirmity of will.—Emerson.

PHYSICIANS EVERYWHERE

KNOW THE VALUE OF PYRAMID PILE CURE.

"Gratitude does not prompt me to testify to the efficacy of Pyramid Pile Cure. Last March I bought a dollar package at the drug store which cured me of bleeding piles, and I was a sufferer from them for eight years; but I had not been troubled with them since, until last September, when I got a return to a many girt, and after that I had a very severe attack of protruding piles, which a friend advised me to try Pyramid Pile Cure. I saw one saw, and my doctor told me to get Pyramid Pile Cure again, which I did, and completely cured me in three days. I have not had piles but such slight pleces, and it is all owing to this wonderful remedy. My partner took a box which I was glad to be able to give her, for I know she will be able to help lots of suffering people from it as I never see or know.

"I always keep Pyramids' wherever I know of anyone suffering as I did. It gives me great pleasure to be able to tell how entirely cured, which my doctor says is true. I am, God bless Pyramid Pile Cure." From a former great sufferer, Mrs. E. Gertrude Lilly, 1st street Frankford, Philadelphia, Pa.

This remedy, which is sold by druggists generally, at 50 cts. per box and dollar packages, is in a supposition form, acts directly on the parts affected and performs its work quietly and painlessly. Its value is evidenced by the testimony given above, and we urge all sufferers to give it a trial. Don't wait to get worse before you get better. Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich., and will be sent free to any address.

DIFFICULTY SETTLED.

France Lets Go Her Rights to Shores of Newfoundland.

Paris, March 18.—It is asserted positively in authoritative quarters that the agreement between France and Great Britain concerning Newfoundland has been concluded. The details are not known, but the negotiative to Morocco, Egypt and Siam are progressing in such a satisfactory manner as to promise early conclusions similar to those in the case of Newfoundland, the difficulties over Newfoundland are of long standing.

TOLD IN A FEW LINES.

The loss by fire of Knox Church, Guelph, amounts to $10,000, covering a new $2,500 pipe organ.

Nelson Miles has left St. Marys-ville, Mich. He was a wealthy lumberman and was born in Nova Scotia.

President Roosevelt will not attend the formal opening of the Louisiana Purchase Exhibition and may not go at any time.

Lyman P. Paff, K.C., was Thursday sworn in as justice of the Supreme Court of British Columbia by Chief Justice Hunter at Vancouver.

Representations have been made to the Washington authorities that the Copper River Indians in Alaska generally are suffering from lack of nourishment.

On Tuesday night, 24, a street railway conductor, attempted to jump on the front platform and was caught between a pillar and the car, crushing his head, at Pinkhill, N.Y.

Lieut. Von Krohn has been condemned to four months' imprisonment for his share of the dueling duels with brother officers, in defence of family honor. Three accessories were condemned to 6, 15 and 24 months' imprisonment.

James Bay Railway.

Toronto, March 18.—A very influential deputation waited on Premier Ross yesterday and asked the aid of the Government for the James Bay Railway. Members of the Toronto deputation pointed out that the railway would be a part of the Canadian Northern system, while another deputation asked that when assistance was granted it should be upon the same terms as that the Canadian Pacific Railway be given running rights over the tracks of the railway. The several deputations united in asking the Premier to guarantee the bonds of the company, as the province would enable the company to finance its undertaking with cheap money without incurring any expenses.

Insure Registered Letters.

Ottawa, March 18.—Under power conferred by statute the Postoffice department has decided to institute a system of insurance of inland registered letters. The maximum amount to be insured will not exceed $25. The insurance fee for $10 will be two cents; for $15, four cents; for $20, five cents, and for $25, six cents. In addition, of course, the full postage and registered charges must be paid. Coins, articles of gold and silver, precious stones, jewelry and other articles of value must be put in strong cases in accordance with directions furnished by Postmasters. Envelopes with black or colored borders may not be used for registered or insured letters.

Breach of Promise Suit.

Hamilton, March 18.—Miss Gauley has instructed Washington & Boasley to issue a writ for $10,000 damages against James Salmon, Reeve of Binbrook, for alleged breach of promise, unless he consents to accompany her to the altar by next Saturday. The Reeve, who is 50 years of age, is between two fires. It is said that he really wanted to marry the girl, but was talked out of it by his sisters.

A FAMOUS SOLDIER DEAD

End Came Peacefully to Duke of Cambridge in the Cumberland Circle.

Marriage Was Not a Royal But a Happy One—Commanded the Highlanders and the Guards in the Crimea—A Strict Disciplinarian He Was Likewise Recognized As a Just Soldier, and in Him Young Canadians Had a Friend.

London, March 18.—The Duke of Cambridge died peacefully at Gloucester House at 10.35 yesterday morning. The Duke has been confined to his house for some weeks, but until yesterday it was not expected he was about with his accustomed activity, being, as he was his custom, a constant attendant at functions of a national or charitable character.

King Edward and Queen Alexandra were constant visitors to the sick room, and yesterday afternoon visited Gloucester House and tendered personal sympathy.

The title of Duke of Cambridge died with the last Duke, who was being born of a morganatic marriage, and his title also lapses at the disposal of the King a field marshal's baton, as well as an Order of the Garter.

It is expected that the remains of the Duke will be laid in state in Kew Palace, and a befitting display will be made at the funeral.

Career.

H. R. H. George William Frederick Charles Duke of Cambridge and Earl of Tipperary and Baron of Culloden, a Prince of the United Kingdom, Duke of Brunswick-Luneburg, K.G., K.T., K.P., etc., was born at Hanover on March 26, 1819. He was the son of H. R. H. Adolphus Frederick, third child and seventh son of King George III., and sixth brother of the Duke of Kent, the fourth father of Queen Victoria. He late Majesty and the first deceased Duke of Cambridge were thus first cousins.

The Duke's uncle became a colonel in the British Army, and succeeded his father, the first Duke of Cumberland, in 1851. Before his succession he married morganatically, Miss Louisa Fairbrother, a female dramatress, who died in 1890, by whom he had two sons, Hear-Admiral Adolphus Frederick Fairbrother, and Augustus Charles Fairbrother, born in 1847. The morganatic marriage is a German institution, practically unrecognized in Great Britain, and is expressly entered into as such on account of the lower rank of the wife in the lawful wedlock and renders the children illegitimate, but excludes from them and their mother from any claim to the father's rank or any hereditable property. In the case of the late Duke his marriage was a happy one, and his wife died on terms of intimacy with and was highly respected by, the late Queen.

In the Crimea.

In 1854 the Duke was raised to the rank of major-general on his appointment to command the two brigades of Highlanders and Guards united to form the first division of the army despatched to the Crimea, and served at the battle of the Alma, Balaklava and Inkerman, and at the siege of Sebastopol, which he assisted the medal with four clasps and the Turkish medal. Made a general in 1856, he virtually acted as commander-in-chief of the British Army, an appointment formally sanctioned at a later date and subsequently extended by Royal decree act in 1887. That position he held for 38 years, when he was at one with the scheme of army reform put in force in that year.

During his tenure of office he was made Colonel-in-Chief of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers (1861), and in the following year was raised to the rank of Field Marshal. He was also a Field Marshal in the Prussian Army, president of the College of Heralds, Lord Sandhurst and of the Royal Military College at Sandhurst, and Ranger of the London Parks.

Strict Disciplinarian.

Although in his fashion lately to cast not a little ridicule on the Duke's military capacities, actions as Commander-in-Chief on the changed conditions of the later years of his reign, he was generally recognized in the army as a just soldier and a strict disciplinarian. His knowledge of all army matters was complete and detailed, and he had a keen eye for any deficiencies in drill or uniform. Among the legend that circulated regarding his peculiarities and idiosyncracies, the one that invariably was made the only one of which he ever complained was a story to the effect that he was appeared in parade shuttered underneath an umbrella. This undoubtedly occurred, but which some use was made by the comic papers, is deeply resented, and as a matter of fact he was most punctilious in carrying out his official duties. Personally he was much respected and liked, and there were few more popular men than the word to say of the old Duke of Cambridge."

Died in 100th Year.

Bowmanville, March 18.—Mrs. Eliza Wright, the oldest resident of Durham County, is dead, at her home near Solina, about eight miles northwest of this town, in her 100th year. Deceased was born in Cornwall, England, in 1805, and with her late husband came to Canada in 1830, came to Canada in 1834, settling on the farm where she died. She was the mother of eleven children, six of whom survive her, besides sixty-three grand-children and over seventy great grandchildren.

Fined For March 21.

London, March 18.—Replying to Sir Liberal leader in the House, Balfour fixed March 21st for the debate on the vote of censure.

UNION JACK AT OTTAWA

Prime Minister, Too, Had a Frown At Black As a Thunder Cloud At His Misdemeanor—Parliamentary Temerity—The Militia Bill Explained—Great Number of Questions Answered By Ministers.

Ottawa, March 18.—Into sluggish House proceedings which were exactly one hour and forty minutes long, Henri Bourassa flung an issue which should be of the greatest importance, if not for his loyalty to the old flag. It was only a flash in the pan, but it shows the bent of Bourassa's mind. Walking up Parliament Hill on the day of the opening, so the member for Labelle told the House yesterday afternoon, he noticed that the Canadian flag, which used to be put up on the tower of the Parliament buildings, had been replaced by a Union Jack. Again, Bourassa advancing towards his duties on Parliament Hill, the member for Labelle discovered the Union Jack flopping his colors from the pinnacle of the tower. The double-barrelled shock was evidently too much for him, so when the orders of the day were called for, Bourassa rose to know why the old flag that had been used in Canada ever since Confederation should be superseded.

Sir Wilfrid Sarcastic.

The Prime Minister, with a frown as black as a thunder cloud, replied thus to his mischievous compatriot: "I am surprised that the honorable gentleman should take the rather fastidious view of the honorable friend, but I will make enquiries and I will give him an explanation upon another day."

"Perhaps the British Empire League has something to do with it," sneered the member for Labelle.

It was none other than the gallant and honorable Major Hughes, Colonel, Minister of Public Works, who precipitated the Imperial crisis. With a sigh of relief Sir Wilfrid surrendered the floor to him.

"I may explain to the honorable gentleman," said the Hon. James, "that the flag hitherto used on the Parliament buildings has been what is known as the Governor-General's marine flag. It is not the national flag in any sense, but the personal flag, as we understand it for this purpose, is the Union Jack."

Here the whole House applauded, and Mr. Sutherland continued: "Many communications reached the department on previous occasions that the flag floating over the Parliament buildings was not the authorized flag for that purpose, and when we were buying a new flag for one which was bought in accordance with the usage of the navy, and of all portions of the Empire was the one authorized for the purpose."

The Militia Bill.

What the country does not already know about the new Militia Bill Sir Frederick Borden explained in introducing the measure to the House yesterday. As the speeches and the address plainly indicated both sides of the House are practically at one in approving the general features of the bill.

Questions Swept Away.

Twenty-three "questions" were swept from the order paper.

Concerning the famous "Do-you-want-a-job letter" sent out by Jules P. Richard over the signature of Hon. Raymond Prefontaine, during the by-election in the James division, Montreal, T. Chase Casgrain, the interrogator, was told that the circular in question was not sent out under authority of the Department nor with the knowledge of the Government.

Replying to Jalel Robinson, the Minister of the Interior stated there were large areas of coal-bearing rocks in the Northwest Territories and British Columbia in the vicinity of Edmonton, north of the Saskatchewan, and near Port Simpson.

Mr. Smith of Wentworth, was informed that for the calendar year 1903 31 last 157,160 pounds of Canadian cheese were shipped from Canadian ports to Britain via the subsidized mail boats. None was carried in the unsubsidized vessels. Canadian mail matter sent via American ports amounted to 564,022 pounds. For the ocean-carrying of the Canadian mail via American ports $24,392.97 was paid.

Mr. Emmerson stated that surveys for the transcontinental railway had been taken west of Winnipeg under the direction of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. They have not yet been approved by the Government and no information as to the location of the road could therefore be given.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier informed Mr. Monk that the Government of Canada was invited by Premier Sheddon of New Zealand to join in a representation to the Imperial Government against the employment of Chinese labor in British South Africa. The Canadian Government replied that it did not consider such a course advisable.

Mr. Kemp was informed that no money is due by the Government to the banks of Canada. There was however a loan of $500,000 for six months at 4½ per cent., and another of $800,000 for four months at 4½ per cent. Both loans were floated in England.

The motions were speedily disposed of and the House, having shorn the order paper of practically its contents, adjourned at 4.40.

Steadman's Fatal Cancelled.

Cape Town, March 18.—Lord Milner, Lord High Commissioner in South Africa, has cancelled the permit granted to W. T. Stead, the well known English writer, to travel in South Africa, owing to the character of the speeches recently delivered by Mr. Stead.

willing to Help Him.

"My husband is so poetic" said one lady to another in a car the other day.

"Have, you ever tried rubbin' his flints with barbertons liniment, mum?" interrupted a beefy looking woman with a market basket at her feet, who was seated at the lady's elbow and overheard the remark. "That'll straighten him out as quick as anything I know of, if he ain't got it too bad."

His Favorite Book.

"They tell me," said the junior partner, "that the man to whom we have been sending so many bills begins to a rather fast set."

"Well," answered the senior partner, "he may belong to the fast set, but he's a slow settler."—Exchange.

A Chance for Investors.

The Cherry Creek Copper King Mines, Ltd., owns and operates the O.K. group, of six claims, situated about four and a half miles from the town of Kamloops, B.C.

The property has exceptional advantages, being exceedingly valuable, and as the surface indications on this vein are identical with those on the workings on the Last Chance, property owned by the B.C. Copper Mining Co., adjoining and joining on the west. The following extracts from Mr. Coleman's address to the shareholders at the annual meeting held in London, Eng., on the 15th Sept. last, will give data as to the prospective value of the O.K. group:

"On the Iron Mask at Kamloops we have expended £20,000 and think we may safely state this item is splendidly represented by the mine we have in process of development at Kamloops, and I believe you will credit us with having given you twenty millions for every pound expended on that mine. . . . . "

"If it is true that we have as we believe we have, a practically unlimited body of 2 per cent. ore in our mine at the Iron Mask, then in the words of one of the most eminent smelting millionaires in America, whom I met in the pleasure of meeting at Salt Lake City, 'we have got millions.' . . . . . "Kamloops ore is the best adapted for the direction of a smelter and the working of a mine." . . . . . "Already the water, the fuel and the grade of the ore are cheap, and the self fluxing nature of the ore is a point about as desirable as they could be. . . . . "

These ores are now being treated by a hard-headed London financier and smelter man, and other smelter men, who are developing their properties, are going to large profits under the direction of practical mining engineers.

"Besides the proximity of the mine to the railway, a short line of aerial tramway will be the cost of construction and would enable the company to transport their ore to the railway at the lowest possible ten cents per ton. Freight and treatment charges in the case of ore obtained are exceedingly favorable and are about $6.25 per ton, and Granby smelters at $6.25 per ton, so that the entire cost of mining, freighting and smelting will not exceed $5.00 per ton. The ore is a free milling ore, the gold averaging from 10 per cent. to 24 per cent. copper and from $5 to $8 in silver per ton, and is in great demand at the smelter owing to its fluxing qualities.

The near future will see the erection of a hydro-electric power plant to treat the ores of this district, both the B.C. Refining Syndicate and the Inland Smelter Company having already selected and purchased sites. The completion of these enterprises will insure the treatment of the ores at the smelter of local ores. The company has secured a site close to the property on the most favorable terms, the former owner allowing their confidence in the mine by accepting the entire purchase price in fully paid up shares of the company.

After paying all the expenses in connection with the option secured, the amounts due on options secured by the vendors for the purchase price of the O.K. group, there remains in the treasury two hundred thousand dollars, the proceeds from the sale of which are to be applied to the development of the property, now owned or to be hereafter acquired by the company. There is absolutely no promoters stock, and the issue advertised in another column is the first offered to the public to invest in the shares of the Company.

Struck Him Unfavorably.

Mr. Carnegie, who has recently into the possession of a considerable fortune, had decided to erect a large house in town. He started to consult the plans with an architect.

"As to the style," said the architect, "you would want them in mosaic patterns, I presume?"

"I don't know about that," responded Mr. Gaswell, dubiously scratching his jaw. "I hain't got any prejudice against Moses or anybody else, but I certainly knowed a good deal about law, but when it comes to laying down the law I don't seem to get the hang of my uncastarian-like. Don't it strike you that way?"

Hubbard's Death a Surety.

Quebec, March 19.—A courier brings a few details of the Hubbard expedition. It appears that after making a cache of their whole stock of provisions the party pushed forward in the expectation that they would find sufficient game for subsistence. They, however, had very poor success, and they were compelled to retrace their steps, weakened and exhausted for want of food. When within a few hours journey of their cache, Hubbard's strength failed him altogether, and his companions left to try and procure food. Though only gone a few hours their unfortunate companion died in their absence.

C. P. Barton's Suicide.

Lindsay, March 19.—C. H. Barton, the Grand Trunk station agent at Haliburton, ended his life at that village by drinking blue vitriol. Owing to the continuous blockade and the dreadful state of the roads particulars are only now available. It appears Barton, who had commenced his duties only a short time ago, was seized with a feeling of loneliness, being away from his family and among strangers. His melancholy increased until driven to the rash act of ending his life.

Johannesburg, March 19.—The report that Lord Milner, the British High Commissioner in South Africa, had cancelled the permit issued to William T. Stead, the English writer, to travel in South Africa owing to the character of the speeches recently delivered by Mr. Stead, is officially denied.

RUSSIANS SPLIT FLEET

Tried to Get United But Were Unsuccessful.

Russians Have Crossed the Yalu River to the South, Advancing Towards the Japs—China Is Giving the Russians Some Trouble, and Minister Lessar Threatens That Russian Troops Will March on Pekin—Understood That China Has Refused to Recall Her Troops.

London, March 19.—This morning's papers contain vague rumors of unsuccessful attempts of the Port Arthur and Vladivostock squadrons to join hands.

The Standard's Tientsin correspondent says that Paul Lessar, Russian Minister to China, has renewed his protest against the dispatch of Chinese forces outside of the Great Wall, and intimated that unless they were withdrawn Russia may be compelled to act on the assumption that China is abandoning her neutrality in favor of Japan.

The Minister is also reported to have renewed his threat that on the slightest movement on China's part, Russian troops will march on Pekin.

It is understood that in reply to this, the correspondent says, China refused to recall her troops.

The Newchwang correspondent of The Times, cabling under yesterday's date, asserts that there are no Japanese north of the Yalu River, and that not any of their scouts have been there since the beginning of March. On the other hand, the correspondent says, the Russians are reported to have crossed the Yalu to the north, leaving a small force to guard the river.

Japs at Pinyang.

St. Petersburg, March 19.—Under yesterday's date Viscrop Alexieff cables from Mukden as follows:

"Gen. Mishtchenko reports that Pingyang is occupied by Japanese infantry with seven guns, and that Coreen carts are carrying their supplies. The enemy's cavalry is not visible in large bodies, and only isolated horsemen are seen. Their horses are poor.

"Our patrols discovered the presence of the enemy's infantry on the banks of the Cheng Cheng River five versts (about 3 1-3 miles) from Anju. The enemy opened fire and killed one of our horses."

Was Left Port.

Paris, March 19.—The Petit Parisien's St. Petersburg correspondent cables: "I learn from a sure source that the Russian Vladivostock squadron has left port. The officials absolutely refuse to discuss the destination of the squadron. Seventy-two hours have passed since the ships left Vladivostock."

Hit By Floating Mine.

St. Petersburg, March 19.—Concerning the loss of the armored cruiser Bayarin at Port Arthur, a private letter received here says the vessel was struck by a floating mine dropped by the Japanese. Naval engineers are preparing to raise the Bayarin, though it is considered doubtful that she will be fit for fighting purposes, as it is feared that the tremendous concussion sustained from the explosion of the floating mine has more than likely strained the frames.

WAR NOTES.

St. Petersburg, March 19.—Admiral Stackelburg says that the war will be of long duration, judging from the extensive Japanese preparations.

New York, March 19.—A Paris despatch from St. Petersburg says it is reported that Vice-Admiral Stark, who was relieved from the command of the fleet at Port Arthur and crippled after the battle of Feb. 8, has tried to commit suicide.

Three Colonists Killed.

Port Arthur, March 19.—A wreck is reported to have taken place at Missanabie, on the Canadian Pacific, yesterday morning. A colonist train left the rails, fourteen cars being smashed up. Three colonists are reported killed and a number injured.

33 Executed at Osro.

Seoul, March 19.—Thirteen accomplices in the murder of the queen in 1895 were executed by strangling in the city prison. Twenty-two highwaymen were similarly executed at the same time.

CONTROLLED ASSEMBLY

Opposition Permitted Government to Withdraw a Motion.

Mr. Harcourt Recognized That Government Was in a Minority When Conservatives Challenged a Vote—Dr. Nesbitt Sprang a Resolution Which Government Begged Him to Withdraw—Then Conservative Motion to Adjourn Was Agreed to.

Toronto, March 19.—In the Legislature yesterday the Opposition adjourned the House, for the first time in the history of the Liberal Government of this Province.

Dr. Beattie Nesbitt moved, "That in the opinion of this House, the islands in Lake Temagami should not be sold, but leased, to intending residents, and that only one island should be leased to each person."

Dr. Nesbitt said the object of the resolution is to prevent the islands from falling into the hands of speculators. The doctor explained that Lake Temagami was destined to become one of the finest summer resorts in America, and to allow the islands to be gobbled up by speculators and held at high prices would discourage tourists from taking advantage of the delightful scenery and air of that northern region.

Asked in Kindness.

Hon. Mr. Davis wanted the motion withdrawn, assuring the mover that he had taken pains to inquire into the visability of limiting each purchaser to one island, or a portion of an island. Timber estimators would be sent among the islands to get an idea of their value before any action would be taken. Dr. Nesbitt, however, refused to push the question to a vote. The Attorney-General and the Premier pleaded in vain, and, the doctor being obdurate, the Opposition then threw a scare into the House, that it might be well to postpone discussion until another day. "Move to adjourn, and I will move the adjournment," suggested Hon. Premier.

"Why don't you move it," came promptly from Mr. Whitney.

"I'll do it," replied Hon. Mr. Harcourt. "Move we adjourn."

The Opposition sat silent, while the ministers busied themselves with whispered conference on the best means of extricating themselves from the difficulty. One after another got up and talked to the resolution, while the two Government whips hurried about trying to muster a majority. The Conservative whip sat in his seat.

Limited to Ten Minutes.

Under the rules, a member may not speak more than ten minutes on a motion to adjourn. The Attorney-General was the first to transgress. Dr. Nesbitt watched the clock closely, and insisted on the rule being observed. The Speaker consulted his manual on numerous occasions, and had his hands full settling minor disputes while the debate went on.

Finally Mr. Harcourt asked to have his motion withdrawn, as to let it go to a vote meant defeat. The whole Government side could talk it out in a few hours, with each speaker confined to ten minutes; and the next best thing for the Government was to allow the discussion to go on on the original motion, when there would be no limit of time.

Dr. Nesbitt, however, projected another motion, which was to adjourn the House. This was at 5.20 o'clock, and at five minutes to six the Government agreed to it without further discussion. In the meantime three or four speakers had been put up to talk ten minutes.

Premier Pleads.

The Premier pleaded for the withdrawal of the motion, as nothing could be done this year anyway, and the mover should be content with the assurance that the Government would protect the interests of the people.

Dr. Nesbitt still refused to withdraw, and Mr. Caldwell was put up to move an amendment that it would be premature to lay down any policy with regard to the islands until detailed information had been received.

Routine Business.

There was very little business done during the afternoon.

The following bills were introduced: Mr. Carscallen, respecting conveyancing; Dr. Beaume, to amend the Marriage Act; Dr. Beaume, to amend the act respecting coroners; Mr. Harcourt, to amend the Education Department Act.

Mr. Hendrie moved that the bill of the London, Hamilton and Lake Erie Railway Co. be recommitted to the Railway Committee for further consideration. The Attorney-General suggested that Mr. Hendrie put the motion for Tuesday. This was done.

The following bills were read a third time: To confirm a sale by the city of Guelph to the King of certain lands in the city; respecting houses of refuge.

Hon. Mr. Davis gave Mr. Carscallen (Hamilton) the total acreage of mining lands sold during the years 1898 to 1903.

To Mr. Reid the Premier said no definite application was received from the G.T.R. in the spring of 1903 for a land or money grant.

INDEPENDENTS CONDEMN IT.

Every independent paper in Canada of any account condemns the great railway blunder, which the Laurier Government proposes to perpetrate in favor of the Grand Trunk, and they all unite in pointing out that the "modified" scheme is far worse than the first one presented. The Ottawa Journal, a paper which leans strongly towards Liberalism, has this to say of the scheme:

Why should not Canada build the proposed transcontinental railway, if the railway be needed? Canada is to pay the cost, anyway.

There is one reply. We will give it later. Meanwhile, let us see about the cost.

By the G.T.P. agreement, the transcontinental railway consists of two sections: the eastern, from Moncton, N.B., to Winnipeg; the western from Winnipeg to the Pacific.

The eastern section the Dominion Government is to build, Canada therefor pays the cost, does it not?

The western section the syndicate is to build—with a Government guarantee of 75 per cent. of the cost. Three-quarters of the cost. In other words, the syndicate will borrow money to the amount of three-quarters of the entire expenditure, the Government guaranteeing that the money will be repaid. Now, all of us may be perfectly certain that three-quarters of the cost in this case means the whole necessary expenses of construction. All of us may take it for granted that the G.T.P. syndicate is not going into this scheme out of philanthropy; the promoters propose to make money; they will make it out of the construction of the line which will be presented to the Government as the actual cost of construction will assuredly come up in some shape or other big profits for the men on the ground floor. The Government, therefore, we believe, will be guaranteeing 75 per cent. of the nominal cost be practically guaranteeing to the syndicate a good deal more than what would be the whole cost of construction if the Government were to build the road itself.

(While is why we say that Canada is to pay (or become liable for) the whole cost of the G.T.P. scheme. From Moncton to the Pacific.

Yet Canada is not to own the road, not to have any control over it—nor even now is to have the right to purchase if the G.T.P. company defaults on its bonds.

The reason was made that one reply was possible to the question why Canada should not own this railway seeing that Canada has to pay for it.

The reply is, of course, that the Government would have to operate the road and might lose a lot of money in doing so.

That does not follow. The road when built could be leased, if that were thought well.

But supposing that the Government decided to operate the road, neither does it follow that there would be a heavy loss.

(We will be told that the Intercolonial loses heavily.

True. But the Intercolonial was not built to pay. It was not a commercial undertaking. It was built in a manner that, as for national purposes, it has served its end well, so far as national purposes are concerned.

The new transcontinental road, if it is a genuine commercial undertaking, is more likely to pay than the Intercolonial Railway; and if the new transcontinental road is more of a national than a commercial scheme, the desirability is vital that it should be a national property.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Too bad we can't have that rotary bath here this summer. But the promoters were too modest in asking $6,000. They should have asked for $6,000.

Talking of that new home, now. Have the Aldermen considered that there may be a fire sale in a few days, and they may be able to purchase home cheap?

The idea of those horrid Kingston fellows coming up here and beating Albert's basket ball team! It's a wonder the pretty College girls didn't scr-r-atch their eyes out.

Plenty of water in the wells nowadays. Ditto cellars and gas pipes. Judging by appearances, the pipelets will be about the only dry places to-morrow.

Don't imagine, because we are going to have a one-horse mower for the park, that the Park Committee is a one-horse institution. Nay, nay, Pauline!

Rev E. B. Moseley, of Port Hope, has been invited to the pastorate of the Dundas Street Church, London, Ont. The Rev. gentleman can go if he wants to, but we'd never go to a church with a name like that.

Shades of Monroe, Jefferson et al., what do you think of this: News has reached New Orleans that the South American republics are organizing for mutual protection against absorption by the United States. Don't those benighted people know that the Monroe doctrine was promulgated for their special benefit? And they turn and read the hand that lovingly guards them and would "take them in!"

About the most unkind thing ever said about Mr. Andrew Carnegie was said by the man whom, of all others, he professed to admire most in the world, Mr. Carnegie had written a book, and Mr. Gladstone read it, after which the G. O. M. remarked that he admired the courage of a man who without knowing how to write, wrote on a subject of which he knew nothing.

The Ancient Order of United Workmen will hereafter admit women to their order, and you just see if some of these men won't try to put all the work on the ladies in future.

The only thing that the Hamilton Times is sorry for these days is that Hon. Mr. Tarte is not bottled up in Port Arthur.

In Hamilton, as in Belleville, liquor licenses are only supposed to be granted to places which have hotel accommodation. A day or two ago a convention met in Hamilton, and some of the delegates tried, without success, to obtain hotel accommodation at 24 places which sold liquor. This is a sample of the way the Ross Government officials enforce the law. No wonder it fails to give satisfaction. (What is true in Hamilton is without doubt true in every other city and town in Ontario. Most decidedly it is in Belleville.

Mr. Bourke Cockran, champion tall twister of the United States, lectured in Ottawa on St. Patrick's day and was, a despatch says, "very warmly received in the Premier's box." Why, of course. The Premier dearly loves to fraternize with people who wang-whang Great Britain and lose no opportunity to belittle her in the eyes of the world. He even went so far as to breakfast with Redmond, the man who publicly prayed for the success of the Boers in the late war. Oh! yes, Sir Wilfrid has a warm reception for anybody whom specially is "knocking" Great Britain.

If the Japs raise the Russian warship Variag, and use her against the Czar's navy, it surely will be Variagravating to the latter.

It looks as though the beginning of the end was in sight in the Ontario Legislature. Another humiliating defeat like that of yesterday and any self-respecting Government would resign. But then the Tassies neither have the respect of themselves or other people. For all that it appears reasonably certain that Ross' days are numbered.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

AN EXTRAORDINARY ATTRACTION.

All the superb scenery and costumes of the original production of Julia Arthur's great play, "Mora, the Queen," will be used when the piece is presented at the Carman on Wednesday next, with Mr. Wm. Humphrey in his original creation of Napoleon and Miss Annie Sutherland as Josephine. When the play was first presented at the Broadway Theatre, New York, one of the most distinguished critics asserted that "as a spectacle, even in this day of luxurious stage sights, seldom has this been rivalled in richness, taste and sumptuousness. All the interior scenes are painted with an attention to detail true to nature that is positively startling in its realism." This will undoubtedly be the theatrical event of the season in Belleville.

GETTING IN THE WALNUTS.

An Industry That Closes California Country Schools.

The first English walnut orchard in California was planted with seed from the Los Angeles mission gardens, where the padres had started a few trees with nuts brought with them from Spain. The undertaking was a success from the first, and the acreage of walnuts has steadily increased. The walnut tree's early age of bearing, its long life and the steady demand for the product tend to make the enterprise deservedly popular.

The walnut tree begins to bear when six or seven years old, and nothing is known definitely of its age limit of bearing. Fabulous stories are told of trees in Spain one or two centuries old bearing enormous crops. The oldest trees in California are still bearing, but deductions from the short history already made show that the tree is in its prime from its twenty-fifth to its thirtieth year. Fifteen hundred pounds of nuts to the acre is a good average yield, making seventy-five pounds the average weight from one tree.

The harvest time begins about the middle of September and lasts nearly six weeks. The nuts begin to fall with the leaves, and the perfect cultivation under the trees leaves no chance for them to lose themselves among clods or weeds. The brown dead leaves alone hide the nuts. Under normal conditions they drop free from the outer husk, or hull, through its irregular bursting, and getting the nuts picked up is a simple matter. Sometimes the trees are well irrigated just before harvest time to insure the clean dropping of the nuts.

Boys and girls, men and women, Japanese and Chinese, are all pressed into service, and as hands and knees the great orchards are gone over, not once, but several times, on account of the irregular ripening of the nuts. The trees are occasionally shaken during the season to loosen the nuts, and before the last gleaning they are "poled" to start the very tardy ones. This is done by long, coarse bamboo poles, whose light weight makes them easily handled.

In certain rural districts the public schools close regularly for a "walnut vacation." The help of the children is needed, and the children are nothing loath to replenish their diminished purses. Rolls and gunnysacks are scattered among the pickers, and when the bags are full they are carried to the drying grounds, where they are spread out on slat trays to dry.—Review of Reviews.

THE EVERGREENS.

Scotch Pine.—Two bluish green, short needles in a bundle.

Hemlock.—Small hanging cones; flat spray.

Red Cedar.—Bluish berries; sharp prickly spray.

White Cedar.—Cones roundish, with four to eight seeds under each.

Discontent With Work.

That there is much discontent with work among the so called middle classes in America is due in large part to the pampering of children, to the supplying of their natural and artificial wants and to the sentimental idea that "their day of toil will come soon enough." In general, work is not a curse, but a blessing—a positive means of grace. One can hardly begin too early to impress upon children lessons of self help by tasks appropriate to their age and forces and to beget in them scorn of idleness and of dependence on others. To do this is to make them happy through the self respect that comes with the realization of power and thus to approximate Tennyson's goal of man, "Self reverence, self knowledge, self control."—Century.

Do It Now.

The following sentiment has been variously attributed to Stephen Grellet, Sir Rowland Hill, Edward Courtenay and the Earl of Devon, and is said to have been inscribed upon the tombstone of the latter: "I expect to pass through this world but once. If, therefore, there be any kindness I can show or any good thing I can do to any fellow being, let me do it now. Let me not defer it nor neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again."

Premature Fatigue.

Wealthy American Father-in-law—Look here, count! I'm getting tired of paying your debts. Count Boylon de Bakkovinsck—So soon? Sare, you haf not paid ze half of ze debts yet!

Meat Go Abroad.

"What makes you think they are rich Americans?"

"Because they know so much more about other countries than their own."

Not In His Line.

Employer—You don't seem to be able to do anything. New Clerk—Well, I always had a political job until I struck this one.

There have undoubtedly been bad great men, but inasmuch as they were bad they were not great.

Are you feeding your pigs on the food that develops brain and muscle and your children on the food that simply produces fat and heat?

No farmer wants to increase the brain and muscle elements in his cattle. Yet through ignorance of the laws of Nature he feeds them on the outer coatings of wheat (which contain the brain and muscle-producing elements) only grinding the starchy kernel of the grain (which practically contains only the fat and heat-producing elements of wheat) into white flour to make bread for human beings.

To be physically and mentally fit you require every element in the whole of the wheat. The only food you can get it in is —the only naturally organized food in the world. The shredding process makes it light and porous, thus presenting the greatest surface to the action of the digestive fluids, which makes it easy of digestion.

SHREDDED WHOLE WHEAT BISCUIT AND TRISCUIT

As whole wheat contains in exact proportions every element required by the human body, it follows that it must necessarily nourish every element of the body.

Triscuit the electrically baked whole wheat wafer, which contains no yeast, fats or chemicals, takes the place of ill-nourishing bread or crackers and makes ideal toast.

Make Triscuit your daily bread.

FISHING IN FORMOSA.

Their Rods Superb, but Their Hooks Without Barbs.

Three of us, two Americans and one Japanese, started out in jinrikishas from Taipeh, the modern capital of Formosa, or Taiwan, to go to the house of a wealthy gentleman about eight miles up the river which runs through the valley of Taipeh. The way led through a beautiful and fertile country, the valley covered with the second crop of rice and the hills with the famous Formosa tea shrub. After luncheon and after photographing some head hunting savages we found there we proposed to fish for salmon trout at an altitude less than 250 feet above sea level and in latitude about 24 degrees 40 minutes north, practically in the tropics. The temperature of the stream was about 70 degrees or higher, and the water was well aerated. This stream from 60 to 100 yards wide, is clear and full of rapids and riffles.

We used Japanese tackle—horsehair line and horsehair leader, the latter consisting of one strand only; a bamboo rod and a most delicate palmer tied on a small barbless hook. The rod is decidedly good and, weight for weight, is stronger and a better caster than our jointed rod. It rarely weighs an over four ounces (mine weighed about two), but the line is practically worthless for casting as we understand the term. The fly is perfect, but the hook lacks strength, and the fish when hooked may easily pull himself off on a current or an eddy or by fouling the line. We all know how it is done from our experience with pin hook and thread in the brooks at home.

The Japanese, however, have another method of fishing which may be as new to some of our readers as it was to me. It is quite successful. They catch one fish in any way they can and then fasten the line securely through its upper jaw, passing it through the roof of the mouth and out at the top of the upper jaw well in front of the eyes and then attach through the body of the fish not far in front of the tail a horsehair to which is tied a three pronged barbless hook, which trails in line with the fish and a few inches behind, while it is slowly towed up the stream by the fisherman. The theory is that other fishes, seeing the captive moving along as though feeding or perhaps spawning, will pursue it and before striking notice the hooks. In point of fact that does happen, as I saw a Chinaman take two fine trout in this manner.

Our success with the flies was poor. We got thirteen or fourteen fingerlings, but we knew the fish we wished to identify caught in fairly good numbers by the Chinese fishing with decoys.

Well, spring will be here officially on Monday, even if it doesn't exactly accord with the surroundings. So look out for the spring fever.

However, for a few days, it's just as well to leave the family snow shovel where you won't need a search warrant to find it.

This is the 49th time we have called attention to the fact that it's time somebody made a move in connection with the Old Boys' Reunion this summer, and if the hint is treated with neglect and scorn we propose in future to adopt a policy of dignified silence on the subject. The Old Boys and the Old Girls, too, can stay away for all we care.

If the Old Boys' Reunion had been any kind of a Diamond Jubilee celebration you'd have seen the Chairman of Gas with his coat off and sleeves rolled up long ago.

However, perhaps it's just as well the Old Boys won't come home this summer. Those Zwick's island improvements are not likely to be made and we wouldn't have any first-class drinking water to offer them, anyway.

"I do not wish to be termed a 'turn-coat' or 'straddle-the-fence,' but I must say I have been compelled to change my views as to how I shall mark my next ballot. My reasons are:—

"1. Any party after holding office for considerable time comes to grow particular cases with the interests of the people whom they represent, and—as in the case of Ontario Possession is since-tepths of the law; think they may do as they please. The Ross Government is no exception to the rule, unless it be an exception in the highhanded illegal methods of maligning themselves in power.

"2. Any party that attempts to muzzle the Press and suppress the most glaring misstatements of public surpluses when they are really increasing the deficit should be shown at the earliest opportunity it dishes out to the deficit means by giving the opposition a surplus of about 50 majority.

"3. Any party claiming to represent the Province and have not maintain for months and years a number of vacancies in the Legislative bodies should be taught an object lesson on the necessity of a full representation of them to vacate their over-comfortable seats and fight them with new and with more conscience.

"4. The opposition have been kept in the shade so long that it is time and high time that they in behalf of the people and control the Government according to newspaper and book agreement.

"Let us all unite when the next election is called and employ a new staff and 'clean house.'

This remedy does not put the disease to sleep, but drives it from the system. It neutralizes the acid and makes good, rich, healthy blood, and it is that the French Government continues to prosecute the clergy and religious orders.

GOADED DONATO TO KILL

Italian Fired Revolver Shot With Deadly Effect.

J. Meechan, C.P.R. Fireman, Lost His Life While Attacking Store of the Fruiterer at Fort Arthur—Attacking Party Was Intoxicated and Used Bad and Insulting Language—Italian Was Badly Beaten.

Fort Arthur, March 19.—An Italian named Donato is in jail here on a charge of murdering J. Meechan, C.P.R. fireman, of Fort William. According to John Beyers, carpenter, who was employed in the shop, a number of young men went to Donato's fruit and confectionery store on Water street. They were intoxicated, acted disorderly and attempted to get at the money till. Mrs. Donato, who was in charge of the store at the time, ordered the men out. They left, but two of them, Meechan, who was killed, and H. Lancy, went back a few minutes later. They became noisy, and, it is said, used some filthy language to Mrs. Donato, who screamed, and Donato, who was at the rear of the building, rushed in. He requested the men to get out, and told them that he would not have such language used in his house.

Struck the Italian.

Meechan then struck Donato in the face with his fist, and Lancy ran over to assist his companion and kicked Donato a number of times in the stomach. The Italian was getting badly beaten, when three other Italians who were in the store rushed to his assistance. They forced the men out of the store and braced themselves against the door. Meechan and Lancy made desperate efforts to get in, breaking one of the windows. Donato, smarting under excitement, ran and got a revolver and fired, one shot going wild and the second striking Meechan in the breast. It is supposed that Meechan had his arm up, endeavoring to protect himself as the bullet went through the fleshy part of the forearm. After being shot, Meechan walked to Bawyer's grocery, about fifty yards distant, when he toppled over into a ditch and died in a few seconds.

Gave Himself Up.

Donato, when he perceived the enormity of the crime he had committed, ran up to the police station and met Chief of Police Nichols just as he was coming out of the station, and said: "I am the man you are after; I did the shooting." He was taken into the station, where he produced the revolver and handed it over to Nichols. It was a .32 calibre, and two shots had been fired from it. Lancy, sometime during the fracas, received a stab in the abdomen, inflicted, it is thought, by one of the Italians with a knife. He was taken to Dr. McCrady's office, where his wound was attended to. He is not injured seriously.

Mob Was Furious.

Shortly after the shooting, hundreds of infuriated people crowded around the store, and for some time it looked bad for the prisoner, and it was thought the mob would endeavor to raid the police station and lynch Donato. As soon as possible he was conveyed to jail. Meechan's body was taken to the morgue.

George Did the Killing.

St. John, N. B., March 19.—The inquiry into the death of Millie Gee was concluded yesterday afternoon. The jury brought in the following verdict: "That the death of Millie Gee was caused by a rifle shot wound inflicted by George Gee." It is likely that the preliminary examination of Gee will take place at Woodstock today.

Guilty of Horse Stealing.

THEY DROVE PIMPLES AWAY. A face covered with pimples is not pretty. It tells of internal troubles. Articles which should long since have been consigned to the rubbish heap. Pimples are not performing their functions in the healthy way they should, and these pimples are to be. you know that the blood purifier, Ramsdale's Vegetable Pills will drive them all away, and will leave the skin clear and clean. Try them, and that will be another witness to their excellence.
If you have a good business, it is always better to stay where you are. Ramsdale's Vegetable Pills are the best tonic and the whole body grow up to wonderful health. The liver is filled with glucose and dismal forebodings. The stomach, the foundation of the digestive organs, sleeplessness come to add to the distress. But when the victim should sleep, there would be too oblivion for a while and the nerves, worn out, would rest. Ramsdale's Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep, but will set the machinery right, and the patient will walk refreshed and restored to happiness.
Within one gets hopping and to-morrow good morning.
A WONDERFUL CURE.—Mr. David Smith, Oro Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of Jaser's Pills I used so few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, that I will say ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was ill with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. A friend urged me to try Ramsdale's remedy, outwardly and inwardly to cure the sore lips and to do no purpose. I then thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, as I knew it had been used by a friend of mine, and before I had used about one-half the bottle I noticed relief, and from that time on I think they to cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."
Quick Relief. It does not always make the best chief.
THE PUBLIC should bear in mind that Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has nothing in common with the impure, deteriorating class of so-called medicinal oils, but is a highly refined and really efficacious—relieving pain and lameness, stiffness of the joints and muscles, and cures or hurts, healing as excellent specific for rheumatism, sought for bronchial complaints.

The Filigree Ball

BY ANNA KATHERINE GREEN

AUTHOR OF

"THE LEAVENWORTH CASE."

The coroner, taken aback by this direct question from one who had hitherto borne all his innuendoes with apparent patience, lost countenance for a moment, but, remembering that in his official capacity he was more than a match for the elegant gentleman, who under other circumstances would have found it only too easy to put him to the blush, he observed with dignity:

"Mr. Jeffrey, you are on oath. We certainly have no reason for not believing you."

Mr. Jeffrey bowed. He was probably sorry for his momentary loss of self-control, and gravely, but with eyes kept downcast, answered with the abrupt phrase:

"Well, then, I will say no."

The coroner shifted his ground.

"Will you make the same reply when I ask if the little forbearance was shown towards your wife's name in the conversation you had with Miss Tuttle immediately afterward?"

A halt in the eagerly looked-for reply; a hesitation, momentary indeed, but pregnant with nameless suggestion, caused his answer, when he did come, to lose some of the emphasis he manifestly wished to put into it.

"Miss Tuttle was Miss Jeffrey's bridesmaid. The bond between them was strong. Would she—would I—be likely to speak of my young wife with bitterness?"

"That is not an answer to my question, Mr. Jeffrey. I must request a more positive reply."

Miss Tuttle made a move. The strain on all present was so great she could not endure it. He looked at her, too, for his brows came together with a quick frown, as he emphatically replied:

"There were no recriminations uttered. Miss Tuttle had displeased me and I said so, but I did not forget that I was speaking of my wife and to her sister."

As this was in the highest degree unsentimental, the coroner could be excused for persisting.

"The conversation, then, was about your wife?"

"Yes."

"In criticism of her conduct?"

"Yes."

"At the ambassador's ball?"

"Yes."

Mr. Jeffrey was a poor hand at lying. That last "yes" came with great effort.

The coroner waited, possibly for the echo of this last "yes" to cease; then he asked with a coldness which jilted at once the veil from his hitherto well concealed antagonism to this witness:

"If you will recount to us anything which your wife said or did on that evening which, in your mind, was out of the ordinary, it might help us to understand the situation."

But the witness made no attempt to do so, and while many of us were ready to pardon him this show of delicacy, others felt that under the circumstances it would have been better had he been more open.

Among the last was the coroner himself, who, from a position of easy indifference and hesitation and moving forward his inquiries in a way to press the witness closer and closer to the point at issue, secretly broke out for him. First, he obliged him; for with his convictions fronting Jeffrey with witnesses who testified to his friendly, if not loving, relations which had existed between himself and Miss Tuttle prior to his engagement and his wife taking out the denial, by no means new, that any engagement had ever taken place between him and Miss Tuttle and hence that a bond had been broken by his marriage with Miss Moore.

With his manner and careful choice of words in making this denial did not lack the appearance of his entire candor; especially as Miss Tuttle, for all her apparent immobility, observed, by the violent locking of her hands, both her anxiety and the suffering which was undergoing during this painful examination. Was the witness the only one outraged decency? We felt justified in doubting it, and looked forward with cruel expectancy to the final question which we knew must come.

But this moment was as yet far distant. The coroner was a man of method, and this phase now must approve, as had been apparent to most of us from the first, that the assumption of suicide on the part of Mrs. Jeffrey was open to doubt. The communication suggesting such an end to her troubles was the strongest proof Mr. Jeffrey could bring forward that her death had been the result of her own act. Consequently it was now the coroner's business to test the value of this communication, as either a forgery, or a substitution, and that if she left some word in the book to which she had in so peculiar a manner directed his attention.

Some hint of what the coroner contemplated had already escaped him in the persistent and seemingly inconsequent questions to which he had subjected this witness in reference to these very matters. But the time had not yet come for a more direct attack, and the interest rose correspondingly high, when the coroner, lifting again the slight the scrap of paper containing the few pitcous lines so often quoted, asked if this now anxious and agitated witness, if he had ever noticed any similarity between the handwriting of his wife and that of Miss Tuttle.

An indignant "No!" was about to pass his lips, when he suddenly checked himself and said more mildly: "There may have been a similarity, I hardly know. I have seen but little of Miss Tuttle's hand to judge."

This occasioned a diversion. Specimens of Miss Tuttle's handwriting were produced, which, after having been duly proved, were passed down to the jury long with the suicide's note, which was reverently signed by Mrs. Jeffrey. The grunts of astonishment which followed the first glance at them drew near once these several papers were out of the jury's hands and finally to cry out with startling emphasis.

I know that those words were written by my wife."

But here the coroner asked him his reasons for this conviction, he could not have responded more promptly.

"I have said," he stolidly repeated; and that was all.

No comment made no comment, but when, after some further inquiry, which added little to the sum of our knowledge, he dismissed Mr. Jeffrey and called Laurence Tuttle to the stand in his tone which warned us that the really serious portion of the day's examination was about to begin.

CHAPTER XIII.

The appearance of this witness had undergone a change since he had last stood before us. She was shamefaced still, but her manner showed resolve and a feverish determination to face the situation which could be awaken in the breasts of those who had Mr. Jeffrey's honor and personal welfare at heart a suspicion already as if they already forsdaw the dark shadow of disaster that was slowly sinking over a household which in the past had been the envy and admiration of all Washington society.

Miss Tuttle's manner she made revealed both the cause of her shame and the nature of her firmness. In her response to the question whether she, with Mrs. Jeffrey, left the house she went cut on the walk she was said to have taken immediately after Mrs. Jeffrey's sudden departure from the house.

The words were these:

"I did sir. I do not think Miss Tuttle knew it. I do not think Mrs. Jeffrey's room."

The emphatic tone, offering such a contrast to her former manner of speech, might have drawn all eyes to her face, but not one person she mentioned offered a still more pronounced object for the general curiosity. As it was, all glances fell upon the figure of the witness, so passive figure upon which all questions and suggestions and current innuendo had been without effect for more than a pressure of her interlaced fingers. This attitude, the most natural, the most threatening—she had resolved to assume, and this was how she effect upon her that the subject, less, perhaps, for no still was visible in her face, and the words of her answer by seemed to breathe.

Thoroughly satisfied, led the gaze on to Mr. Jeffrey and even to Uncle Lloyd in the rear, the coroner drew his head again upon his hand, and the other—still, there was little of the latter to be seen—at that time, save the immense satisfaction he seemed to feel in the answer the witness returned to the witness, who, by the way, showed no sign of any executive tale.

As near as I can remember, these are the words with which she professed it:

"I am not especially proud of what I did that night, but I was led into it by others, and I am glad to help the lady's pardon." And then she went on to say how, after leaving the room where Mr. Jeffrey lay, the house, she went into her room with the intention of the night, as there by this was no more than her duty, no one could be found who would be she owned that when she had finished the letter she was not at all evidence of Mrs. Jeffrey's frenzied condition, she had no business to linger at the house, and that was the reason she found lying there.

The coroner stopped her and made some inquiries in regard to these last words, as they seemed to be the ordinary epistles from friends and quite foreign to the investigation, he allowed her to proceed.

Her cheeks were burning now, for she had found herself obliged to admit that she had read enough of these letters to be sure that they had no reference to the quarrel then pending between her mistress and Mr. Jeffrey. Her eyes fell and she looked seriously distressed as she went on to say that she was so conscious then as she of having in her hands with these papers; so conscious, indeed, that when she heard Miss Tuttle's step at the door, her own idea was to hide herself.

That could stand and face that lady never so much as occurred to her. Her own guilty consciousness made her cheeks too hot for her to wish to meet an eye which had never rested on her but with loo, kindness, so noticing how straight the curtains fell over one of the windows on the opposite side of the room, she dashed toward it and slipped out of sight just as Miss Tuttle came in. This window was one seldom used, owing to the fact that it overlooked an adjoining wall, so she had no fear of Miss Tuttle's reaching it. Consequently, she could stand there at her ease, and, as the curtains hung, hiding behind her had not come quite together, she really could not help seeing just what the lady did.

But, she encountered nothing there but eager anxiety for her to proceed, so without waiting for the coroner's question, she went on in many words:

She went first to the book-shelves."

We had expected it; but yet a general movement took place, and a few suppressed exclamations could be heard.

"And what did she do then?" asked the coroner, after looking carefully up and down the shelves."

"What color of book?"

"A green one with red figures on it. I could see the cover plainly as she took it down."

"Like this one?"

"I should say that one."

"And what did she do with this book?"

"Opened it, but not to read it. She was too quick in closing it for that."

"Did she take the book away?"

"No, she put it back on the shelf."

"After opening and closing it?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you see whether she put anything into the book?"

"I can not swear that she did; but then her back was to me, and I could not have seen it if she had."

The implied suggestion caused some excitement, but the coroner, refusing on this, pressed the girl to continue, making it plain that he had no room immediately after turning from the book-shelves.

Loretta replied that she could not, that the coroner had requested her for some minutes near them, gazing with her usual composure straight in mind, straight upon the floor; after which she moved in an agitated manner and with more than her previous look behind her into the adjoining room where she could not follow her evasion. As this bureau was devoted entirely to Mr. Jeffrey, Loretta experienced some surprise at seeing his wife's sister apparently in so stealthy a manner. Consequently she was watching with all her might, when this sister opened the top left-hand drawer and, with very evident emotion, thrust her hand into it.

What she took out, or whether she took out anything, Loretta could not positively say, for when Loretta heard the drawer being pushed back she was in the act of hastening close, perceiving that Miss Tuttle would have a full view of her head in coming back. However, she ventured upon one more look, and saw from just as that lady was leaving the room, and remembered as if it were yesterday, the pallor of her face looked, and how she held her left hand pressed closely against the folds of her dress. It was but a few minutes after this that Miss Tuttle left the house.

As we all knew what was kept in that drawer, the conclusion was obvious. Whatever excuse Miss Tuttle might give for her visit to her sister's room at this time, but one thought, and that of course, was that she would have taken her to Mr. Jeffrey's private drawer. She wished to see if his wife had left there a will that had been taken away by her sister,—a conclusion to which the events of the which her thoughts had flown at this crisis, and which she had not seen her leave the house without dread or suspicion of her act.

The temerity which had made it possible to accuse the sister of such a man as Francis Jeffrey with an outrageous crime having been thus in a measure overcome, the coroner recalled that gentleman and again thoroughly examined him upon these points.

Had the witness accompanied his wife to the Moore house?

"No."

Had he met her there by any appointment he had made with her or with third parties in order for them both by some third person?

"No."

TROUBLESOME BABIES.

Babies are but naturally troublesome — they should be bright, active and happy and a joy to your friends. When the little tormentors you may dispend upon it there is some of the many minor ailments bothering him. These can all be overcome by Baby's Own Tablets. Proof of this is given by Mrs. C. L. The Fraternal Societies of Belleville

SHORT SKETCHES OF THEIR HISTORY AND PRESENT STANDING.

THE ORANGEMEN.

The history of Orangeism in this district is known to go as far back as 1833, for in that year a warrant was issued by L.O.L. No. 102, of Belleville. The lodge met in a house occupied by the late James Wilson, but was removed to Roslin in 1845. The old records, unfortunately, cannot now be found. The warrant for L. O.L. No. 274 was originally issued in 1846, but to whom the present records do not show. It was reissued on February 6th, 1844, to the late Senator Robert Read, and the minutes from that date to the present are in possession of the lodge. A fire occurred in 1872, which destroyed the lodge building, warrant and other contents, and a reissue of the warrant was made to Jason H. Post, (now in Victoria, B.C.) on July 10th, 1872.

"What do I know of the early history of Orangeism in this district?" said an elderly gentleman, when approached by the writer with the above question; "well, the first thing I remember about Orangeism is that, when a boy of 14, I was being pelted with eggs on a stoppingplace where the Post Office now stands. The position became so hot to my father, who lived in a house at that spot, it was the 12th of July, I don't remember where I learned it, and at the time I didn't know what the tune was, but I was whistling "The Protestant Boys" with all the power of my lungs. My stepmother, a North of Ireland lady, came out and said, 'Here, you stop whistling that tune, or you'll get your head broke.' 'What's wrong with the tune?' said I. 'Nothing,' said the good lady, 'but if any of those drunken fever drivers hear you they'll make you whistle another tune.' I stopped, and that incident fixed in my memory the events of that day and why my first introduction to Orangeism. That was in 1837, and the streets were pretty well filled with parties of fever driver drivers, who had knocked off work for a day, delighted at the prospect of a "brush" with the Orangemen. I remember that, that night, they broke some windows in the house of the late Mr. Henry Corby, who lived then on the north side of Bridge St., at the east end of the Lower bridge. Feelings ran high in those days," concluded the speaker, with a smile of retrospection.

But to return to L.O.L. No. 274 and its history. The members of No. 274 are said to take pride themselves particularly on one thing, namely, that from their members have come more than one Lodge of B.N.A. officers than from any similar organization in Canada, nearly a round basket. But they go further than that, and dwell gladly on the fact that one of their members, the late George Benjamin, was at the time a Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of British America, was the first to advocate the organization of a system by which the Orange Order throughout the British Dominions could hold intercourse, which afterwards materialized into the present "Imperial Grand Triennial Council of the World," as is evidenced by the following resolution, passed at the meeting of the Grand Orange Lodge of Ireland, 29th August, 1865, viz.:—

Resolved, "That the warmest thanks of the General Central Committee are due and hereby given to George Benjamin, Esq., Past Grand Master of British North America, for the valuable suggestions he has made, with a view of more closely uniting the Institution throughout the British Dominions, and that such suggestions are highly approved of."—(Signed)

ENNISKILLEN, G.M.
JAMES H. MOORE,
Grand Sec. pro. tem.

And L.L. No. 274 has still another thing to be well satisfied with, for we think by reference to a copy of The Intelligencer, published April 3rd, 1847, that, when was believed to be the first edifice erected for and solely occupied for the purpose of Orangeism, was erected in this city by the members of L.O.L. No. 274. Who shall say that this old lodge has not a worthy past to look back upon and its memories must be long spread out.

The earliest records of the local lodge show that in 1844 it was governed by the following officers: Master, Robert Read; secretary, Master, Robert Read; secretary, Mackenzie Bowell; treasurer, R. M. Clarke.

In 1845 the lodge had the following officers: Master, Robert Read; Deputy Master, D. Young; Secretary, Mackenzie Bowell; Treasurer, R. M. Clarke. In August, 1845, Messrs. Geo. and Wm. Johnston Taylor presented the lodge with a lot in Belleville on which to erect a hall. Messrs. J. P. Morden and Daniel Ackerill were also connected with the gift. At this meeting Messrs. Geo. Benjamin, Robert Read, J. Young, M. Bowell, R. M. Clarke, G. G. Lewcombe, Thos. Parker and J. P. Morden were appointed a committee to superintend the erection of the hall in question, which was finished and dedicated on March 29th, 1847, but of that more anon.

In 1846 there were the same officers as in the previous year, and on March 16th, 1846, a pleasing event took place, which is explained by the following letter, the same having been read to the members in session:

"Worshipful Sir

"The brethren of Lodge 274 have witnessed the advance of the institution and have witnessed the fact of one of their humblest members raise to the very highest pinnacle in the institution. That Brother, then, desires to bear this mark with the lodge, that it may perpetuate the recollection of this fact when he the present generation has passed away and others have succeeded to it. Will you, then, be pleased to present this, together with the enclosed, and ask the brethren of 274 to accept the same from,

Worshipful Sir and Brother,
Your obedient Brother
GEO. BENJAMIN.

The medal referred to is a large silver one, ornamental in the Freemason's elevation to the office of Grand Master of the Grand Orange Lodge of British America. It is still, as the writer was informed, in possession of the lodge.

The year 1847 found the same officers still at the head of affairs, and this year was a momentous one for L.O.L. No. 274, as before stated, it was in March, 1847, that the new hall was dedicated. The building in question was situated on John St., near where Dr. Ackerill's residence now stands. It is remembered on was no better than quote the article describing its dedication, which appeared in The Intelligencer at the time, and which, we are sure, will be read with interest by many descendants of those who took part in the proceedings, though probably the very large majority of those directly interested have passed to their reward:

"We believe the first edifice of the kind erected for and solely devoted to the purposes of Orangeism, has been completed in this town. The dedication took place on the evening of Monday last, and it is an event long to be remembered by those of the Brethren who were privileged to attend. The quiet and unostentatious manner in which this building has been erected and opened, could give offence to none, and we are pleased to be enabled to record the fact that our Roman Catholic fellow-townsmen do not and have not shown any signs of the jealousies of the Lodge No. 274, in thus unanimously conferring for the erection of a monument declaratory of their right to reserve to perpetuate and extend the principles of the glorious institution of which they are members. As to the evil that has been produced by this event, we may remark that those religious delusions proceeds to erect this building. Rooms for meeting are often employed about it, and on the day of the dedication many respectable Roman Catholics visited the hall, and appeared pleased with the manner in which it was arranged, fitted up and decorated for the occasion.

"Before the commencement of the edifice, many false enquiries that have been made, by those hitherto opposed to the institution, from fear of having credited the foolish and ridiculous reports put in circulation by factions and Orange principles, as to the real nature of its principles and its objects; but we have had the great gratification to say that the result of these enquiries has been to convince of such a number of highly valuable and worthy members, as to hear that it is the intention of the Brethren of the Lodge to commence preparations immediately for the erection of a large addition to their building. And most heartily do we trust that they may go on, and prosper, and that the example of this truly worthily shown may be followed by other lodges, and thus enkindle an enthusiastic spirit of attachment to land that will be followed by the increase of numbers and the rise of thousands of loyal and devoted members, to become partakers with us of the benefits of so great and glorious an institution. Let Orangemen be but firm in their principles, and make them the permanent guide of life, let them be firm in the repudiation of the degrading voices of nature, let them be so firm as his abilities extend, labor to sow the good seed of the principles of the institution far and near, over the breadth of this our land, and the refreshing showers of God's grace will be on them, and He will grant the increase.

WAYS TO ADVERTISE.

The Wise Man May Easily See Which Is the Best Method.

If you have goods to sell, advertise. Hire a man with a lamplock kettle and a brush to paint your name and number on all the railroad fences. The cars go whizzing by so fast that no one can read them, to be sure, but perhaps the obliging conductor would stop the train to accommodate an inquisitive passenger.

Have your card in the hotel register by all means. Strangers stopping at hotels for a night generally buy a cigar or two before they leave town, and they need some inspiriting literary food besides.

If an advertising agent wants your business advertised in a fancy frame at the depot, pay him about 200 per cent more than it is worth and let him put it there. When a man has three-quarters of a second in which to catch a train he invariably stops to read depot advertisements, and your card might take his eye.

Of course the street thermometer dodge is excellent. When a man's fingers and ears are freezing or he is puffing and "phewing" at the heat is the time above all others when he reads an advertisement.

Have thousands of little dodgers printed and hire a few boys to distribute them. They've no idea how the junk dealer and paper and rag man will respect you.

A boy with a big placard on a pole is an interesting object on the street and lends a dignified air to your establishment. Hire about two.

Advertise on a calendar. People never look at a calendar to see what day of the month it is. They merely glance hurriedly at it so as to be sure that your name is spelled correctly, without a "p," that's all.

But the truth of advertising in a well established, legitimate newspaper. Not for a moment. Your advertisement would be neatly printed and would find its way into all the thrifty households of the region, where are the farmer, the mechanic, the tradesman in other lines and into the families of the wealthy and refined who buy the articles to buy and money with which to buy them, and it would be read and pondered, and the result would come to your store and patronize you and keep coming in increasing numbers, and you might have to hire a clerk before long, but of course it would be more expensive—and bring greater profits.

For Their Stomachs' Sake.

Sunday school treats must come round oftener in England than in the United States, for the Rev. Andrew Mearns included in his book, "Odds and Ends," many stories of the bold of such festivities as have juvenile heart and stomach.

The hand of a small boy arrested for an instant over a plate of cake before he took one. "Thanks," he said, after his momentary hesitation, "I'm sure I can manage it if I stand up."

Another boy, still smaller, who had stuffed prodigiously, had to be carried to his mother and sighed: "Carry me home, mother; but, oh, don't bend me!"

The severest case of indigestion known to the writer was that of a boy who was commanded by his mother to "eat and eat" till he could eat no more. "Now," she said, "you've had a good tea, and you shall have no more, but you may go into the garden and eat gooseberries."

"No," said the boy, in an aggrieved tone, laying his hand on his diaphragm. "It don't hurt me yet."

Ducks and Drakes.

A schoolboy in Jewell City, Mo., was assigned to prepare an essay on the subject of ducks, and this is what he wrote: "The duck is a low, heavy bird, composed mostly of meat and feathers. He is a mighty poor singer, having a hoarse voice caused by getting so much water in his throat. He likes the water and carries a toy balloon in his stomach to keep him from sinking. He has webbed toes, legs and they are set so far back on his rumpus that he has to waddle when he purty near missing his body. Some ducks when they get big have curls on their tails and are called drakes. Drakes don't have to set or hatch, but just loaf, go swimming and eat. If I was to be a duck, I'd rather be a drake every time."

It Was Just Possible.

"I don't understand," said Mrs. Youngquake, "why it is that Jack won't go to sleep. Here I have been sitting and singing to him for the last hour, and yet he keeps crying and seems just as wide awake as ever."

"Well," said her husband, dryly, "perhaps it's because you're singing it."

Where Man and Dog Differ.

"Pedigree in a dog makes him valuable, doesn't it?"

"Certainly."

"Funny, isn't it?"

"What's funny?"

Few Prayers.

Yern—Now, if all men would vote as they pray this would truly be a chapp country. Jack—I'm sure that would ever happen you wouldn't get the average man to the polls once in ten years.

Their Good Offices.

"I see they're advertising twenty-five cent lunches. What do they give you?"

"An appetite for your dinner."

No Such Thing As Luck In Successful Decorating

Successful decoration must be the outcome of study—of thought rather than of mere chance.

In the chance room there will surely be something wrong.

Possibly the color. Perchance Drawing — Likely both.

Whether Chamber, Drawing Room, Living Room, Library or Den, the room must be treated with thought of surroundings, of furniture of complexion, of lighting, of size.

The environment of a room with North or East exposure must not be blue, while either West or Southern exposure may use blue to advantage.

How about Crimsons, Greens and Brown—where may these colors be used—just ask your decorator, if he is worthy the name he can tell you.

We solicit your test of our ability on this or other decorative subjects.

Presentation to Choir Master and Organist.

At a meeting, held in the vestry of Christ Church, last night, the Rector and choir presented Mr. A. G. Parker, who has charge of the choir, with a beautiful leather-bound copy of Hymns Ancient and Modern in token of their appreciation of the ability and faithfulness which he has shewn in training the men and boys. Prof. T. W. Willmott, organist, was also presented with a handsome leather music case.

TONSILITIS IS GOING AROUND

And everybody is wondering what to do. Here is a simple cure: Use a gargle of salt and water as recommended in the directions, and rub your throat and chest vigorously with Nerviline. This has been tested and proved successful a thousand times. Nerviline is a specific for tonsilitis, and, in fact, we know of nothing half so good for breaking up colds, curing tight chest and all muscular pains. Try a bottle of Nerviline; price 25c.

CIVIC COMMITTEES' REGULAR SESSION.

Matter of Purchasing New Hose Left In Hands of Fire Chairman.

Police Commissioners Requested to Instruct Chief to Keep Court Records.

At the meeting of the civic committees, held last evening, the business was of a purely routine nature, in consequence of which the City Fathers were not long in disposing of it. Mayor Chown and all the Aldermen excepting Messrs. Salmon and Magrath, were in attendance.

In Public Works the only business was the passing of the pay sheet, amounting to $172.54.

FIRE.

Ald. Marsh, Chairman, presided. The accounts passed were:

Bawden Co.	$30.36
Rathbun Co.	2.00

Four representatives were present in the interests of firms selling fire hose, but the Council did not hear them, simply examining the samples provided.

Ald. Gordon moved, seconded by Ald. Sinclair, that 500 feet of the Keystone brand be secured.

A brief discussion ensued as to the merits of the various makes of hose, at the conclusion of which it was decided to leave the purchase in the hands of the Chairman.

WATERWORKS.

The following accounts were passed by this committee:

Pay sheet No. 5	$17.68
J. H. Wilson	17.58
Rathbun Co.	135.25
J. R. Weller, timber	5.00

PARKS.

Ald. Ketcheson presided. An account of $4 was passed to Mr. E. McGrath.

A communication from the Rotary Bath Company in reference to baths was read, but on motion was not entertained.

The Chairman was authorized to see about procuring a one-horse mower for the purpose of cutting the grass upon the park.

MARKET.

Ald. Green, Chairman, presided. The only business was the adopting of the following accounts:

Greenleaf & Sons	75
B. Gallagher	1.75
J. H. Young	.60
Rathbun Co.	6.00
S. Allen	13.50

GAS.

Ald. Sinclair, Chairman, presided over this committee. The following accounts were passed:

Pay sheet No. 5	$76.60
H. J. Graham, coal	22.70
B. Gallagher	1.00
Belleville Hardware Co.	1.50
A. Smith	7.50
Municipal World, debentures	17.50
Bell Telephone Co.	12.50
C.P.R. Telegraph Co.	1.50
Consolidated Gas Co.	5.00

The Chairman was authorized to make a contract for telephone for gas office.

EXECUTIVE.

Ald. Panter presided over this committee. The accounts passed were:

Pay-sheet No. 5	$6.75
Police Commissioners, Deputy Registrar	6.50

A communication was read from Mr. P. Logue, a tenant in the Station Island, asking that the city be collecting rents, complaining of the leaky condition of the roof.

On motion the janitor, P. Meagher, was instructed to inspect the building and see what was necessary to be done.

The Gas By-law.

Mayor Chown said that the Solicitor should be instructed to go to Ingoldsby Hall and oppose the motion to quash the Gas By-law if the parties opposing it intend to fight the matter.

Ald. Green asked if the action of the Private Bills Committee did not settle the matter.

Mayor Chown said it did, but the Bill might not pass the Legislature before the date set for hearing the motion.

Police Court Records.

The matter was again brought up and caused considerable discussion, in which a majority of the members participated.

Ald. Panter was of the opinion that, as it did not entail upon the Chief extra duties, he should be requested by the Police Commissioners to do the work. He had done it for years.

Ald. Ketcheson—"Does it mean that the Chief is to be Police Court Clerk? Could he legally act in that capacity?"

Mayor Chown—"He could do it in the future, as in the past."

(The Clerk stated that there had been some misunderstanding about this matter. Mr. Anderson, the County Attorney, would not receive the returns from him (the Clerk) as being perfectly legal until the Magistrate had signed them.

Ald. Green said he understood the Chief's duty was to keep a proper record of the Court proceedings and classify them. He would like to know if the Clerk had to do similar work.

Ald. McFee said the Chief should do this work and not get any more remuneration.

The result of the discussion was that a motion prevailed to ask the Police Commissioners to instruct the Chief to do the work, without any extra remuneration.

Some little time was spent in examining a voting machine, which an agent was exhibiting.

Sports and Pastimes

SPORTING NOTE AND COMMENT.

Dr. Clarke, of Kingston, "guide, philosopher and friend" of the Rockingham junkers, O. B. A. champions, thinks the only way professionalism in hockey can be killed is for the association to pass and insist on the observance of a twelve months residence rule. And the good Doctor is more than half right, but the rule in question is about as likely to be passed as the Frontenacs are to lift the Stanley Cup next winter.

The idea of a lacrosse team for this summer is being quietly discussed in the city, and it appears possible that we may have one. The formation of a Trent Valley League is being talked of, and that might not be a bad place for Belleville's team to locate. It's a pity the young men of our city do not take more interest in Canada's national game. There is plenty of good material in town for a team of which we could be proud, if the boys would only stick together and practise—there's the difficulty. We had a good team last summer, and the boys put that tired feeling aside and that you couldn't get them off the shady side of the street, the result being that they went down before a first-class team which had no license to beat them. This year things should be run differently. A business manager is needed. Who'll take a little trouble in the interest of sport and for the honor of the town?

A good story is told by a ball player about a game in the Pennsylvania town a ground situated near a farm. One of the players hit the ball to the outfield, which looked good enough for a home run. The ball was struck by a pebble. The outfielder looked around for the ball, but could not find it. All the time the batter was limited around the bases like a deer. When the game the pebble picked up a potato and limped home, sailing the runner at the plate and being declared out. There were two out, and the run would have tied the score. The catcher slipped the potato on the mascots, who got away with it.

BASKET BALL.

Look Pleasant, Lou.

A goodly number of spectators were present at the City Hall last evening to witness two basket ball games. Much interest was taken in the games although the principal contest was rather one-sided it was nevertheless a good game from the spectators' point of view.

In a few minutes after 8 o'clock the first contest was commenced. This was between the junior team of the Belleville Hardware Company and the intermediate team of Albert College. The teams lined up as follows:

Albert College	Positions	Lock Factory
Perward		Parks
King
Breveton		Haney
	Centre
Bick		Saunders
	Defence
Coglin		Moore

Lovering ..... Goal ..... Lee
The Locks teams played hard for supremacy, but the college boys proved to be the victors, the score at the close being 29 to 15 in their favor. Prof. Kennedy was the referee.

Kingston Boys Walloped Alberts.

The second match was commenced shortly after. This was between Alberts senior team and the Kingston Y.M.C.A. team. The boys from the Limestone City were no good for the Albert players. They have a beautiful combination and are excellent shots. At half-time the score was 8 to 2 in favor of the visitors. In the second half they secured 10 additional points, whilst the college boys were able to get but 6. The score at the finish was Kingston 24, Albert College 8. Mr. H. Milne, physical director of the Kingston Y.M.C.A. was referee and did his duty in an impartial manner. The line-up was as follows:

Kingston	Position	Albert
	Forward
Mercer		Thompson
	Centre
Bows		Wheeler
	Centre
Coyle		Antle
	Defence
Birch		Gundy
	Goal
Moxley		Vance

The young ladies from the college were out in full force and were naturally not pleased at the result.

During the progress of the game one of the Albert boys was heavily checked and put out of business for a few minutes.

It is only fair to say that the Kingston men play a different game to that put up by the Collegians. In the style of play used by the Alberts there is no body-checking, while the Kingstonians roughed it up cheerfully at all stages. This undoubtedly had considerable to do with the difference in the score.

HOCKEY.

Juniors Trimmed High School.

The return hockey match between the High School and the Junior O. H.A. teams was played last evening resulting in a victory for the Juniors. The match was well contested by both sides, furnishing considerable sport for the spectators. At the finish the score was 8 to 3 in favor of the Juniors. Mr. J. Winchester was referee, and his decisions were impartial. The teams were as follows:

Juniors	Positions	High School
	Goal
C. Dolan		H. Holton
	Point
W. Hamilton		D. Donald
	Cover Point
J. Conley		W. Campbell
	Rover
V. Brenna		W. Pepper
	Centre
K. Spangenberg		W. Allen
	Right Wing
H. Weller		N. Alford
	Left Wing
R. Hamilton		L. Spangenberg

THE WOMEN OF GREECE.

WITTY AND ENTERTAINING LECTURE BY PROF. HUTTON LAST NIGHT.

The largest audience of the season last night enjoyed a delightful evening at St. Agnes' School hall (which has been so kindly placed at the disposal of the Graduates' Club during the winter). There was not merely a rare literary and intellectual treat by the accomplished lecturer, but also three much appreciated songs by Mr. and Mrs. Parker, who afforded an appropriate opening and closing of the lecture, which was entitled "The Women of Greece," but which really, in its scope, touched with delicate hand and with witty and humorous comment women of all ages and all climes. Without flinching on the other side of the shield, the sterner sex. The lecturer pointed out that in the very oldest times, when all the gods were goddesses, men were, in subjection, and the spiritual superiority of primitive women appears to have been at all times fully recognized. In Athens, however, even with its vaunted and the beautiful rendering of the celebrated incident of the meeting of Nausicaa and Odussus from Homer, as rendered by a distinguished Greek scholar, and, at the same time, master of English, was a revelation to those present. Athenian civilization, however, seems to have reduced women to an oriental subjection. The Spartans, on the contrary, honored women, who were both devoted patriots and devoted parents. They had even co-education in Sparta, and a penalty for bachelorhood in men over thirty years by exclusion from all national games and meetings. In Athens, however, even with the doctrinary, woman was for a long time, at best a play-thing, at worst a slave. In the old days no 1st pockets lines, great students and literary men appeared to take marriage a failure. Platonic love, the doctrine of Plato, was the ideal of Aristotle, in which man and woman enjoy sovereignty and honor, each in his and her own sphere.

Mr. Thomas Ritchie most acceptably occupied the chair. A hearty vote of thanks, on motion of Mr. J. W. Johnson, seconded by Mr. Wallbridge, was conveyed to the lecturer, and to Mr. and Mrs. Parker, who by their kindness added for the individual opinions and suggestions of those who had taken the course of lectures, and the best arrangement to be made for next year's course.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

The Association men's meeting Sunday afternoon will be addressed by members of the Evangelistic Band. Subject, "Building." Solo by Mr. Wm. Hutchison. All men welcome.

On Tuesday, March 27, the Provincial Secretary will address a special men's mass meeting. Plans of the proposed new building and other very interesting information will be given. Every man interested in this project should be there.

What we have to gain is not one battle, but a weary life's campaign.—Patmore.

WHAT HAPPENS AFTER FIVE HOURS.

Dr. Bouchard, the eminent French physician, has furnished facts which show that if food is retained in the stomach more than five hours it becomes fermentative and putrefactive,—not digestive,—and this is the starting-point of disease.

This food must become putrid.
Generates gas.
Ferments like dough.
There is a seeming hunger—acid, burning, or belching.

Blood, Skin, tissue, and cells begin to absorb this poison from the stomach and alimentary canal instead of nutriment,and right here is the producing cause of Constipation, Diabetes, Bright's Disease, Uterine and Ovarian troubles, Rheumatism, Gout, Nervous and Mental Diseases, Bronchitis, Heart Affections, Pulmonary Consumption, Jaundice, Liver and Skin Diseases.

Inability of the stomach to properly handle food is the widely caused by overeating, drinking too much liquid, gases generated from slow digestion, and sometimes the mixing of food with gastric juice to properly digest it for use in the body.

Dr. J. D. Leonhardt worked for years in pot, and finally Anti-Fil, so that it would guarantee regular stomach action, and His astonishing cures are proof of its mission being fulfilled; of its being the greatest System Treatment in the world.

ONTARIO LUMBERMEN.

Lumber Prices Advance With Decrease in Cut and Stock.

Toronto, March 19.—At the annual meeting of the Lumbermen's Association of Ontario, held at the Queen's Hotel, President Lumsden, in his report, declared that prices will probably be 10 per cent. higher than last year, the Ottawa men having already secured that advance. The severe weather has increased the cost and curtailed the cut and the blockade of railways will have accumulated shipments to handle.

According to the report of Secretary W. B. Tindall, the production of white pine lumber showed a decrease last year from 1902 of 200,000,000 feet, the production being 482,000,000.

A scarcity of low grade lumber is reported, there being absolutely none in first hands, what is available being held by dealers for distribution. Compared with other years, the figures of stock on hand shows: 1903, 150,000,000 feet; 1902, 170,000,000; 1901, 181,000,000; 1900, 216,349,-000; 1899, 120,000,000.

The cut of hemlock for 1903 was 1,334,404,000, and stock, 515,985,-000.

The meeting passed resolutions to appoint a committee to consider means for preserving young pine and growing timber and replanting limits, and to have the Railway Commission's attention drawn to the shortage of railway cars, and the rates and regulations on ties and cedar posts.

The officers were re-elected as follows: W. D. Lumsis, president; H. Laidlaw, first vice-president; George Cook, second vice-president; W. B. Tindall, secretary-treasurer.

SENSATION AT BRANTFORD.

Extensive Charges Against P. C. Allan Involving Cole Murder.

Brantford, March 19.—A sensation of considerable importance was sprung in this city yesterday when it became known that P. C. Allan had been summoned to appear before the Police Commissioners at their next meeting. The charges are of a very extensive character, and all the more interesting from the fact that bearing on the recent Cole murder case.

Allan is charged with making certain statements about the police force in the Cole trial in this month. The impression created by these statements as to the evidence that Allan stated that some important evidence was left altogether uninvestigated and never seriously considered.

Other charges of hardly less interest are to the effect that Allan also made statements charging the police officials with misappropriation of fines derived from liquor prosecutions.

BRITISH SUBMARINE SUNK.

Has Into By a Danish Cattle Liner—Eleven Drowned.

Portsmouth, March 19.—The British submarine boat No. A1 was run down and sunk off the Nab Lightship yesterday by a Danish cattle liner, and eleven persons were drowned, including Wanscrgh, the senior officer, engaged in submarine work. The liner passed on and reported that she had struck a torpedo.

At the time she was struck the vessel was off the lightship, engaged in the manoeuvres, and was lying in seven fathoms of water, waiting the approach of a battleship.

The A1 was one of the newest of the fleet of submarine vessels, and was built from the latest models, but she had always been a bad boat. She was inspected recently by both King Edward and the Prince of Wales.

The Cold that "Hangs On"

The cold that sticks to you is not to be trifled with. If you cannot "shake it off" in a very few days you may be sure there is something wrong. Your system must be run down, otherwise it would throw off the cold naturally and quickly. Cough cures may allay the tickling in your throat and give a little temporary relief, but they cannot reach the root of the trouble. What you require is BUILDING UP, and for this purpose there is just one safe, sure and effective remedy, and that is FERROL. If your cold hangs on, take

FERROL as directed and see how soon you will (The Iron-Oil Food) begin to put on flesh, how the enriched blood will course through your veins and bring back the color to your cheeks, how the nerves will brace up and the muscles harden and develop and how entire well-being will dispose of the cold.

FERROL is not a cure-all cure, but it will infallibly cure the most stubborn cough by natural process, and will at the same time strengthen and invigorate the patient and restore lost vim and energy.

LAXATIVE AND TONIC

780 Jefferson Ave., Detroit, May 13, 1902.

For many years I suffered from constipation in its worst form, and nothing which I took gave me any permanent relief.

When your Tablets first came to my notice, last summer, I determined to try them. The results have been most gratifying. I have taken many laxatives, but no other can compare with yours so far as my personal experience goes.

The tonic properties of your remedy are most valuable, both in connection with its laxative action when desired, and for those who need a tonic only.

I cannot too strongly recommend Iron-ox Tablets, which I never fail to bring to the notice of my customers when appropriate. From those who have used them I hear nothing else.

Yours very truly,

T. H. RICHARDS, Druggist.

COTTON PANIC.

Bally, the Cotton King, Fails—Cotton Slumps.

New York, March 19.—Daniel J. Sully, the cotton operator, who has been differentiated with the bogus figure in the cotton markets of the world, and whose failure has sent cotton from 7 cents a pound to over 17 cents, announced his inability to meet his engagements when the New York Cotton Exchange yesterday. Within a few moments cotton fell nearly $13 a bale from the highest figures. The "bull" leader of the street have witnessed stock panics in previous years, corners have been broken, and many fortunes have been recorded, but none has been accompanied by such frenzy and confusion as that of yesterday.

Hon. Edward Blake's Speech.

London, March 19.—Hon. Edward Blake, at St. Patrick's Day banquet; responding to "The Irish Parliamentary Party" toast, said he entered the party at a time when a majority of the party was not representative of the whole Nationalist sentiment of Ireland. He had, however, seen the happy day when unity and concord were restored, and today, after securing Mr. Redmond's re-election, he could say with absolute sincerity that he had never seen a party so loyal, so united, so cordial, so absolutely one in its feelings, its aspirations and its relations, as to man. When the elections draw nigh he hoped he no fear for the results in Ireland.

Killed By Tree.

Port Arthur, March 19.—W. Cronsdell of Arnprior, Ontario, was killed in Peace tie camp on the Canadian Pacific Thursday by a tree falling on his head. His skull was crushed.

Sir Charles' Ballot.

London, March 19.—(C. A. P.)—Sir Charles Tupper, speaking Thursday night, said he believed Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Government would carry the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill. They would not dare refuse to shut their eyes and ears and vote in favor of it. If the opposition leader of the House was able to speak, the measure would be defeated.

Died Aged 104.

Family of Thieves.

Winnipeg, March 19.—Mr. and Mrs. Elgin of Macleod, Alberta, were sent to Stony Mountain Penitentiary yesterday, having been found guilty at that town on a charge of stealing cattle. Both are aged and careworn. Their two sons have been convicts in the penitentiary for over a year, having been found guilty of a similar offence.

The Toronto Scandal.

Toronto, March 19.—The Civic Investigation, as far as concerns the Assessment Department, is conducting to-day at 11 a.m., the argument will commence. Mr. Lobb, on behalf of the city, will be the first to address the judge. He will be followed by Mr. Du Vernet on behalf of Ald. Burt, Mr. Johnston, on behalf of present Commissioner Fleming's side of the case; Mr. Hales will have something to say in behalf of Harry Page, and Mr. Godfrey will follow on behalf of Ald. Woods; then Mr. Riddell will sum up the whole case.

Infernal Machine Kills.

Liege, Belgium, March 19.—An infernal machine exploded early yesterday morning outside the residence of Commissioner of Police Laurent, fatally injuring an artillery officer, Major Parish, and seriously wounding half a dozen other persons.

SUSPECT PREMIER ROSS.

D. Henderson of Halton Hopes Government Will Not Allow Ontario to Withdraw the Capital of School Fund.

Ottawa, March 19.—The House went into committee of supply yesterday, but touched only on a few items of Civil Government. The Auditor-General's report not yet being ready for distribution.

Mr. Fielding explained that there was a slight increase in the estimates for printing over 1903, the Government was determined to make more frequent issue of new notes to take the place of the dirty and worn bills.

The increase of $200 in the vote for the Receiver-General's Office in Toronto was partly to increase the salaries of a couple of officials of that office who had not received increases for years.

D. Henderson of Halton, expressed the hope that the Government of Ontario would not be allowed to withdraw the capital of the Common School and Grammar School fund, but that they would be kept in the safer hands of the Dominion Government, and only the interest paid over to Ontario.

If the Ontario Government got hold of the principal it would be certain to be diverted to purposes other than those for which the funds were originally intended. A couple of millions of it, for instance, might be alienated for some such purpose as the Soo.

The Finance Minister did not think the Ontario Government would be so foolish as to withdraw the principal when it was earning 5 per cent.

"But the situation might be desperate," observed E. F. Clarke.

Mr. Fielding pointed out that the Ontario Government was claiming the principal of those funds as Provincial assets, and thereby figuring up a bogus surplus.

Mr. Copp of Bigby explained that the $500 which he drew from the riding of Digby was for services rendered in the promotion of a movement to secure increased dock facilities. He made a proposition to the Town Council that for $500 down, $1,500 out of the completion of the harbor work and $10,000 when the work was completed, the people up at Digby wharf, he would ensure the carrying out of the work. He assured the House that the money had for personal expenses incurred in visits to Ottawa and in the various capitalists to take up the project. It was understood that he was to have no portion of the $4,500 or the $10,-000. He did not apply for nor did the Government contribute one cent for the work.

Mr. Marshall cheered as Mr. Copp concluded by challenging his assailants to appear before the Committee of Privileges and Elections.

The House adjourned at 4.40.

Burned to Death.

St. Thomas, March 19.—A sad fatality occurred at Highbury early yesterday morning at 6.30. A small frame cottage owned by Mrs. Lamb, aged 65 years, named Mrs. Twigg, near the railway station, was burned. The fire was caused by a lamp upsetting, and the building was entirely enveloped in flames before the arrival of the fire company, who gained an entrance and found out the charred remains of the occupant. It is supposed that she must have been overcome with the smoke and suffocated, as the body was lying on a lounge. The deceased leaves two daughters. An inquest will be held.

Expects It To Live.

London, March 19.—(C.A.P.)—Andrew Bonar Law, M.P., Under Secretary of the Board of Trade, addressing the Unionist Association at Glasgow, said he heard ten times more in Glasgow than in London of the Government defeat. He said one present thought the Government was nearly dead he would not advise them to buy mourning yet, for he fully expected the Government would be alive this time next year.

Colonies and Ireland.

London, March 19.—(C. A. P.)—John Redmond, M.P., Irish Nationalist leader, addressing an Irish demonstration at Newcastle, said that Irishmen only wanted to make the experiment of governing themselves. Despite that was said about the colonies they were a cause of great cost to the Empire and should not be weighed in the balance against Ireland.

An Imperial Con.

London, March 19.—(C. A. P.)—Right Hon. H. H. Asquith, M.P., addressing a Liberal meeting at Salisbury, declared that the Chinese labor question was an Imperial one, in which Canada, Australia and New Zealand for their enormous sacrifices ought to have a voice. Such a proposal to send Chinese to India would not be entertained for a moment.

why Scott's Emulsion is an ideal food-medicine.

1. It is partly pre-digested and therefore passes quickly into the blood.

2. It imposes no tax upon the stomach or other digestive organs.

3. It does not cause fermentation such as usually results from ordinary food when the stomach is weak.

4. Its action is mild and even, insuring the greatest nourishment with the least effort.

5. Its quality is always uniform.

6. It feeds and strengthens the bones, blood, nerves and tissues.

7. It is one of the greatest flesh producers known to medical science.

8. It is palatable and agreeable to the taste and easily taken.

ALL QUIET ON THE YALU

Battle Story, With 1,600 Japs Captured, Was a Russian Fake.

Opposing Armies Are Far Apart—St. Petersburg Startled By Report of Attempt of Japanese to Land in Meiena Bay—No More Changes in Russia's Leaders at the Seat of War.

London, March 21.—Nothing has reached here to confirm the report that a battle has taken place on the Yalu, in which it was said the Russians had captured 1,600 prisoners.

A despatch from St. Petersburg to a news agency, dated yesterday says there has been no change in the war situation, and that all is quiet on both land and sea.

On the Russian line from Pingyang to the Yalu River, and the Japanese line to Gensan there have been slight skirmishes between scouts, but no battle has taken place, as the distance between the opposing armies is great. The bulk of the Russian forces, the despatch adds, has not yet passed the Yalu River.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says that the military authorities were startled by the attempt of the Japanese to land in Helena Bay, as the nearest Russian force that could have been used against them consisted of three rifle regiments at Newchwang. The weather having hindered the Japanese landing, energetic measures are now being adopted to prevent such a descent. Among the other devices adopted has been the concentration of troops at Foochow, twenty miles south of Helena Bay.

In cabling the fact that all British and American vessels entering Newchwang must remain within the walls, a correspondent of The Daily Chronicle at Newchwang, says:

"I was arrested while attempting to leave yesterday."

The correspondent reported that a Japanese squadron arrived at the mouth of the Liao River Saturday night and landed a party which, after reconnoitering, re-embarked.

Alexieff Is Supreme.

Paris, March 21.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Echo de Paris has had an interview with Vice-Admiral Avellane, the Russian Minister of Marine, who said it had been necessary to replace Vice-Admiral Stark, the condition of whose health was deplorable, by an energetic man like Vice-Admiral Makaroff, but the Minister denied that the presence of either Vice-Admiral Makaroff or Gen. Kuropatkin affected the position of Viceroy Alexieff, adding that Vice-Admiral Makaroff's telegrams to the Emperor would pass through the Viceroy's hands. The Minister said he did not expect that there would be any further changes in the Emperor's principal representatives at the seat of war during the entire period of the duration of hostilities.

The correspondent says he learns that the Russians are fortifying the mouth of the Yalu at Wiju as well as the Tatung River.

Fired Fifty Projectiles.

Paris, March 21.—The Russian Embassy has received from St. Petersburg and has handed to Foreign Minister Delcasse for transmission to the French Minister at Tokio, who is entrusted with the charge of Russian interests in Japan, a protest against an alleged infraction of the laws of war. It appears that during the attack on Port Arthur, March 10, the Japanese fired over fifty projectiles at the quarantine station on the island of Sanshantze, resulting in the injury of numerous persons.

Count Lamsdorff, the Russian foreign minister, considers this to be a violation of the laws of war, notably of the twenty-fifth clause of the Hague convention, to which Japan was a signatory. The Minister therefore asks France to call Japan's attention to make answer apart from the general protests contained in the recent Russian note to the Powers.

The French Government has already communicated to Tokio Russia's protest against the seizure of Russian mining vessels entering at Nagasaki before the expiration of the date fixed for the departure of Russian vessels from Japanese ports. To this Japan replied that a prize court, having already passed upon the question, it was no longer a diplomatic one, but the powers had a right to appeal to a superior court. Russia refuses to take this view of the matter, and ask France to renew the protest.

Warships Ready.

Libau, Russia, March 21.—The warships which have been wintering here are now ready to go into commission.

Battleship Sails.

Cadez, Island of Crete, March 21.—The Russian battleship Oslabya, with Admiral Virenius on board, sailed at 11.30 o'clock yesterday morning for an unknown destination. Three torpedo boats followed the battleship. The torpedo armored cruiser Dmitri Donskoi arrived here yesterday afternoon.

Japan's Parliament Met Sunday.

Tokio, March 21.—With stately ceremony, the special session of Parliament, convened to provide the money needed towards the war against Russia, was opened at 11 o'clock yesterday morning. The Emperor read the following speech from the throne:

"We hereby open the Imperial Diet and address each and all the members of the House and Peers and the House of Representatives. We announce with high satisfaction that our relations with the treaty powers are steadily growing in cordiality and understanding. Prompted by an earnest desire to maintain a permanent peace in the extreme east, our Government by our command, entered into negotiations with Russia, but we regret that, owing to an absence of sincerity on the part of Russia in her peaceful professions, we have been compelled to appeal to arms, and having taken that step we cannot hesitate until the object of the war is attained.

"Our forces, in the presence of unabated hardships and privations, have now displaying their steadfast loyalty and valor, and we hope that all our subjects will co-operate in perfect unity for the enhancement of the glory of the Empire.

"Be trust that you will, in compliance with our wish, duly fulfil the incumbent on you and give cordial consideration to these budget and bills which are specially urgent in connection with the situation, and which we have ordered the ministers of state to lay before you."

WAR CRY OF THE HEREROS.

"Spare Non-German Whites"—Herr Rebel Declares Educated People in Germany Are Becoming Brutalized.

Berlin, March 21.—In the Reichstag Saturday Herr Bebel (the Socialist leader), said the German campaign against the Hereros had taken on a character prejudicial to Germany's interests and honor, since all Hereros were killed and no prisoners were taken. He referred to a letter from a veterinary surgeon, Dr. Baumgarti, in a Leipsic newspaper, asserting that no quarter was given and that every black was shot down. "Dr. Baumgart boasting that he had massacred wounded men like a cannibal."

"The reception can show," Herr Bebel said, "how far even our educated people are becoming brutalized. The description sent from Southwest Africa must have a demoralizing and brutalizing effect on the German people.

"The reports of the Rhenish Missionary Society show that the Hereros spare the whites, who prove to be non-Germans, like the English, Boers and Danes. It appears, therefore, that some of our countrymen have so maltreated the Hereros that they have generated a fanatical hatred against Germans in general.

"Samuel Maharero, chief of the Hereros, continues the missionary report, has given orders that no harm be done to non-Germans, missionaries, women and children, but that German men be shot down mercilessly.

"The missionaries further report that the Herero have begged pardon of white women wounded by stray shots in fights, saying they did not wish to hurt defenceless women."

NOT ACADEMIC QUESTION.

Irish Will Keep Anti-Home Rule Government Out of Office.

Manchester, March 21.—John Redmond, the leader of the Irish party, addressing an Irish demonstration here yesterday, said that the first business of the party was to strike down the present Government and then to see that no Government was put into office which would not grant home rule to Ireland. He said it was ridiculous for Liberals like Herbert H. Asquith to call home rule an "academic question."

In Hands of Receiver.

Montreal, March 21.—Judge Burbridge has granted the petition to place the Quebec Southern in the hands of a receiver. It is probable that Registrar Audette of Ottawa, will be the receiver and the I.C.R. will operate the road.

Printers May Strike.

Winnipeg, March 21.—It is rumored that a strike of the printers of Winnipeg is imminent unless certain demands made by local typographical unions are acceded they will walk out Tuesday at noon.

Young Student Disappears.

Toronto, March 21.—The mysterious disappearance of John W. Pierce, a young college student of Toronto, is puzzling the police. Pierce boarded at 25 Wood street. His acquaintances here and at the School of Practical Science are equally amazed over his unaccountable absence. He is but twenty years old and quite unsophisticated. He has not been seen since Thursday evening.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The country roads, just now, are said to be excellent. In fact, one gentleman who drives a good deal says he has never seen them so good at this time of year. Surprising, isn't it, .

Prof. Hunt's letter, in another column, will, we believe, strike a popular chord. Bellevilie contains, for its size, quite as much artistic sentiment as any place in Canada. Everyone should help the Philharmonic society, and encourage the spread of harmony, which is a goodly pleasant thing among the sons and daughters of Adam and Eve. .

It is all right for the A.O.U.W. to admit women to its membership, of course, but do you think now lady would join a society which has anything to do with the word "ancient"? That settles the matter at once. .

There were 2,500 deaths from pneumonia in Chicago this winter. Who says the old-fashioned winter brings health?

The preaching by Rev. M. W. Maclean of his farewell sermon last night, which event is reported in another column, did not only concern St. Andrew's Church, but Bellevillians as a whole. For more than 30 years now the Rev. gentleman has been one of our leading divines, always preaching the word fearlessly, with sound the pulpit always ready to take the part at public functions where the presence of "the cloth" added dignity to the occasion; always ready to say the right thing in a graceful and fitting way. It is with reluctance that Bellevilie says good-by to Rev. Mr. Maclean, trusting that another climate may assure his health to improve, and that, wherever he goes, his lines may fall in pleasant places.

If, as a report from London intimates, the questions at issue between Great Britain and France have been settled, it will cause the pleasure of many warm friends of Great Britain, among them Laurier's chums, Bourke Cockran, Hepburn et al.

The latest indications are that Hon. Mr. Ross will look his majority up in the Parliament buildings at Toronto, or the Opposition are unable to look for it from under him at any moment.

MAN'S MOST CRITICAL AGE.

Very often the vital resources are small at forty-two, but if not then, between forty-two and sixty-two years of age there is a strange slowing down and loss of vitality. It is important that this transient period of decay should be checked; strength must be imparted to the brain cells, the weakened nerves must be fortified. The wise man will use Ferrozone, whose potency is particularly applicable to these critical periods. Ferrozone quickens the whole being, imparts vigor and power, pushes back the onset of senility in a manner almost way. It's because Ferrozone gives strength, vitality and vigor that it is useful to old men. Try it. Price 50c.

PERSONAL .....AND..... SOCIAL.

The Intelligencer invites all its readers to contribute to this column items of personal nature, such as the arrival or departure of guests, and the use events of business men, etc. Send a post card to or telephone The Intelligencer.

Mr. C. L. Owen, of Campbellford, spent Sunday in the city. .

Rev. O. C. Elliott was yesterday delivering anniversary sermons at Gilmour.

Mr. W. J. McGuinn went to Toronto to-day to attend the Grand Lodge of the Chosen Friends.

Rev. T. J. Edmison, of Newcastle, delegate of the Bay of Quinte Methodist Conference, was in the city to-day.

Mr. V. Woodruff, of Whitby, spent Sunday in the city with his son, who is attending business college here.

Mrs. R. H. Bennett and children, who have been visiting here, have returned to their home at Fall River, Mass.

Messrs. Percy and Charles Woodcock, of Brockville, were in the city to-day attending the funeral of their late father, Rev. E. Woodcock.

At the Quinte:—R. Creighton, Hamilton; Rev. W. Wilkins, W. T. Wilkins, Trenton; A. F. Simonds, C. E. Davis, Boston; P. Bando, W. A. Patterson, T. Arnold, W. Quinn, F. Forester, Montreal; C. D. CATARRH IS CERTAINLY CURABLE.

In fact it is one of the most curable diseases if Tarrant healing Catarrh ozone is used. No matter how long you have suffered with catarrh, you can be perfectly cured by inhaling the antiseptic vapor of Catarrhozone, which strikes at the root of the nose and throat for years," writes S. H. Downie, of Plattsville. "My nostrils were always stuffed up and I had a most disagreeable, hacking cough. Catarrhozone cured me completely." Catarrhozone never fails. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25 cents.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"MORE THAN QUEEN."

It is likely that there will be a very lively demand for seats for the engagement of "More Than Queen" at the Carman, which appears on Wednesday evening next. "More Than Queen" needs but few remembered, is the last production made by Julia Arthur before she became Mrs. Cheney and retired from theatrical life. It is a stirring story of the life of the "Little Corsican" and his love affairs. Miss Anne Sutherland will be the Josephine, and Mr. Wm. Humphrey will assume his original role, Napoleon. The remainder of the cast is very strong and all the magnificent scenic effects and costumes witnessed at the Broadway theatre, New York, and in the principal cities, will be in evidence.

Bread Advanced

As Toronto bakers have advanced their prices to-day it will be necessary for us to raise our prices accordingly. We will now sell Nasmith's Toronto bread at 11c a loaf, or 6c a half loaf.

J. ARTHUR MARSH

LANDSCAPE PHOTOGRAPHY.

This is the Most Encouraging Work for the Camera Amateur.

The most encouraging out of door subjects for the beginner in photography are landscapes. The most important point in photographing a landscape is the selection of it; the choosing of a bit of scenery which, when translated to black and white, will form an interesting picture. You must always bear in mind that the beautiful colors which you see in nature, and upon the ground glass will not be present in the photograph, which must rely for its beauty upon form and light and shade. When you wish to photograph a landscape, take plenty of time to think about it. After you have chosen your subject, determine the point of greatest interest and then decide whether the picture will look best with this point directly in the center, to one side or toward the top or bottom.

If you live near the spot you intend to photograph, it will pay you to notice at what time of year it is most beautiful. Some landscapes look very commonplace in summer, but make stunning pictures when half buried in the snow. Waterfalls often look best in early spring, because there is a greater volume of water pouring over them at that time than at any other.

A most interesting series of pictures may be made by choosing a beautiful bit of landscape and photographing it from the same point at frequent intervals throughout the year. In each picture, we will say, is taken when the ground and trees are covered with snow, the second when most of the snow is melted and the rest lies in patches here and there and the tender green the fields are flooded with rains. After these would come pictures showing the trees in bud, in leaf, in bloom, with fruit and later dismantled with the frosts of autumn.

Window Blinds.

There is no necessity of washing cotton or linen window blinds, as there is a much simpler way of cleaning them. The blind should be spread flat on a table and then rubbed well all over with bread crumbs. This will make it look quite clean and fresh.

Panama Exports.

Panama has no open exports except the two railway terminals and Bocas del Toro, the center of a large banana industry, to the north of Colon.

Clothes Closets.

Ventilation of closets is particularly necessary. Clothing kept in an unventilated closet gets a smell peculiar to itself—and peculiarly disagreeable. It is the unmistakable advertisement of the unventilated.

Fire o'Clock Tea.

The English drank tea as long ago as 1657, but 5 o'clock tea date back only to 1842.

Land in Castile.

Land in Castile is in greater part devoted to the production of wheat, and during planting and harvest time laborers, especially reapers, are brought hither from Galicia.

Marble Cleaning.

Marble can be cleaned by rubbing with a rather soft paste made of whiting or prepared chalk and water to which a little ammonia has been added. Rinse afterward with clean water. A rub with pumice stone and water will restore the polish.

Losses of Life.

Out of every 1,000,000 persons who are born in the same year 213,000 live for 70 years, 107,000 for 80 years and 881 for 90 years.

Toasting Bread.

If bread toasts too slowly on the charing dish toaster it may be browned more quickly and evenly by buttering it lightly on both sides. Treated thus, it will not adhere to the toaster, and the flavor is improved.

Plum Pudding.

Plum pudding was originally plum porridge and served for breakfast, not dinner.

Twelve Leafed Palm.

The Egyptians used to use a twelve leafed palm for a Christmas tree because a palm will put forth one new leaf a month, and the twelve leaves were a sign of the completed year.

Mulberry Trees.

Gibraltar.

In the fortified rock of Gibraltar there are sixty-two miles of tunnels. They are stocked with an ample supply of arms, ammunition and provisions in readiness for a siege.

Germany's Contributions.

Beggars in China.

The beggars of China have a regular system of blackmail. Every town has a band of them, with a "king." The "king" goes about and calls on merchants and others collecting tribute, in return for which he gives a signed document insuring them against all annoyance for a certain length of time.

READ IT THROUGH.

"Twould Spoil This Story to Tell It in the Headlines.

To use an eighteenth century phrase, this is an "o'er true tale." Having happened in a small Virginia town in the winter of 1902, it is not very much of the present. Up to the short time ago Mrs John E. Harmon, of Mella Station, Va., had no personal knowledge of the rare curative properties of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. "Last January," she says, "my baby took a dreadful cold and at one time I feared she would have pneumonia, but one of my neighbors told me how this remedy had cured her little boy and I began giving it to my baby at once and it soon cured her. I heartily thank the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for placing so great a cure within my reach. I can only recommend it too highly or say too much in its favor. I hope all who read this will try it and be convinced as I was." For sale by all druggists.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

FOUND HER LOST FORTUNE

Of health through believing what the read—and the result—proved to be the truth. South American Kidney Cure saved a violent type of Kidney Disease.

Mrs. Norman Cooke, of Delhi, Ont., suffered for Kidney disease until she was tired—tired of life and a constant burden to her friends. South American Kidney Cure relieved her and used one bottle she had ordered. She got better. After taking six bottles she was cured. She was a great sufferer at times that she couldn't lie down—was totally unfit for household duties. South American Kidney Cure gives relief in six hours.

Sold by D. M. Waters and J. S. St Keown.

FLAG OF LONDON TOWN.

Something About the Victoria Tower Over Which It Flashes—Fear of the Steel City From Above.

It would hardly occur to the King, perhaps, when he entered the Houses of Parliament by the Victoria Tower, that this tower, so ambitiously among the glories of the capital, has a place of its own among the wonders of the world.

From its dizzy height, floats an emblem of British power, which, whether London believed it or not, would fill a two-storied house from view. The great flag which floated there on Tuesday, hauled to its great height by machinery, looks like an ordinary piece of bunting from Westminster Bridge, but it took 400 yards of bunting to make that standard, when the breeze opens its folds, to a length of sixty and a breadth of forty-five feet, and it is kept in its place by a flag-staff which has certainly no rival in England, and probably none in the world. This mast, rising from its base to a height of 120 feet, firmly fixed on its foundations with a diameter of 3 feet, is made of many sheets of iron, bolted together with hundreds of bolts, and it would weigh, if we could put it in the scales, not less than sixteen tons!

They who would reach the height from which London looks like some dim city of the mist must wind round and round the longest spiral staircase in the world. At the low iron door which brings you to its foot the staircase appears to be one unending iron thread, reaching up into darkness, and it is not until the visitor has gazed at it awhile that there breaks at the top, 350 feet above him, a blue light no bigger than a man's hand.

If the distant ray of light, losing itself in utter darkness a little way down the tower, does not encourage him, the climber winds round the spiral staircase a dozen times, and finds himself, almost tired, on the first floor. He is in a room over 50 feet square, and in this grand apartment he will pause to reflect upon the splendours of the Victoria Tower.

The tower has a weight of 30,000 tons, and it helps us to realize its grandeur and strength if we reflect that its building was in progress for all but twenty years. The Londoner who waited for a year in the forties or the fifties came home to find that the new tower had risen not quite eight yards in his absence, and so, at the rate of 23 feet a year, the Victoria Tower grew, from 1842 until it was completed.

It has within it over 140 separate rooms, each one fireproof, each containing the precious State papers which tell the story of England and its Kings. Divided into seven floors, all save two with sixteen rooms, the tower is a miracle of ingenuity. How little the Londoners, who gaze at this splendid pile, imagines that at the top of it, on the 11th floor, works a powerful steam engine. It is its work to haul up through the well of the spiral staircase, the bundles of State papers, delivering them on the floor where they may be required, and it is a wonderful sight to see this huge narrow passage throb, as it were, with busy life. It is a wonderful sight, indeed, when the engine is not at work. The spiral staircase, stretching from the ground to the top, apparently without a single support, and looking like one long thin line of iron-work which the long over-balancing would bring clattering down, is one of the engineering marvels of our day. In reality it is held in its place by wrought-iron rods hanging from each floor through which it passes, but the rods are not readily visible to the eye, and it needs a more than ordinary nerve to scale this fragile staircase to the greatest height in London.

Yet this suspended Jack's ladder has its own magnificent reward for those who climb to the top. If one has enthusiasm to spare for architecture, the Victoria Tower has enough of the architect's genius to engage him for much longer than he will be able to stay at it in the view of London from the top which will appeal to him who is neither architect, artist nor antiquarian. The great city lies deep below like a toy world—the fine Elizabethan and smoky model of itself," wrote a brilliant man half a hundred years ago.

Even half-way up the tower London seems a dwarf city as well as a dwarf world, for the roofs around the arcade above the first tier of windows, with their white massive pillars and enormous arches, and as wide as some of the streets you dimly see below. But the roof in the treasure of the tower. Built as lightly as could be, consistent with its safety from the wind, it weighs, nevertheless, 400 tons. Its little parapet, looking like a speck of stone from Parliament Square, is 16 feet high. The lions and crowns are taller than a man, and the gilt tops to the four turrets and the crowns, 5 feet across and a ton each in weight. The gilt railing at the top is 6 feet high; the four lions which guard the corners are 20 feet high. From these corners rise four arched buttresses of cast iron, forming the centre into a crown 20 feet above the roof, and through this again passes the flagstaff, from the top of which floats 400 yards of bunting—a mile into the biggest Union Jack in England.

No man, except in mid-air, has ever seen London from the height at which this great flag flies.

Increasing English Divorces.

Some people are noting with uneasiness the number of divorces granted in our courts. In London this growth has been very rapid. In the first term of court the number of cases down for trial have increased from 177 in 1902 to 333 this year; in the second, from 216 in 1901 to 283 in 1903; in the third, from 210 in 1901 to 262 in 1903, and in the fourth, from 322 in 1901 to 351 in 1902. About 60 per cent. of the actions are brought by injured husbands.—Answers.

WIT AND SENSE.

Capt. Hunter's Unique Lecture to Toronto Empire Club on "The Futility Immediacy of the Young Canadian."

The other day, Capt. Hunter, LL.B., son of Dr. Hunter of the Registry Department of Ontario, delivered a rather unique lecture at the Empire Club luncheon on "The Futility Insolence of the Young Canadian." The World reported it as follows:

Capt. Hunter considered it one of the glories of the Empire Club that it was fitted by its organization for the beginning and ending of those family quarrels which make home life dear. He would not storm the kangaroo, nor contemn the Africander, nor dilate upon the imbecility of the British, but wished to call their attention to "the fatuous insolence of the Canadian."

There were two elements in the national question. The fixed one was Canada; the variable, the Canadian. They had many books on the makers and builders of Canada, some of which they had subscribed for and some almost paid for, but while the elder part of Canada had been made and re-made, re-coloured and reconquered, there had never been made a conquest of Canada. They had only hacked and whittled at it. It was a proof of the singular things which men took pride in to hear people glorying in the boast that the Northwest could support fifty millions, when the scanty population there looked like tardy corn on a map which hold it to the wall. The wealth and resources of Canada, that locked storehouse of nature, were the ultimate prize of the ultimate makers of the world. They were familiar with a native wine sort of ecstasy over the hyphenated Thing-Canada-of-Ours, its forests of immemorial age, and its business men of similar antiquity, but the days of the young country, which was to be mothered and nurtured, had come, and there was not a man in Canada who would not back his opinion against that of any Englishman.

Canada Had Assumed Insolence.

Inspired by the heroism of a few of us at Paardeberg, Canadians had taken on the first requisite of a great nation—insolence. There were two kinds of insolence—the benign and the malignant; the sustained and the fatuous. When Napoleon moved with 200,000 men at Jena he exhibited the sustained variety. In popular language, he had the ere cambe. When another Napoleon in 1870 tried to move with 250,000 men he presented an example of the fatuous kind. The French had not Botcha and Paardeberg in their pockets, and were not even sure whether they had the Malakoff and other little fights

Great Need of Carefulness.

It was unnecessary to point out the reasons for carefulness in face of this growing insolence. When a man thinks he can fight you and get on to Woodbridge Fair to arrive at the result. The same warning we had been filling us with post-prandial valor have also been spreading abroad the glory of our resources. There are our glorious forests, which are too stingy to cut; our unwrought mines, which we make a pretext for selling each other worthless stocks; our boundless granaries, which somebody else will make haste to get us a tenant for if we cannot fill them ourselves. We have immense resources and nothing to defend them with. Since 1812 we have had complete peace and no further occasion for it, which was that nobody knew we had anything worth stealing. Confederation had drawn the attention of brazen-faced peace, the emperor of the double-headed vulture. In an unguarded time Christian nations had learned of the timber and coal and arable land in Manchuria, and we knew the result. Russia had more regiments in Manchuria than Canada had companies in the Dominion. We have been foolish enough to "show our wad," and now we must protect it.

How England Might Lose.

We relied on England, but in a sea fight of five or six hours England might lose the command of the sea for six months. No nation would invade Canada with less than fifty or sixty thousand men, and Canada would not give us time to prepare as the British did the Boers. The 1895 the Boers were in the same state of ludicrous insolence which we now displayed. Every Boer was a heaven-born rifle shot. Instead of the Boers, two millions strong, Sir George Borden spoke of spending they had spent two million pounds. They had a rifle for every man. We had 40,000 for two millions.

Great, to be sure, in military preparations in 1897 our own bear a singular resemblance to the bad a navy of toy-army. But they had nothing to fear, as Canada has nothing ready. If we had a war we should be hacking into the stores for sporting rifles as the Greeks did. Its command Lariana was Helenic for Ridgeway. They might say the Greeks were degenerate; but give Lord Kitchener the Greeks and the money and he would take Constantinople with the Greeks as he took Khartoum with the Egyptians.

Had a Cafe Politician.

The Greeks had a sort of cafe politician who was omniscient, who talked of the indomitable courage of their ancestors and imagined of Marathon, which was a free translation of Paardeberg. Our climate did not permit of cafe politicians like the Greeks, but we had dining clubs in which the national glory was rendered amid thunderous applause of our own making. That sort of insolence feeds upon itself. Something practical was needed, and Fredrickton Bond has made it ten millions and got the job done some time ago, we should now have more land and less Alverstonian patronage.

In conclusion he thanked the club for their attention and the patience with which they had listened to words which he hoped to the Lord they would have allowed none but a native Canadian to utter.

No matter how much exercise you take you cannot build muscle without muscle-building food

Are you trying to build muscle on exercise and foods which contain no muscle-building elements? If you are, you are simply wearing out what little strength you have. If the distant ray of light, losing itself in utter darkness a little way down the tower, does not unnerve him, the climber winds round the spiral staircase a dozen times, and finds himself, almost tired, on the first floor. He is by no means over 50 feet square, and, in this grand apartment he will pause to reflect upon the grandeurs of the Victoria Tower.

The tower has a weight of 30,000 tons, and it helps us to realize its grandeur and magnitude if we reflect that its building was in progress for all but twenty years. The Londoner who went abroad for a year in the forties or the fifties came home to find that the tower had risen not quite eight yards in his absence, and so, at the rate of 23 feet a year, the Victoria Tower grew, from 1842 until it was completed.

It has within it over 140 separate rooms, each one fireproof, each containing the precious State papers which tell the story of England and its Kings. Divided into seven floors, all save two with stone rooms, the tower is a miracle of construction. How little the Londoners, who gazes at this splendid pile, imagines that at the top of it, on the 11th floor, works a powerful steam engine. It is its work to haul up through the well of the spiral staircase, the bundles of State papers, delivering them on the floor where they may be required, and it is a wonderful sight to see this huge narrow passage throb, as it were, with the life of such a wonderful sight, indeed, when the engine is not at work. If one has enthusiasm to spare for architecture, the Victoria Tower has enough of the architect's genius to engage him for much longer than he will be able to stay. But it is the view of London from the top which will tax the powers of him to neither architect, artist nor antiquarian. The great city lies deep below "like a toy world"—like a diminished and smoky model of itself," wrote Jo Gamber hardly half a century ago.

Even half-way up the tower London seems a dwarf city as you walk around the arcade above the first floor, and, looking out at the windows, see pillars and enormous arches, and the wide sums of the streets as you dimly see below. Capt. Hunter's Unique Lecture to Toronto Empire Club on "The Fatuous Insolency of the Young Canadian."

The other day, Capt. Hunter, LL. B., son of Dr. Hunter of the Ingleside Observatory, Ontario, delivered a rather unique lecture at the Empire Club luncheon on "The Fatuous Insolence of the Young Canadian." The World reported it as follows:

MAKE YOURSELF NECESSARY TO SOMEBODY

(Emerson)

We have made ourselves necessary to a great many "somebodies," when it comes to the question of Clothing. We know of nothing that is more of a necessity to-day than good Clothing.

Our showing of New Spring Styles in men's Suits has never been equalled, even in our own store, and an inspection of them will most surely convince you how necessary we are to a man's comfort and welfare.

No matter what your taste for clothes is, we can please it. The brightest of Tweeds—the prettiest shades of blue in serges and worsteds, with a range of prices that make choosing an easy matter. Say, $5 to $15 and all the betweens in prices.

A few minutes of your time spent among the suits will tell you more than we can if we used a page of this paper

TIMELY TOPICS.

Beautiful weather overhead yesterday. If, as the old lady said, "a body was travelling that way."

We regret to report that several of our fellow-citizens, in spite of the beautiful weather, were "bottled up" at home yesterday, and didn't get to church.

The snow is going away, slow but sure. It is reported that, on many of the country roads, the tops of the telegraph poles can now be plainly seen.

The gas on Saturday night—or rather the lack of it—was, in many places, rather trying on the eyes. Some thoughtless people were blaming the Gas committee for the poor light. They might as well blame them for the severe winter, for one led to the other. The fact is, the Gas manager informs us, there is an accumulation of water in the main at a certain point on Pinnacle street, which extends some 150 yards. There is still five feet of frost in the ground, and it takes time to get down to the main, and then there is the chance of not being able to strike the right spot in order to clear out the main. It may be necessary to uncover the main for the whole 150 yards mentioned. There are several "sags" in the main on Pinnacle street, and these cause the water to stand there. However, everything possible is being done to improve matters, and it is hoped that in a day or two things will be all right again.

This ought to be great maple sugar weather. The creek will probably be flooded in a week or two.

ONLY A SUGGESTION.

BUT IT HAS PROVEN OF INTEREST AND VALUE TO THOUSANDS.

Common sense would suggest that it can't be wise to become healthy and plump it can only result from the food we eat and digest and that food should be albuminous or flesh forming food, like eggs, beefsteak and cereals; in other words the kinds of food that make flesh are the foods which form the greater part of our daily bills of fare.

But the trouble is, we don't do so: enough and generally too much the stomach, from abuse and overwork, fails to properly digest and assimilate it, which is the reason so many people remain thin in spite of their weight; the digestive organs do not completely digest the food forming material and so the undigested material is wasted.

There are thousands of such who are really confirmed dyspeptics, although they have no particular pain or inconvenience from their stomachs.

Such persons would lay their prejudices aside and make a reasonable trial of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after eating every meal one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets the food would be quickly and thoroughly digested because these tablets contain the natural peptones and diastase which every weak stomach lacks, and by supplying this want the stomach is soon enabled to reach its natural tone and vigor.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets digest every form of flesh forming food, milk, eggs, bread and potatoes and this is the reason they so quickly build up, strengthen and invigorate thin, dyspeptic men, women and children.

Nursing mothers, children, even the most delicate, use them with marked benefit as they contain no strong, irritating drugs, no catharties or any harmful ingredient.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the most successful and most widely known of any remedy for stomach troubles because it is the most reasonable and scientific of modern medicines.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by every druggist in the United States and Canada as well as in Great Britain, for 50c per full complete treatment.

Nothing further is required to cure any stomach trouble or to make thin, nervous, dyspeptic people strong, plump and well.

COOLIES INTO CANADA.

Chins Asks For Free Entry As a Result of Reactive in Immigration of Yellow Labor Into Transvaal.

London, March 21.—(C.A.P.)—The London Press states that the Chinese Government, in returning its sanction to the emigration of Chinese coolies to the Transvaal, demands their free entry into Vancouver. It is pointed out that this might result in a serious disturbance of the relations between Britain and the United States.

Poor Law Immigrants.

London, March 21.—(C.A.P.)—Lord Crewe, chairman of the State Children's Aid Association, in urging the desirability of greater emigration to Canada of poor law children, denounced the Metropolitan Board of Guardians for their proposal for the establishment of poor law receiving homes in Canada. He quotes a letter from John Joseph Kelso, urging the avoidance of any conflict with Canadian public opinion. Lord Crewe believes the work of voluntary agencies is sufficient.

Free Press Secretary.

London, March 21.—(C.A.P.)—Sir Sandford Fleming has written the Postmaster-General of New Zealand proposing a free news cable service of 500 words daily between Canada and New Zealand for a year, and thinks Australia is likely to participate.

ONCE BIT, TWICE SHY.

Canada Wants No Joint Commission to Settle Tariff With Germany.

London, March 21.—(C.A.P.)—The Daily Chronicle says "once bit, twice shy" expresses the attitude of Canada towards the Colonial Office proposal for the solving of the tariff difficulties between Canada and Germany by a joint commission. Rightly or wrongly, Canada feels that the English representative in the Alaska case gave away her case, and she is in no mood to risk a similar result in the case of Germany. As in the Alaska case, a settlement might be politically advantageous to Britain, but Canada this time wants to arrange terms herself.

Privy Councillor.

London, March 21.—(C.A.P.)—The King has approved of the appointment of Sir Henri Elzear Taschereau, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, to be a member of the Imperial Privy Council.

Daughter to Curzon.

London, March 21.—(C.A.P.)—A daughter was born in London yesterday to Lady Curzon, wife of Lord Curzon of Keddleston, viceroy and Governor-General of India. Mother and child are doing well.

Chinese in Transvaal.

London, March 21.—(C.A.P.)—Right Hon. H. Campbell-Bannerman's resolution censuring the Government to be moved today runs "That this House disapproves the conduct of the Government in advising the Crown not to disallow the ordinance sanctioning the introduction of Chinese labor into the Transvaal."

GOT A BAD SCARE.

Liberal Whip Telegraphs Liberal Members to Be Here Without Fail To-day—Successful Opposition Tactics.

Toronto, March 21.—(Special)—Whip Dowson on Saturday telegraphed all the Liberal members who were out of town an urgent appeal for them to be on hand on Monday, owing to the change in the tactics of the Opposition. They will be kept close to the Parliament Buildings for the remainder of the session in order to prevent a recurrence of Friday's situation, when the Government was unable to carry its own motion to adjourn the House. Heretofore, the members have been free to be away from their offices on Saturday and Friday and Monday, as no debatable questions were likely to arise on those days.

This last move of the Liberals is the outcome of what is believed to have been the decision of the Opposition in caucus on Friday afternoon to make no more "concessions" with the Government, but to contest it unaware if possible. There is no doubt about it, the Government got a bad scare on Friday.

REFORMS IN MACEDONIA.

Pressure Brought to Bear on Porte to Accept Scheme.

Constantinople, March 21.—The Russian and Austrian Embassies yesterday renewed their pressure upon the Porte to accept unaltered the Austro-Russian scheme of reforms in Macedonia. The Russo-Austrian note pointed out that the counter proposals of the Porte made on March 17, which objected to the placing of foreign officers in command of the gendarmie in Macedonia did not tally with Turkey's original acceptance of the reform scheme. The note warned the Porte of the grave consequences that would follow any further delay.

Testing Swords.

A very picturesque and effective test is applied to all the swords made for the English army before they are allowed to go into commission. A powerful man takes each in turn, weights it and strikes it with all his might upon a huge round stone. If the sword shows any sign of weakness it is at once discarded.

Sarcastic.

They had been discussing the baby's ears, eyes and nose.

"And I think it's got its father's hair," said the joyful young mother.

"Oh, is that who's got it? I noticed it was missing." And as the tall girl with the suave manner said this the mother looked dubiously at her.—Judge.

THEY GROW PIMPLES AWAY.—These young people with pimples fight lightly. It tells of internal irregularities which should long since have been corrected. The liver and the kidneys are out of harmony. Their functions in the healthy way "the should, and these pimples are to be, you know that it's the blood purifier, Parmalee's Vegetable Pills will drive them all away. A few days and the skin clear and clean. Try them, and there will be another witness to their excellence.

If you have a good business, it is always better to sell it than to wind it up. Sometimes the nerves are unstrung and the whole body giving way to weakness. The mind is filled with gloom and dismal forebodings, the appetite is absent and the digestive organs, sleeplessness generally follow. Parmalee's Vegetable Pills will build up the whole system, there would be no solicitor for a will and Parmalee's Vegetable Pills should. A few days ago I took a very severe dough, had a virulent attack of the grip, was left with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. Parmalee's Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep, but will set on functions right. Parmalee's Pills will make refreshed and restored to health.

When one gets hopping mad his nerves seem at a standstill.

A WONDERFUL CURE.—Mr. David Smith, Ox Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspepsia Cure. I was Woman's Aversion to Indexes.

"Talk about the inclination to study from envelope to discover the sender instead of opening the letter being a trait of womankood," said a Brooklyn man the other day, "it hasn't is it with a woman's aversion to indexes. Give a woman a book of poems like those of Byrne, for instance, and she'll turn to the pages for twenty minutes or more to find the piece she is really after rather than look at the table of contents. Bother to her and she'll say, 'Oh, I'll find it in a second,' and away she'll go, turning the pages again.

"The other night by actual timing it took my wife twenty-two minutes to find 'Mary in Heaven' in a copy of Burns, for not only did she lose actual time turning the pages, but if she came to anything she liked, such as 'Molly Willie's Prayer' and 'Bruce to Stewart,' she'd daily over them awhile. Rarely do men do that. The first thing they go for is the index."

MASTER OF BIOGRAPHY

LESLIE STEPHEN'S NAME LINGERS HALF FORGOTTEN.

An Eminent Man-of-Letters—Literary Circles Pleased When He Was Knighted in 1902—Brother of Famous Judge—Editor of Cornhill—His Great Work—Rank as a Writer.

Leslie Stephen is one of those names which lurk in everybody's memory, half-forgotten, without associations to assist one to recall them. "There is a good deal in a name, after all, and here is a very famous one, and the mention of it will have no effect on the average man beyond making him vaguely wonder where he heard it before. As it is, this eminent man-of-letters is unknown to the public which is on familiar terms with Sir Gilbert Parker, who was knighted at the same time. None of the honors bestowed by Royal favor in 1902 pleased literary circles more than the K.C.B. given to Leslie Stephen.

Master of Short Biography.

Sir Leslie Stephen is dead, and in a hundred newspaper and magazine offices short biographies are now being written about the master of biographical sketches. Though his life was a long and active one, full of toil and productive of lasting results, it is difficult in surveying the broad fields in which he labored to gather a message which a non-literary public will appreciate. Sir Leslie was a reserved man, dwelling in a high, thin atmosphere, rarely descending to the plain. He had much to do with the elaborate dictionary often remarked by students of Tennyson. He was, in short, a bookman, instead of a fellow-citizen. It is safe to say that he never took enough interest in public affairs to run for any office in the gift of a municipality. Had he done so he would have been defeated. He lived his long life in the past, in the company of that famous host of English authors whom he loved so well.

Brother of Famous Judge.

His taste for literature was inherited fairly enough from a long line of ancestors, who handled the goosequill with some facility. His father, Sir James Stephen, was the author of a series of essays on ecclesiastical biography, and his grandfather had also published matter of a more or less fugitive character. His brother, James Fitzjames Stephen, inherited the literary bent, too, and was a prolific writer, though more famous as a lawyer. Later he was made a judge and knighted, and was considered one of the most notable figures on the British bench. He was the judge who sentenced Mrs. Maybrick, and was in the centre of the fierce legal controversies in the past quarter of a century. After his death Leslie prepared his biography, and in it defended his brother with skill and eloquence that attacks made on his conduct of that famous case.

Editor of Cornhill.

Leslie Stephen was born in Kensington, on Nov. 28, 1832, and received his education at Eton, King's College, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He took his B.A. in 1854, and his M.A. three years later. For several years he was a fellow and tutor of Trinity, but in 1864 went to London and embarked on the sea of literature. In 1871 he became editor of the celebrated Cornhill Magazine, which had probably as many famous contributors as any magazine before or since. Stephen held this position for 11 years, and in that time had come in contact with the greatest English writers of the period. Among his friends he could number Hardy, Stevenson, Norris, James Payne, Henry James, Russell Lowell, and a host of others. As a youth he had been on familiar terms with the Macaulays, James Spedding, Sir Henry Taylor, the Nassau Senior, while Tennyson, Dickens, Thackeray were among the various members of various little circles in which he was made welcome. At the latter's house he wedded Miss Mall Gazette he met Harriet Marion Thackeray daughter of the great novelist, and her he married. She died in 1875, and he wedded Julia Prinsep Duckworth, whose death occurred about nine years ago.

Rank as a Writer.

In 1883, Leslie Stephen, then 50 years of age, began the work on which his fame must rest. The desire seemed him to prepare a biographical dictionary of his famous countrymen, "to carry a causeway through the vast morass of antiquarian accumulation," and to this task he addressed himself. He did not pretend to write all these biographies himself. He was to be merely the editor, but, as a matter of fact, the great share of the burden fell on his own shoulders. He issued forty volumes of the Dictionary of National Biography, and then, his health failing, he called to assist him Mr. Sidney Lee. In collaboration they got out five more volumes, and then Mr. Stephen resigned the monumental task to the capable hands of Mr. Lee, who has continued the work ever since. Anyone who wishes to study Leslie Stephen at his best should read his sketches in the Dictionary. A study of dictionaries has been called the "peerless model of biography," and Stephen has given the thousands of pages in this library the right to that title. It is said that Stephen was the biographer of some of the greatest characters there.

Stephen as a Writer.

In all his writings (and besids his contributions to the Dictionary he issued about a dozen volumes) Leslie Stephen's personality is strongly marked. As a stylist he is admirable, a master of brevity, an artist in detail. To carve a character on a cherry stone, as someone has expressed it, was a task in which he delighted, and yet, when opportunity offered, he could split hairs with the writings, biographical, and biographies philosophical studies. He was always downright and sincere, and it has been said of him that he never wrote below his best. Although he might quarrel with the many he was a stoutic of the school of Bentham, Mill and Spencer, and had little sympathy with those great men, Coleridge, for instance, who held opposite views. But if he has written with lack of sympathy it must be remembered that his business was not to eulogize. As a cold, impartial, slightly sardonic and humorous biographer, he will rank with the best writers of English language.

"NOT MUCH, NOT MUCH."

Tit-Bits relates the following: One of the best known R. A.'s has a favorite anecdote—one often told but always good—which he claims to be the original narrator. Moreover, it is a true one.

An old country couple (for he relates) had strayed into the Manchester Art Gallery, catalogue in hand, and were wandering from room to room looking at the pictures, which were numbered anew—one, two, three, and so on in each division, instead of continuously throughout the whole exhibition. The two old people stopped in awe and admiration before Madox Brown's heroic picture, "The Death of King Lear."

"I'll see, Jarge—I'll see, of you'll give me a minute."

The old lady hastily turned to the catalogue division of another room, and read off the number corresponding to that of the picture before them. It chanced to be that of Landseer's famous picture of a collie fallen over a cliff, and just reached by the anxious shepherd, who announces the result of his examination of the poor beast's injuries—to his comrades on the cross above. She read off the title of the picture to her husband:

"There's Jim in the Old Dog Yet."

Looking compassionately on the picture form of the aged and forsaken King, "Jarge" failed to perceive anything wrong in the name.

"She there is, gal!" he exclaimed, in a burst of pity, adding, with dropped voice and a shake of the head at Lear, "But not much, not much!"

THE FADED TINTYPE.

Beneath the weight of many years his aged back was bent,
But from his gentle, dim blue eyes there shone a light that told
A radiance in an old face, and as a seat he bent
He gazed about him with a smile—then in his pocket groped
And ever-ready hand his eyes
Wiped that his ear late they might pay,
For that was his treasure.

His clothes threadbed and worn, were clean and patched with loving care,
His linen coarse but in home-made gloves; for not outdated fitness or hair
Beneath his shaggy brows and top—for old told of some one who Loved Lucy Gray as much as when life's morning was new.
A moment more he unwound
A string with which his purse was bound
And brought forth with it to view

A scrap of cloth, a pencil small, a key and bent a dime;
And then he stopped: in happy thoughts he seemed lost for a time;
A faded flower that was all; a sweet old woman's face,
And yet he kissed it softly ere he put it in its place.
And then to know what made his life so happy was a child's wife
Gave his old age its grace.

GLAMIS CASTLE.

Secret of Hidden Room Never Disclosed —A Semi-Human Monster.

The death on Feb. 16 of Lord Strathmore recalls to mind the story of the mystery that always surrounded Glamis Castle, in Forfarshire, one of the seats of the Strathmore family, and in which a weird secret exists there is not doubted.

Many times curious things happened when guests were staying there. One wet afternoon, when a party of guests were in the hall, Lady Lindsay suddenly appeared and said: "I want to ask all of you to go to your rooms at once and stay there till the bell rings." All hurried off, but immediately twenty minutes later or when they heard the bell, but no one made answer to it, knowing the existence of the mystery.

Once an enquiry was curious to know what was in the secret chamber, and the late Earl replied: "If you should guess even the nature of this secret you would go down on your knees and thank God that you were ignorant of it."

One Lady Strathmore tried to locate the chamber by sending some one to every room to hang a towel out of the window. On one occasion no one was in the castle proper, but occasionally found on returning to the bedroom that the carpet had been taken up and relaid. He noticed that the marks of the carpet was different at one end of the room, proving the furniture and raising the carpet he laid bare a trap door which he forced open and found himself in a small room. Right passage ended in a cemented wall. The cement was still soft, leaving the impress of a finger. He returned to his room, after receiving received an envelope containing a message from the services, with the intimation that the carriage was ready to take him up to the station for the first train.

The secret of the castle is known only to three persons at a time, but the holder of the title, the heir when he becomes of age, and the Earl's factor or agent. The secret has never leaked out. The favorite legend of the country folks regarding the mystery is that there is in existence some semi-human monster, born in the family, which is still living after centuries.

FOR THE COMPLEXION.

Shaving Soap. It Is Said, Works Wonders With the Skin.

Woman is employing shaving soap as a complexion fortifier. A retired nurse, discovered this value of shaving soap, She had a patient whose complexion had become ruined by a protracted fever. None of the ordinary treatments seemed to be able to restore her complexion. One day the nurse heard the sick woman's husband telling how soft and pliable shaving soap made the skin. Forthwith she decided to try shaving soap on her patient's face.

First she bathed the patient's face thoroughly in warm water and then in soap lather. The water was as warm as was comfortable to bear. She rubbed gently, although thoroughly, after the application of the soap she rinsed off the lather with warm water. Then began a series of rinsings, every one a little cooler than the previous. Gradually she worked up to cold water, and the face had a bracing dose of it, a stimulating dash that toned the pores and left the skin fair for the day. Little by little the fabulous disappeared, and by the end of the dinner, while the tonic of the cold water brought a new rosiness to it.

The experiment proved such a success that the nurse and the patient both agreed it as far as they could reach, that it was a panacea for all ills, and that giving themselves the treatment every night in the face of the day's dust and powder.—Kansas City Star.

PRETTY LIPS.

Pulling, Pinching and Biting Them Will Accomplish the Desired Result.

To be really pretty the lips should be rather full, but without the least suggestion of thickness. They should, too, be of bright red, not salvy red, suggestive of salt, but clear red, noting a healthy body. This, colorless lips betray poverty of the blood, and if they are pale, no matter how bright their color, show an irritable, fretty disposition.

So many girls when reading pull and pinch their lips. This bad habit causes the delicate child lace to wear short time a pair of ugly, thick lips is the result. Unfortunately this unbecoming blemish is one of the most difficult practice of touching the lips must first be abandoned and the lips gently rubbed with cold cream or three times a day. The girl who unconsciously plays with her lips will do well to wear a pair of woolly gloves when reading or studying. She should also get those around her to remind her directly they notice her hand raised to her face.

Biting the lips is another habit which also thickens them, besides making a bad temper. The best cure for this is to keep a white bone penholder in the mouth in moments of leisure, and that will prevent the teeth closing on the lips.

THE NURSERY.

Musical literature is very interesting and adapted to the small minds should be plentifully supplied for the children. A love of music can be instilled into a child's music, and it will improve if it is encouraged, so teach it some simple little songs to sing about the house.

Remember that milk is sufficient nourishment for a child, not only between the age of a year, and do not be tempted to give him "just a taste" of tea or food.

A trained nurse suggests substituting for the familiar powder puff used after the baby's bath a piece of soft, soft sorbent cotton. Discard for a fresh piece as often as required.

Never let a little child be frightened under any circumstances, and do not threaten him if you can possibly avoid it. The griefs of childhood are very bitter, sometimes laying the foundation for ill health in after years.

Washing Embroidery.

Never put embroidery with the regular wash. Put such a piece in suds made of hot water and some pure soap. Squeeze it gently between the hands, never wringing, for if the washboard is used the embroidery stitches will be disturbed. Rinse in clear water thoroughly and hasten the drying process by pressing it gently between clean dry towels, so that the embroidery is perfectly smooth and unwrinkled. Then roll up the towels and wring as hard as you please. While the towels will remove some from the towels and lay face downward on the ironing board, taking care first that the back of the work is covered with a clean blanket underneath the white cover. This is necessary to secure the embossing of the work.

Frying in Fat.

When frying food in deep fat we may well remember these few simple rules: Have the fat smoking hot always. Wipe fish thoroughly. Heat the food slightly beforehand if possible, then it will not reduce the heat of the fat when cooked, such as croquettes, require only enough fat to brown bread and count. For cooked food the bread should brown in forty counts; for uncooked, in sixty counts. Drain thoroughly. Drain the fried articles on crumpled paper and do not heap them upon one another.

Dining Clothes.

When bluing clothes, if bulling water is poured over pure indigo tied in a thin bag indigo can be bought at a druggist's—and the liquid thus obtained poured into a tub of clear water the household linen will have the pearly tint of new clothes. Indigo dissolves without dyeing and leaves no blue streaks and mysterious spots of iron rust which often appear after using the ordinary bluing bag.

TIMBER IN RIVER BEDS.

"If some scheme could be devised," said a Stillwater (Minn.) man, "by which the sunken logs which fill the beds of rivers and creeks in the logging sections of this country could only be recovered, immense fortunes would be made. Along the St. Croix alone it is estimated that logs enough are imbedded in the sand of river bottom to keep the mills running full time. Under present conditions the loss is total, for no successful method has ever been devised to effect this saving.

"Occasionally logs cut years ago are driven by the winter floods from their sand beds and driven upon the shores, where the action of sun and wind dries them and eventually the log, they will float down stream, but the percentage of logs recovered is small, and millions of dollars' worth of property is lost beyond recovery until some enterprising genius invents a machine or process to recover the timber.

"At Stillwater logs occasionally come to the surface bearing marks in use half a century ago, and when they appear the old lumberman grow reminiscent of men who have been long forgotten, but who were important characters in the pioneer logging days of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

"No possible estimate can be made of the amount of timber in the beds of lumbermen estimate that the rivers of Wisconsin, by their valve of the logs buried in their sands, have fortunes of millions of dollars if the logs could be recovered. Wisconsin has lost long the big pine states, and your Chippewa, Wisconsin, St. Croix and Minnesota rivers and their tributaries contain fortunes in sunken timber.

"Since spring as it may appear, the value of the timber in the Mississippi river, which has been submerged for half or a quarter of a century, and is now occasionally made to recover sunken logs. At one time a company was organized at Stillwater to recover logs, and thus recover some of the timber, but the plan did not work with any great degree of success, this method being found too expensive. Some one will come along some day with a plan, and this immensely valuable product, now lost will be recovered."

Brain.

The brain is an important organ, serving as it does to keep the head from collapsing, and from the fact of doing the hair call for a head of some sort. Again, there is nothing like a head to show off a hat, and the hat should feel rather foolish without our heads.

For a long time scientists were unable to discover why it is that the brain is divided into two parts, and concluded it remained for a clever French savant to solve the difficulty.

"Quite like," said he, "the loaf ones has and not yet come in when man was created."

Psychology deals with the organic aspect of thought. To psychology we owe the knowledge that cafe's brain makes good soup.

No Such Thing

Successful decoration must be the outcome of study—of thought rather than of mere chance.

And in the chance room there will surely be something wrong.

Possibly the color. Perchance Drawing—Likely both.

Whether Chamber, Drawing Room, Living Room, Library or Den, the room must be treated with thoughts of surroundings, of furniture, of complexion, of lighting, of size.

The environment of a room with North or East exposure must not be blue, while either West or Southern exposure may use blue to advantage

How about Crimsons, Greens and Brown—where may these colors be used—just ask your decorator, if he is worthy the name he can tell you.

REV. E. WOODCOCK DEAD.

PASSED AWAY ON SATURDAY AFTERNOON — PNEUMONIA THE CAUSE.

After a life of nearly 81 years, the greater portion of which was spent in the ministry, Rev. Eli Woodcock, a superannated Methodist minister died on Saturday afternoon, at the family residence, Grier street. Death was caused by an attack of pneumonia. The deceased gentleman was born at Fredericksburg in the year 1823. In early life he was converted and at the age of 30 years was ordained as a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Whilst in active work he was stationed at Shilling, Hope, Derry, Amherst, Belleville, Napanee, Mallory town, Wellington, Wesleyville, Gosport, Hungerford, Deseronto, Selby, Elston's Corners, Newburg and Nepean. He was an earnest worker and his splendid preaching, accomplishing much good wherever he let his hand. In this respect he was ably assisted by his wife, who took great interest in the church work. Rev. Mr. Woodcock retired from active work a few years ago, and had spent the greater portion of that time in his city. Every month he was admitted to the ministry, namely, 1853, he was married to Miss Phoebe A. Wilson, of Parrsville, who, with a family of four sons and one daughter, survives. Just last fall Mr. Woodcock and wife celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. Since residing in Belleville the deceased was identified with the Tabernacle. The sons are Percy and Charles, of Brockville; Edwin, in Illinois, and Clayton, of New York. The daughter, a married lady, resides at Brockville. To the aged widow and family will be extended the sincere sympathy of a large circle of friends.

THE FUNERAL.

At 1 o'clock this afternoon the remains were taken to the Tabernacle, where the funeral services were held in the presence of ministers from the surrounding district were present to pay the last tribute of respect to a departed brother. Rev. Geo. Bell, pastor of the church, conducted the services, being assisted by this Rev. E. J. Edmison, of Newcastle, President of the Bay of Quinte Conference, Rev. Dr. Crothers, Rev. Dr. Gardiner and others. Rev. Dr. Gardiner gave an address telling of the life of the deceased. After the services, which were largely attended, the remains were conveyed to the cemetery for interment. The bearers were six ministers, namely, Revs. F. B. Stratton, T. Meyers, S. Ferguson, A. C. Maybee, A. Downe and A. Martin.

SAID FAREWELL AFTER 30 YEARS.

Rev. M. W. Maclean Severed His Connection With St. Andrew's Church Last Night.

Pulpit Officially Declared Vacant —Some Things the Rev. Gentleman Said in His Farewell Sermon—Rev. Dr. Crothers Preached on The Temperance Question.

Farewell Sermon at St. Andrew's.

There was a large congregation at St. Andrew's Church last night, including many former members who had gathered to hear the farewell sermon of Rev. M. W. Maclean, who last night severed his connection with the church of which he has been pastor for more than thirty years. The Rev. gentleman acted at his lower the first chapter of the First Epistle to the Thessalonians, which seemed singularly appropriate to the occasion. They then sang an anthem, "Hark, Hark, My Soul," in very good time and tune, and then Rev. Mr. Maclean rose to deliver his last message to the people with whom he has labored for nearly a generation. The text was a verse from the chapter which he had read at the lesson. He would, he said, like to say a word as to the characteristics of Christian congregations. In politics, commerce and philanthropic work people were banded together by clearly defined lines and for the good of those so banded together. And it was in some respects, the same with churches. A church congregation was the confession of faith banded together for mutual help in resisting worldliness and for the spread of the faith of faith. There were many denominations in the Christian church, but underlying all there was the same truth believed, the same Saviour worshipped, speaking of the characteristics of a Christian congregation, the preacher first of all, they were receivers of the truth from God which brought all blessings. Men and women who joined the church thereby gave evidence of their willingness to receive God's truth. Another characteristic was that Christian congregations became dispensers of the truth, they were to spread it through the world as they received the light they must reflect it rather than. Christianity, like charity, began at home, and the church in its every style of the Christian. If a man was received into Gospel its effect would be manifested in his enlarged spiritual being, and he will exert what influence he has for the good of humanity; he will be honest for honesty's sake, and not merely for the best policy; he will not be censorious or malicious, but at least would not think the best of his fellow-man, and always ready to do anything which will lessen evil. A congregation composed of such people will seek to advance the glory of God in the hearts and minds of men, and then, and then only, can it justify its existence as a church; then only could they expect the commendation of the Master, "Well done, good and faithful servant." In conclusion he regretted that the ministry of the congregation of St. Andrew's had been such a short one, 30 years and more might follow them all their days, and that they might be truth, and in the little kinks must be looked after. You may depend upon it, we know from long experience what is required for the young men.

Pulpit Officially Declared Vacant.

Rev. Dr. Crothers on Temperance.

Before a large congregation last night, Rev. Dr. Crothers, pastor of Bridge St. Church, spoke on the temperance question in Ontario. It was, he said, the most vital question of the day. There was far too much drinking going on among the young men. The Ontario Licence-law was a good one, but it was not enforced as it should be. In some cases, he believed, the Commissioners were at fault, and in some cases the fault lay ores failed in their duty. In the matter of temperance things were coming to a crisis, and the question is, Will the Premier do? He is being tested, and the time of his opportunity has arrived. The prayers of God's people should go up for those in authority, that they may do right in this matter.

A trio, composed of Miss Vermilyea, Mr. D. A. Cameron and Prof. Brandon, sang a selection entitled "Praise Ye the Lord."

McKay, K.C., occupied the chair and some 50 of the most prominent gentlemen of Kingston and vicinity gathered around the board to do honor to their departing associate. Mr. Gildersleeve is taking a position in the one he is just leaving, with the Northern Navigation Company.

An address was read by J. L. Whiting, and the presentation of a handsome gold watch was entrusted to Hon. Wm. Harty. Some of those who responded to toasts were Messrs. W. D. McLean, E. J. B. Pense, L. Shannon, Dr. Carscallen, Dr. Pegram. Regret was expressed by the speakers at the fact Mr. Gildersleeve's absence will bring to an end the pleasant working and success followed these remarks. Mr. Gildersleeve is one of the most popular men in Kingston. He was once mayor.

CLOTHES FOR YOUNG MEN.

Can the Ook Hall please the young men with their clothes? Certainly we can, we always do. Young men are particular, we know that and cater to that fact. We know that all the little kinks must be looked after. You may depend upon it, we know from long experience what is required for the young men.

The Philharmonic Society.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,—I respectfully desire through The Intelligencer to call attention to the fact that a second Cycle of Musical Festivals is in contemplation throughout the Dominion of Canada during the spring of 1905. These will be similar to those so successfully carried out last year, as arranged by Mr. Lindsay Spence, Toronto, of Ottawa, and conducted by Sir Alexander G. Mackenzie, the eminent British composer and conductor. The Belleville Philharmonic Society has been invited to join heartily in the movement, which has for its object the development of choral singing in our country. Sir Alexander Mackenzie will in all probability be present to conduct these festivals, and the assistance of a complete orchestra and distinguished soloists will also be provided. It will certainly be to the credit of Belleville to be one of the other cities in undertaking an event of this order and under such distinguished auspices. The recent performance of the Philharmonic Society has demonstrated that Belleville has a society capable of doing work of a high order. What a host of ladies and gentlemen should unite in earnestly studying for, weeks and months the compositions of the great masters, giving their time freely for their love of the beautiful in art, and so help elevate the musical taste of the community (especially in this age of rush, time, cake walk and sport). They should receive nothing but the highest encouragement from the management. The people of Belleville certainly did encourage the grand orchestral concert by the highly representative audience present, and I trust will show their appreciation of the society's work, and the officers and members feel encouraged thereby. I hope, therefore, that next season we may be able to enlarge our plans and take part in the scheme of musical festivals, which will extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and I feel sure we will receive the help and encouragement of all our citizens in this.

Yours very sincerely,
V. P. HUNT.

LIKELY TO PROTEST.

If Russia should use the Dardanelles straits for its Black Sea fleet the European powers are likely to protest. For over sixty years the Dardanelles and Bosphorus have been closed to all nations except with the consent of Turkey. It is the jealousy of the nations which has thrown the protection of the Ottoman Empire, and its independence and territorial integrity has been a clause in various treaties. It is difficult to understand why this should be a cardinal factor in European continental politics, and it is suggested that everyone should enjoy the use of Dardanelles—just as in Canada everyone enjoys the use of Dardanelles Pirkalin cigarettes. They can be had with cork, silver or plain tips at all dealers.

CROSSED THE TRENT VALLEY CANAL.

MR. R. B. ROGERS ANSWERS QUESTIONS ASKED BY MR. F. J. H. FLINT.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

A copy of Mr. Flint's letter of enquiry regarding some facts mentioned in my letter on the Trent waterway has just been sent to me. I shall gladly give the information desired so far as my stock of knowledge. The estimated cost of transshipping Midland to Trenton 4-4 to 1-2 cent per bushel. The depth of water in the waterway when completed will be 6 feet 1 inches. The present barges on the Erie canal are about one third the capacity of those intended for use on the Trent. The distance from Georgian Bay to Trenton will be about 200 miles, of which only about one tenth of the distance will be actual canal. The Erie canal is about 352 miles from Buffalo to Albany, about half of which distance is actual canal, and 150 miles of river navigation from Albany to New York. In comparing the length of time required to go from Midland to Montreal, and from Buffalo to New York, many different points have to be taken into consideration—but a single steam barge from Midland to Montreal can make 69 trips and from Buffalo to New York, the Erie canal, about double this time. Regarding freight rates by rail or by water of names the rate on the Trent canal can only be arrived at by comparison with the rates on other large canals, for instance, on the Erie canal. The distance from Midland to tide water at Montreal is 445 miles. From Buffalo to tide water at New York is 503 miles. Freight is delivered now at Midland from the western states at 1 cent per bushel, and at Buffalo at from 1.46 to 2 cents per bushel. By the Erie canal, Rector Symonds, who is perhaps the most capable man in charge of the United States, calculates that wheat can be taken from Buffalo to New York at 6-10 of a cent per bushel. Now if they can do that on the Erie canal, why not on the Trent canal, being as I have mentioned, a water-way, not a canal. This 6-10 cent is added to the 1 cent rate to Midland and 1-2 cent for handling, which would make a rate of 23 cents from the western states to Montreal via Port Hope 6 cents, via Midland 7 cents, via Erie 10 cents. Western ports to New York via Buffalo by water and rail 2.46 cents, and by water about 5 1-2 cents.

Regarding the difference in distance from Port Arthur to Liverpool, that via the Trent canal is 757 miles longer than via the Erie canal, which on the return trip amounts to 1,514 miles and is not mentioned by Mr. Flint. Regarding the question of water power, that depends from what point you get your power. There are both private and municipal owners of water power.

Hoping the above will be satisfactory, I am,

Yours truly,
R. B. ROGERS.

CAR BARNS DESTROYED.

Second Fire in Week and Incendiarism Is Suspected.

Chicago, March 21.—Fire last night destroyed the Union Traction Company's car barns at Division street and Western avenue, causing a loss of $150,000. Five of the company's employes who were fighting the flames when the firemen arrived were imprisoned in the burning structure by a falling roof, and all were painfully burned before they could be rescued. This is the second of the Union Traction Company's barns to burn within a week, and both fires are believed to have been of incendiary origin.

Big Fire at Ingersoll.

Ingersoll, March 21.—Nearly $20,000 damage was caused by a fire which destroyed R. N. Thurtell's drug store, J. Andrew's barber shop, Frederick Lewis's grocery store and the Ingersoll Amateur Athletic rooms in the McKinnon building early yesterday morning. The firemen were called out at 2 o'clock, and stuck to their posts until nearly noon. The origin of the fire is unknown. There was $4,000 insurance on the building, and the following on contents: Frederick Dutton, $3,000; I. A. Read, $500; J. Andrews, $400; R. N. Thurtell, $4,100.

Wrens in 18 Years.

Napanee, March 21.—Just at the noon-hour yesterday fire was discovered in E. Richardson's photograph gallery in the Grange Block, Dundas street. The whole upper portion of the block was gutted. The following parties suffered loss, mostly through water: A. E. Hoag, fur and woollen goods; John Paisley, grocer; Jamieson, tailor; in flats, & Lockett, boots and shoes; E. E. Richardson, photographer. The total loss. James Walters and A. E. Lasher removed most of their stock. It is over 18 years since Napanee has had such a disastrous fire as this one.

Fire at Wallaceburg.

Wallaceburg, March 21.—A dwelling occupied by George Gray and owned by Mrs. D. P. McDonald, situated on Wellington street, was burned at an early hour yesterday morning. The inmates were awakened by the smoke and made their escape out of the second-story window. The loss and insurance are alitaf loss. Loss on building and contents about $1,200.

Serious Prairie Fires.

Hemingford, March 21.—Prairie fires that have swept the ranch country have burned one strip six miles wide, another eight miles and 20 miles long and very wide, while a third fire is still burning north of the Niobrara river, and seems to have been more extensive. Ranch sheds, fences, groves on the finer claims, and property along the rails road have been destroyed. Several narrow escapes from death are reported from the ranches.

Turbines For the New Canard Liners.

London, March 21.—Sir John Isherwood, who is in charge of the Admiralty's report has not been signed yet, the commission of experts appointed by the Cunard Steamship Company has decided in favor of turbine engines for the company's two new boats.

GOOD THING ALL ROUND

France and Britain Unite and Settle Disputed Matters.

Information, Though Not Official, Is Accepted As Substantially Correct—Canada Pleased Over the Completion—Cement Caused By the French Government—Believed That Settlement Will Promote Neutrality in the Far Eastern Troubles.

London, March 21.—General satisfaction prevails here over the announcement that a basis of settlement has been reached regarding the main questions on which Britain and France were at issue. Although no official confirmation has yet been elicited, the information has come from so many usually reliable sources that it is accepted as not only probable, but substantially correct. That it has been so received in foreign capitals is undoubted. Berlin already makes haste to pay an attempt to hide the chagrin and irritation caused by the news for which it must have been prepared. In St. Petersburg also the understanding is regarded as laying France open to a charge of disloyalty to the dual entente, and in the other hand, assumes the intelligences as ensuring non-interference in her present war.

Where Canada Comes in.

The settlement as outlined follows the lines which have long ago hinted at and even anticipated. England gives a free hand to Egypt and the acknowledgment of her supremacy. France becomes supreme in Morocco and her dream of a vast consolidated Northwestern African Empire, with access to the nearer sea, is realized. Canada receives the great extension of boundary that complications caused by the French treaty rights in the Newfoundland coast, purchased for her by the Motherland partly by a money compensation paid to France, and by the cession of part of the British territory of Sierra Leone. Wellington street, a more convenient access to Lake Chad than the great circuitous route, which will attitude the only dangerous matter in dispute, and with these taken out of the way, the entente cordiale as affecting Siam, the New Hebrides, the Persian Gulf and various other African disagreements ought to present no difficulty.

Will Not Be Exact.

There will be no inclination here to stop the good work going on to the contracting parties in any very exact matters. If France gains positively more, Britain will be entered for freedom of action and caused many annoyances. Incidentally, Britain secures a great direct advantage for Canada by which facilitates also the rounding off of the Dominion by the inclusion of Newfoundland. Both countries will benefit in the consolidation of friendly feeling already auspiciously initiated and in the creation of joint interests and the consequent guarantee which must tend in the future to a closer cooperation and support in the foreign policy of both countries. Incidentally too, it puts an effectual spoke in the German propaganda boats over creating the preservation of absolute neutrality in the Far Eastern struggle. Any hopes Germany cherished of adding to her Chinese possessions at the present moment, or preparing herself to carry the war through on her own resources, Japan's declaration that she is to be allowed to keep the seas open for the unmolested ingress of her assurance and self-confidence that she can do so to a successful issue.

Not Settled Yet.

London, March 21.—(C.A.P.)—The correspondent of The London Echo in Paris wires that the question of the settlement of the Newfoundland coast of all, and he believes it is not yet decided.

Morocco Unchanged.

Madrid, March 21.—The Associated Press is informed that the British Government has declined to negotiate with France regarding Morocco until the French complete arrangements concerning Moroccan affairs with Spain. In consequence of these negotiations to the latter end have been postponed, and Lord Lansdowne, Madrid but no conclusion can be expected for some time. Hence when the pending Anglo-French treaty is published it will be found that the Spanish Press, so long on the Europe's most thorny problems, remains unchanged.

NEW YORK MET MISHAPS

Grounded Off Cape La Hague and Collided With the Assaye.

Tore a Great Hole in the Starboard Bow of the British Troopship—Rowboats Sent and Figurehead of the New York Was Found Sticking Fast in Troopship Saved Her and No One Was Hurt.

Southampton, March 21.—The American Line steamer New York, Capt. Young, from New York, March 12, for Plymouth, Cherbourg and Southampton, met with two mishaps yesterday, grounding off Cape La Hague, France, in the early morning, and later coming into collision in the English Channel with the Peninsular and Oriental steamship Assaye, under contract to the British Government, and used as a troopship. The Assaye was bound for Bombay with 500 troops.

The New York grounded while approaching Cherbourg at 3.30 o'clock yesterday morning during a fog. The sea was smooth and the tide rising, and an hour and a half after she grounded the vessel was floated without assistance. Her bottom was damaged and there was water in the hold, but she was able to proceed.

During the voyage up the channel a dense fog descended, and when off Castle, England, the Assaye suddenly emerged, and it was found impossible to avoid a collision. The New York's bow crashed into the Assaye's starboard side, making a great gap in that vessel. The New York was not damaged. Rowboats were carried away and the latter was smashed into fragments. There was great excitement, but no fear was either vessel. The boats of the Assaye were lowered and the troops were mustered, but the bulkhead of the vessel held.

Both vessels were able to enter Southampton, and the New York docked at 4.30 o'clock in the temporary repairs. Nobody was injured. It will be necessary to dock her and the damage to the New York until she has been put into dry dock. It is believed that both vessels have been rather seriously injured. Another Cunarder will replace the Assaye.

The New York's figurehead was that 1.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, while the crew at luncheon, there was a grating noise followed by a tremendous shock. Everyone, of course, left the table to see what was the matter, and it was then found that the New York's bow was fast fixed in the side of the Assaye. Mr. Sellers was close enough to observe the marvelous discipline aboard the latter. Not a second was lost, and there was no sign of confusion. The troops were under the bellig- prepared for launching the boats, numbered with the precision of an ordinary drill.

As the vessels parted," concluded Mr. Sellers, "I saw a great hole in the Assaye 100 feet wide and apparently as deep. It was a great maneuvre and other portable property, but the New York's bow fast in the boat. Had we struck the Assaye amidships she would have sunk."

BARK LADY CAIRNS SUNK.

Collided With German Bark Mona and Crew of 22 Were Drowned.

Dublin, March 21.—The German barque Mona collided with the British fish barque Lady Cairns, off Dublin Bay, yesterday morning. The crew of 22 men were drowned. The Mona, which was badly damaged, was assisted into Dublin Harbor.

The Lady Cairns was a three-masted fish ship of 1,186 tons. She was commanded by Captain T. Evans, and was owned by Thomas Evans for Timaru, New Zealand. The Lady Cairns was built in Belfast in 1892 and was owned by L. Tullerech of Swansea. The Mona was commanded by Captain Schwartz.

All Hope Abandoned.

Portsmouth, March 21.—It is hope that the crew of the ill-fated submarine boat, A1, steering on the bottom of the Bembridge Ledge, might possibly be alive has been abandoned. Naturally the crew of the A1 was discovered off the Nab lightship, after a long search yesterday, for which quite a small fleet of ships participated. Divers at once went down and rapped loudly on the boat, but received no response. They report that the boat is lying on her side, and is full of water. Had her hatch been open the crew could have been sustained for three days with the air supply carried in her tanks. But the strength of the current will not permit the A1 to be raised, and the intention is to make to-day to bring her to the surface.

Michael Davitt Ill.

Oakland, March 21.—Michael Davitt, who arrived here a few days ago, is so ill that he was unable to participate in the celebration of St. Patrick's Day in San Francisco. Upon his arrival in New York Mr. Davitt caught a cold, which has developed to a point where pneumonia is feared.

Steamers in Ice.

St. John's, Nfld., March 21.—The steamers Virginia, Liberty and Tro Patria are frozen in an ice floe in Placentia Bay. The first named vessel is a local mail boat, and has 700 tons of coal and supplies. A severe blizzard raged yesterday and it is feared the ships may be crushed.

A 20 Per Cent. Reduction.

Pittsburg, March 21.—Reduction of 20 per cent., below the wage scale of 1903-4 is the proposition that will be submitted to the sheet and tinplate lodges of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, which met on the scale must be in by April 9.

A CHRISTIAN SOLDIER

WILL ENDURE HARDNESS TO THE END AND WIN CROWN OF LIFE.

HIS IDEAL CHARACTERISTICS

Rev. Dr. Talmage's Denunciation of War —A Thing to Be Hated With Intense Hatred—An International Code That Will Abolish Four Fifths of Passes to Give Us Greater Antipathy to Rejoiced according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year One Thousand Nine Hundred and Four, at the Dept.'s of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 20.—In these times of world-wide military activity and when soldierly qualities are everywhere discussed this sermon on the ideal Christian soldier is peculiarly appropriate. The preacher chooses as his text II. Timothy ii., 3, "Endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."

What is war? War is a mortal grapple when nation says to a nation, "We quarrel with you cannot be settled but by fighting, and now we will see which of us two has the longer arm and the stouter fist and they put their armies in the field and slaughter begins. War is a grave trench dug with bayonets. War! It is the most brutal, the most fiendish, the most terrific, the most blasting curse of all the ages. War is the right hand of it with an intense hatred and to say that the Prince of Peace will give us more antipathy to it and a more intense horror of the awful grandeur and stain than all the ages have ever produced.

But though war is an awful international curse there have been occasions when men have entered the army and fought on the battle field from conscientious motives. There have been cases, as every student of history knows, when it has become a sacred duty for the redress of wrong or the establishment of the home for the patriotic citizen to take up arms. Christ himself recognized the fact when he said, "I came not to send peace on the earth, but a sword." Yes, there are times when it has been necessary at times, in the interest of humanity and of a stern sense of duty, engaged in war. Cromwell and his Ironsides, Garibaldi and his Red Shirts, Washington and his Continental army, were all engaged in fighting battles for the right.

It is proper and right at certain times and under certain circumstances to go to war, if they go with the right motive. The qualities which go to make a good and a brave soldier are those which should characterize a good Christian. The courage and self-sacrifice and devotion to a right cause which have been displayed in the field are qualities of the Christian's daily life. Therefore, I may aptly and powerfully use the figure of my text for a gospel comparison. How can a soldier obey a young Timothy: "Look upon your self as a soldier and fight manfully and earnest. Enlist in his service. Implicitly obey his orders. Charge in Christ's name if he tells you to charge. Be content. Do sentinel duty and trudge post after post. Carry the knapsack. Be ready to fight on battlefield, or have no fear to suffer in hospital, as duty may command. All young people are delighted with a military parade, but in this sermon recount for you how a good soldier endures hardness for Christ's high call.

What does it mean to be a gospel soldier? First and foremost, it is for the oath of enlistment. The difference between an army and a mob, the difference between a collection of men and regiment is the matter of discipline, directed by one order, and a host of men running hither and thither like a flock of sheep or frightened, stampeding cattle, doing as they please. The validity of every one of the oath of enlistment and no oath. Before one can give the oath of enlistment he is a free man. After he has given the oath of enlistment he is no longer an independent individual. He is a soldier, subject to the soldier's regulations, liable to be shot if he deserts or disobeys his superior officer. The oath of enlistment practically says: "I will, if necessary, die or others do my thinking. I will go where I am told to go, and do what I am told to do." The oath of enlistment is more binding than bands of steel.

What is true in reference to the English soldier or the French soldier or the American soldier is true of the gospel soldier. You cannot do effective service as a soldier of Jesus Christ unless you practically give to him your oath of enlistment. And when you once do give that oath then you are no longer your own master. When you become a Christian soldier or a Christian sailor you must first take your marching orders from what he says he "waiting orders." In the public meeting and in the closet. Get the holy communion you give open testimony of your purpose to surrender your will to Christ's will. You must say, "I am ready, O Christ, to do, to suffer, to have me to do, and go where thou commandest me to go."

What does it mean to be a gospel soldier? To be assigned to some distinct part of some battalion command in the great Christian army. Every Christian is a soldier of Jesus Christ. To have an individual place assigned to you in the battle where you are to fight for the church militant? In each private American soldier during the Civil war had a place reserved for him in the ranks, whether he belonged to the cavalry or the artillery, the infantry or the engineering corps. As a militaly organization of a great aggregation of individuals, so the success of the army depends upon that military organization being divided and subdivided and reorganized again by orderly arrangement. The individual, the private soldier, must have his distinct place just as the general or the colonel or the major or the captain has his place.

The first step in the movement the construction of an American army. Take, for illustration, that which followed Sherman to the sea. There were in that host about one hundred thousand men. These one hundred thousand men were divided first into brigades, then into divisions, then into regiments and these regiments into companies, and each private soldier was assigned to his distinct company, the letter of which was marked on his hat and the number of the regiment marked upon the lapel of his coat.

Each American soldier always had a distinct place reserved for him in the ranks, whether he was engaged in fight. Sometimes in battle an American soldier might be separated from his company. During the two days' fighting before Santiago an American lieutenant found a private trooper of the Tenth Cavalry fighting in the ranks of the Rough Riders. When the lieutenant asked the black soldier why he was there, replied, "I have lost my command, and so, sir, if you will, I would like to fight in your company." Permission was given. That night, when the colored soldier returned to his own place in command, he asked the lieutenant to say that the privilege he had to prove that he had been a battle and days' fighting in the rear. The next day, when going over the field looking for his dead and wounded, this lieutenant found the body of the bloody field the same colored trooper, the unfailing sign of a faithful soldier beckoned to the lieutenant to lean over him. Then the dying man said, "Lieutenant, I have kept my word. I have stood by you. I have come to it to the captain of L troop, Tenth Cavalry. Tell Lawton I stayed by him that I tried to report to my company, but was not able to do it. Give him that paper and say that Williams was not a coward." Ah, yes, I say to you, that always has an individual place reserved for him in the battle ranks, and he must go to be, and expected to fight.

Every Christian soldier is also in army roll call in a certain company, in a certain regiment, of a certain brigade, of a certain division, of a certain corps. So the gospel soldier must have his place in the ranks of the Christian army. He must be subject to the orders of his superior officer. He must obey orders unless you have taken your place in the ranks. Every soldier of Christ's great army, called the church.

The true gospel soldier always considers the posts of danger the posts of honor. Every true soldier the singing of the shells, even though he knows that every one of them is accompanied by his own death rattle.

Posts of danger and difficulty are always posts of honor in the army. Why, I can see the captain of the artillery talk you would suppose that Christ's gift would be a special approbation from a loving Divine Commander. The "Well done!" which goes to the Christian hero at the name of Adoniram Judson. The "Well done!" which goes to the humble servant girl and to the humble clerk and to the humble Jesus Christ! Because in so doing he has taken the oath of enlistment. He who spared not himself, but suffered freely for us, has the right to expect forbearance from us. Even some of us does he ask such service as he himself rendered when he left the army of Alexander the Great was leading a great campaign and the strength of the soldiers became exhausted. Many threw themselves down upon the ground in the great commander saw the condition. He ordered a halt and that his soldiers quietly dismounted from his war charger, and threw aside the saddle and, lifted a private soldier's pickaxe then vigorously went to work digging away at the hard soil. Alexander saw him. They knew he was as tireless a laborer as any one of his private soldiers, wherever we go, wherever we can find work to labor ahead. Our backs may ache, but he carrying a cross for others. Our feet may grow tired, but from his feet and hands and head and heart flowed the blood which cleansed the olden times a soldier was said to be wounded in the back by pointing spears and pressed them into his breast, but never in the aristocratic body his comrades might find a breach in the enemy's ranks and escape to safety. Christ's body we may win eternal life. And here and now we see the foundation stones of a Christ's mausoleum may be laid by the sacrifice of hundreds of a Christian soldier's sacrifice."

The Czar as a Composer.

It has long been known that the Czar possessed a very pretty musical gift, and His Majesty has recently essayed his power as a composer of music to his owd of verses. In these lines he condemns the modern note in ere of religion. They extol the glories of the Orthodox Church and the saints, and exalt the virtue of Christian self-sacrifice and renunciation of worldly goods and prosperity.

WORK TRAIN SMASHED.

One Man Killed and Ten Injured in Collision.

Fernie, B.C., March 22.—A collision occurred on the Great Northern three miles below Swinton, and about ten miles west of here, between the northbound express and a work train on its way to Elko for coal and supplies. One man named John A. Low was instantly killed and ten others were more or less injured.

Killed at Preston.

Preston, March 22.—Jas. Doyle of Preston, died in the Galt Hospital Sunday from the shock of a gunshot wound. The wound he had just been loaded to kill a cat, by Thomas Costigan, Doyle's son-in-law, and, when Costigan was closing the breech one of the shells exploded, and Doyle received the whole charge, wads and all, in the leg. He was 68 years old.

Financed Two Years Ahead.

Montreal, March 22.—Private advices here state that Wm. Mackenzie, president of the Canadian Northern, has been fully successful in disposing of the company's bonds in London, and that the C. N. R. will build a great extent of railway during the present year. It is said, in fact, that construction is now financed two years ahead.

Died Aged 106.

Stratford, March 22.—Ronald McNeil, the oldest man in Stratford, and a resident of the city for about sixty years, is dead at the age of 106. He was born in Barrie, Scotland, and a grandfather of the same name had attained to a similar age.

BANNERMAN'S CENSURE

Falls to Win Majority in British House of Commons.

Colonial Secretary Lyttelton Quoted a Canadian Bishop in Favor of the Chinese—Major Seeley, Hitherto a Consistent Follower of the Government Tendered His Resignation Because He Did Not Approve of Its Course.

London, March 22.—In the House of Commons yesterday afternoon the Liberal leader, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, moved his vote of censure, presented March 16, to the effect that "this House disapproves the conduct of His Majesty's Government, in advising the Crown not to disallow the ordinance for the introduction of Chinese labor in the Transvaal."

Sir Henry said nothing the Government had done since the close of the South African war had so sorely tried the people of this country as its sanction of the introduction of Chinese labor into South Africa. It was impossible to conceive a greater departure from the principles which Great Britain had hitherto made her way in the world than the importation of aliens as the Londonmen of mining speculators.

Nothing to Justify It.

The Liberal leader thought nothing but averting a positive catastrophe could justify the Chinese labor ordinance. At the time of the war the Government declared it was waged in the interests of white labor, but the British workman was now being stuffed out by the Chinaman. It was the biggest scheme for human dumping since the "middle passage" was abolished.

Sir Henry put stress on the provision to the effect that any one harboring a deserting Chinaman would be treated as a receiver of stolen goods. If this did not constitute slavery, he said, the difference was indistinguishable.

Replied to Allegation.

Colonial Secretary Lyttelton, replying, indignantly repelled the allegation that the Government was favoring slavery. The Government, he asserted, had been guided by the overwhelming sentiment in the Transvaal in favor of Chinese labor and the economic necessity therefore. The Ministry had adopted the only alternative, to bridge the transition period until the blacks had increased sufficiently to fill the demand for unskilled labor. The Government was well aware that the policy would be unpopular.

Defending Chinamen against the charge of immorality, Mr. Lyttelton read a letter from the Bishop of British Columbia, saying that the Chinamen were in no way a debauched community, but lived quietly and soberly. There was no evidence that they imported new or despicable vices.

Mines Won By Chinese.

The prosperity of British Columbia and California, Mr. Lyttelton asserted, was based on gold mines won by Asiatic labor.

Major John Edward Seeley, who hitherto has been a consistent supporter of the Government, said he believed the importation of Chinese labor would render the Transvaal impossible as a white man's country. He announced, therefore, he had tendered his resignation because he did not think it fair that he should vote against the Government without giving his constituents an opportunity of turning him out if they did not approve of his action.

The conclusion of Major Seeley's speech was lost amid a tremendous volley of disapproval from the Ministerial side.

Premier Balfour, who followed Major Seeley, was unable to secure a hearing, the Irish members protesting against the treatment of the major.

Would Retard Prosperity.

Mr. Balfour said that if the leader of the Opposition came into power he would do exactly as the Government was doing, and would not indulge in vague inappropriate speeches about slavery. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's motion was therefore to indefinitely retard the prosperity of the Transvaal.

Herbert H. Asquith, in closing the debate, denied that any clear or overwhelming opinion in the Transvaal demanded Chinese labor. He agreed that the economic position of the Transvaal was serious, but he said that if healing forces were allowed to operate and fair wages and good conditions were secured to white and black laborers alike, the serious features would be removed.

Redmond Objected.

William Redmond said that Mr. Balfour should have insisted upon a respectful hearing for Major Seeley, and when the Premier said he had appealed for such a hearing, Mr. Redmond withdrew his opposition.

Mr. Balfour, in opposing the resolution, said it was a question whether the Transvaal should be allowed to go through a grave crisis rather than admit Chinese labor. Liberal Governments, he said, had in the past legalized the importation of such labor for British colonies, and the Opposition was now reaping the benefits of the evils of which their own party had produced.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's motion was rejected, 309 to 242. Urgent whips of all parties had secured a big attendance, and many of the Irish members had hurried from Dublin. In the division, thirteen Unionist members, including Winston Churchill, abstained from voting. Sixty-five Nationalist members voted against the Government, the majority for which was rather larger than any in the several recent critical divisions. The vote was received with cheers.

In the Lords.

Chinese labor in the Transvaal was also debated during the entire session of the House of Lords last evening, on a motion of Lord Coleridge (Liberal) that "this House disapproves of the importation of Chinese laborers in the Transvaal, under the recent ordinance, until that Government has been granted a full representative Government."

Lord Coleridge's motion was rejected by a vote of 97 to 25.

RUSSIA'S ODD MOVE.

Czar Does Not Want to Pay Claims of Canadian Sealers.

Ottawa, March 21.—(Globe Special.)—Inquiries here established the fact that the Russian Government officers who met in London the English and American representatives, in order to assess the damages due to Canada for the seizure of Canadian sealers, have limited their powers, and now ask for the establishment of a tribunal to settle the matter in the sea waters. The Government have been instructed their representative, Mr. Little, that the object of the new conference is to assess the damages, and that only. Hence, if the Russian representatives persist in their present attitude, Canada's representative must withdraw.

Russia's conduct in this matter is inexplicable to the authorities, but some people profess to see in it the fine Italian hand of the United States. Some years ago the Russians seized a number of American and Canadian sealing vessels. Both the United States and Canada protested that the seizures were illegal. It was arranged that if the seizures were found to be illegal, Russia should pay compensation. The United States claims were first considered, and Canada agreed that it would accept the verdict in that case. The illegality was proven, and the United States vessels got their compensation.

Now the only question is to decide what damages are to be paid to Canadian vessels, yet at the very last moment Russia comes in with a proposition that is altogether foreign to the object for which the conference has been called. The United States has been endeavoring for a long time to change the existing regulations governing sealing, and may be responsible for the change of front on Russia's part.

TORNADO AND HAIL.

Trees Blown Down and Horses Killed in Kansas and Missouri.

Kansas City, Mo., March 22.—A despatch from Higginsville, Mo., says 50 buildings were partially wrecked, one man was mortally wounded and several others were hurt; the town is in darkness and the streets are strewn with debris as the result of a tornado and hailstorm, which swept the town last night. The hail in the streets was a foot deep within five minutes after the storm began, and some of the stones were as large as hens' eggs. Trees were blown down and horses killed on the streets.

VICTORY FOR CITIZENS.

Kingston Carries Bylaw to Purchase Light, Heat and Power Co.

Kingston, March 22.—The city rejoiced last night over the victory for municipal ownership in the vote on the bylaw to raise $182,000 for taking over the Kingston Light, Heat and Power Company's plant at the arbitrated price of $170,378, the balance being the costs in the arbitration and court proceedings. Victory was generally looked for, but no one imagined it would be so sweeping. The total vote cast was 1,434, of which 1,397 were in favor of the bylaw, and 37 against.

MR. BLAIR AND COLLEAGUES DIFFER.

The Hon. Mr. Blair, Chairman of the Railway Commission, has, at the very beginning of his duties, been overruled by his colleagues in a judgment rendered by him, which has caused no little comment in the press of the country.

Some critics clamour for a change in the law. The Toronto Globe comes to his rescue, and claims that, as "provision has been made in the "Railway Act for an appeal to the "Governor-in-Council," his "irresponsible critics," as The Globe terms them, should cease hurling their "unstinted abuse" at him.

All very well, but why did not The Globe let its readers know who the parties were that were indulging in this abuse? On account of his decision in a case of the corporation of Port Arthur vs. the Bell Telephone and C.P.R. Companies in the demand made by the Port Arthur people for certain privileges, without compensating for them, on the ground that such privileges were in the public interest. It has not been the Conservative press nor Conservative politicians, who have been complaining of the decision given in this case. These attacks have come from the socialistic element of the Liberal party.

Mr. Blair's decision in the case submitted to him was in the line of maintaining the sacredness of the rights of private property and corporations in property. A decision which the best judges in the land have repeatedly affirmed. His two colleagues, who are so fit for the positions they hold as they are for archbishops, differed from him and overruled his decision, thus destroying, if the Governor-in-Council does not sustain Mr. Blair, all security in the ownership of property and the soundness of law.

The fact that there is an appeal to the Governor-in-Council is to a certain extent a safeguard. It would be much more so if the action of the Senate in providing for an appeal to the courts had not been rejected by the Commons. Just what has happened was predicted by the Senate. The members of that body feared that appointments might be made for political rather than judicial and practical reasons, and for that reason urged the right of appeal against just such vagaries as have been given, where the rights of the subject have been ignored, and the clamour of the demagogue and unreasonable demands of others acceded to.

Mr. Blair's position is not one that any man of tender sensibilities would care to occupy. $10,000 a year, no doubt, compensates him for any qualms of conscience. His denunciation in strong language of the Government railway policy, and then accepting a position from them is not one to be commended. He that as it may, his better sense of justice has in this case led him to do what was right.

Now, let us see how far he will be sustained by the Government.

TIMELY TOPICS.

It costs King Edward more to keep house than it did the late Queen. Allowance in price of eggs, no doubt.

A wireless special from Mr. William Johnson says they arrived at Malta a day ahead of time, and he went ashore and was much struck with the number of Maltese cats he saw. He hopes to be able, if all goes well, to bring home a Maltese kitten as a souvenir for each member of Bridge Street Sunday School.

The Toronto Globe of the 21st inst. says:

"The Senate has adjourned till April 13. Ominous combinations or figures have no terrors for centenarians and octogenarians."

If we could get Senate proceedings aright, it is neither the "centenarians" nor the "octogenarians" who clamour for these adjournments. On the contrary, they are demanded by the youngest Grit members in the Senate, who have their private business to attend to in Montreal, and therefore force the Government to accede to their wishes. So far has this been carried that Senator Dandurand has been dubbed "Minister of Adjournments," who, during the last session of the Senate, defeated the leader of the Government on a motion, though he protested against it. Notwithstanding which the motion was carried, at which the Hon. Mr. Scott openly declared himself "humiliated." If the Globe can be honest for once, it can cast its honors at the young Grit Senators on its own side of the House, and not at the venerable "centenarians" and "octogenarians."

We stop the press to report that a bare spot has been seen on one of our streets.

That rain this morning would make it appear that spring had sprung a large leak.

The way the Grit members of the Legislature are quarrelling this temperance bill seems to indicate that a lot of big brained people have fallen off the water waggon lately.

Jeffries the prize fighter is in Toronto where he draws a thousand dollars a week for letting people look at him in a theatre. And many a man with a university education doesn't earn that much in a year! Alas! for the shocking decadence of latter-day civilization!

In eastern Canada they had a slight earthquake yesterday morning. Caused by the G.T.P. Bill, no doubt.

The Chairman of Gas now says he believes the present poor pressure is not caused by water in the mains, but is largely local. They have found a big sand pressure at the Merchants' Bank as at the Gas Works, which would make it appear that water lies in pipes which lead off from the mains.

The cumulative system of voting which was imposed upon the City of Toronto some time ago by the Ontario Legislature so as to enable the Grits to secure one supporter from that city lasted but one term, and was then repealed, the system as applied to Municipal elections in that city has been tried and has met the same fate as the former trial, and the provision in the law repealed. When shall we have another fad to test?

In clearing up an old Liberal committee room in Chatham, Ont., the new tenant found three Government ballot boxes. Possibly he has hidden workers had them in reserve for an emergency on the days they toiled to save the country for Ross.

Judging by the stories of Russian corruption they are fitted to shine in Ontario politics under that astute gentleman, Hon. G. W. Ross.

Chief Gunyou, of Deseronto, was in the city to-day, and expressed the belief that there is a busy summer ahead for that hustling town.

Port Arthur fails, these days, as soon as hard and often as a Board of Trade official.

Japanese punished a spy by burying him alive. In this country they would have sent him to Kingston, which amounts to the same thing.

It is rather a curious coincidence that while the Japs are making it very uncomfortable for the Russians at Port Arthur, the Ontario Opposition are also making it unpleasant for another Port Arthur man, the Hon. Jim Conmee.

As will be seen by reference to our telegraph page, the close season for black bass has been extended, and the number which can be legally caught reduced. The close season for pike will now be six months, from Jan. 1 to June 30, and if net fishing were now stopped the day of Galatz might again become an anglers' paradise.

Pleasing Piano Recital.

Very pleasing, indeed, was the piano recital given at St. Agnes' School hall on Saturday afternoon, by the pupils of Miss Emberson, one of the city's favorite teachers, assisted by Mrs. A. G. Parker. The youthful performers, who showed charming taste and ability, were Misses Antoinette Parker, Laurel Foster, Jessie Mellon, Honnora Evans, McCrimmon, Gladys Grills, Marjorie McCaig, Ackerill, Muriel Grills, Edith Penn, Muriel Ackerill and Muriel Sills. Mrs. Parker sang two Grieg numbers in charming style.

MAN'S MOST CRITICAL AGE.

Very often the vital resources are small at forty-two, but if not there, between fifty-seven and sixty-two years of age there is a strange slowing down and loss of vitality. It is important that this transient period of decay should be checked; strength must be imparted to the tired brain, the weakened nerves must be fortified. The wise man will use Ferrozone, whose potency is particularly applicable to these critical periods. Ferrozone quickens the whole being, imparts vigor and power, pushes out back the onset of senility in a very marvellous way. It's because Ferrozone gives strength, vitality and vigor that it is useful to old men. Try it. Price 50c.

Do not play with poison!

It is an established fact that constipated people are far more likely to contract infectious disease—smallpox, typhus fever, scarlet fever, etc., than those who enjoy natural regularity.

Is it wise to run needless risks?

A box of IRON-OX

TINY TONIC TABLETS

will positively cure constipation—beginning at the cause—and when the cure is complete you can stop taking the medicine. Just gently laxative—not a system-weakening cathartic.

Fifty Iron-ox Tablets, in an attractive aluminum pocket case, 25 cents at druggists, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price. The Iron-ox Remedy Co., Limited, Walkerville, Ont.

Funny Little Restaurants in the Chinese Empire.

Places of rest and refreshment are commonly to be found in China at the halting stations on the highways in the interior or at the villages on the banks of the great rivers of China. They frequently take the form of a small mud hut, having a dark interior filled with smoke, tea tables, forms and an oven, where a cook is kept busy baking tea bread and frying puddings for the entertainment of the customers, whose favorite beverage is tea, although when times are good and the weather cold they indulge in something stronger, which often inebriates and that at a very cheap rate. In the darkest corner there are a row of glazed earthenware jars containing a kind of Chinese whisky, of which a thirsty carter may have a skin full for something considerably under a penny, when he will go quietly to sleep on the shaft of his cart, and his pony or mule, being used to it, will take him home.

In addition to these conveniences there is an ingenious little furnace in front, having a long flue, through which the flame is driven by an air pump, and a row of hot water kettles, gradually increasing in size to suit the heat at the longue of flame that passes up the flue beneath, so that they may all be kept boiling. The hot water is sold by pastetship, who usually carry with them their teapot and tea, so that they may have a cup at every station. This custom of carrying one's own tea is so common that it is difficult to procure a cup of tea in any of the restaurants, as they do not keep it and do not care to go out of their way to buy it for you. Although the coast may be growing all round and at one's very feet, it is next to impossible to get a cup that a foreigner would consider worth drinking, and as to using milk and sugar, the Chinese look upon the practice as a barbarous device of the "foreign devil."

Lucky Dog.

"My luck is the best any man ever had."

"The deuce it is!"

"Yes, sir. A girl refused me yesterday, and I see by the morning paper that her father has lost all his money."

Lawrence Barrett's Memory.

I have seen Mr. Lawrence Barrett, the actor, receive 200 visitors, most of them strangers, at a party and afterward bid them all farewell by name, not using on mistakes as far as I could discover.—London Express.

Too Late.

"Advice to a newly married couple is seldom taken."

"Yes—all the harm is done then."

We may glean knowledge by reading, but the chaff must be separated from the wheat by thinking.

Chopping in Japan.

Japanese ceremoniousness makes it a serious matter going to a Japanese shop unless you are going to buy silk handkerchiefs—the only things foreigners have often enough to spoil the business of the shopkeeper. You get out of your rickshaw, and the rickshaw boy explains your high and mightiness. Then all the attendants in the shop salaam till you wish they would get up and let you enter their open-air sanctum that you want. When they do get up the Japanese equivalent of "Be shopwalker and thou or four coats" jumpers in rotation ask you to repeat your order while they offer you five cups of tea. It is Japanese tea, and there is no milk or sugar, but you can have salted cherry blossoms if you want it—it is a good shop. This is the Japanese way of offering the customer a drink. Good Japanese shops contain nothing except the attendants. When you have got as far as explaining what you want the proprietor gives orders to attendants. Off they go at a run—good servants always run—and bring back the goods tied up in faded green silk handkerchiefs or green cotton cloths.

His Little Bill.

When Brander Matthews went to his club on one evening, according to the Bookman, he went to the letter box and looked through the compartment marked "M" and found therein a very peremptory dun from a tailor. Mr. Matthews was puzzled, as he had had no dealings with the insistent tailor, until he again looked at the envelope and found that he had unwittingly opened a letter belonging to another member of the club; so he put the bill back in its envelope and returned it to the compartment. As Mr. Matthews was turning to go he noticed the member for whom the bill was intended coming toward the letter box. A minute later he came into the reading room, where Mr. Matthews was sitting with several others. Taking from its envelope the bill, he held it attentively for a few minutes, sighed, tore it into bits, then, with a wink and the leer of an incipient lunatic, commented, "Poor, silly little girl."

The Fable In Russia.

This fable, dealing with the fall of Witte, the Russian finance minister, is related in a brochure entitled "A Glance at the Secrets of Russian Policy," published at Geneva. The czar dreamed the following singular dream: He saw three cows, one fat, one lean and one dead. The czar asked the lean cow the metropolitan Palladius and begged him to explain the dream, but the metropolitan declined. The czar then sent for Father John of Kronstadt and made the same request of him. Father John stroked his long curly hair with his hand and made reply in the following words: "Your majesty, I understand your dream in this way: The fat cow is the finance minister, the lean cow is the Russian people and the blind one—'Don't be afraid. Go on,' said the czar. 'The blind cow is—your majesty!'"

Leaves and Colors.

Bright colors assumed by maples, sumacs and amelopsis during the autumn months are the result of the oxidizing of the color compounds, or color generators, of the leaf cells. Long protracted cool weather is most favorable to the production of autumn tints, and slight frosts that are not severe enough to kill the cells hasten the display of beauty by producing an enzyme that brings forth the bright purples, oranges and reds. Leaves containing much tannic acid never give bright autumn tints, while those containing sugar give the very prettiest.

The Dangers of Fox Hunting.

Crowds "go hunting," but few ride to hounds, so statistics are absolutely useless. Of the thrusters, the ones who come to grief least, are the sportsmen who keep their eye on the leading hound and try to land on his tail every time. The golden rule is: Throw your heart over first, and then you and your horse and the leading dog and the fox are certain to be in the same field. It is level country which of you gets killed first.—London Mail.

Not Guilty.

"To what do you attribute your longevity?" asked the reporter.

"My which?" queried the oldest inhabitant.

"Your longevity," repeated the reporter.

"Never had it. As far as I can remember I ain't never had such a complaint."

A Grand Success.

Mrs. De Style—I've got ahead of Mrs. De Fashion for the first time in my life, and—how? Mrs. De Style—At Mrs. De Fashion's last party two of the guests fainted, but at my grand reception last night the crush was so great that six of the ladies had to be carried out, and one had to have a doctor.

The Maids.

Mrs. Ascum—I'm surprised to find you looking for another servant. I thought you engaged one yesterday, Mrs. Illiam Often—Oh, she's a lady's maid. She promised to stay on me. I'm looking for another one to wait on her.

Ingenious and Effective.

"There's a new scuffler have entered into the neighborhood," she said, "and I want to find out who they are, but it would be a delicate matter to go chasing about the neighborhood, I'll just invite Mrs. Gossip to dinner."

When Women Is Growing Old.

When a woman gets so she doesn't care about the size of her feet and turns her attention exclusively to the soul, you can set it down that old age is creeping on.—Pendleton (Ore.) Guide.

Plum Pudding as Food.

In popular belief plum pudding, though difficult of digestion, contains a large proportion of nutriment. The London Lancet publishes the analysis made of two puddings, of which one was found to have a "nutrient value" of 68 per cent and the other of 50.

It appears that, although most agreeable as an article of food, plum pudding is not quite so concentrated a form of diet as has been supposed, and conjectures that it yields as much substance as beefsteak are certainly not supported by its chemical composition. The amount of nitrogenous matter is only moderate, and it must be remembered that in calculating the nutrient ratio and value all the nitrogen has been assumed to be albuminous. Probably the true albuminoids and consequently the food value are slightly lower than would appear from the results; also the percentage of water is rather large, and the quantities of the remaining components are proportionately lessened.

An Important Announcement.

When the late Lord Lyons was British ambassador at Paris he received a gift of two emus. Embassies are not exactly the place to keep such birds, and he gave them to the Duke of Norfolk, who then had a large aviary at his park at Arundel. The duke in turn named the pair Lord and Lady Lyons. Like all amateur bird fanciers, he was eager to raise a brood of little emus, but the birds showed no disposition to propagate their species. The duke finally grew weary of watching them and left it to the keepers to bring him immediate word of any signs of a family. A month or two later when the household was at lunch with several guests one of the keepers insisted upon access to the duke. Red, breathless and stammering, he burst into the dining room with the news: "Lord grace, Lord and Lady Lyons 'ave laid a hegg!"

British Local Nicknames.

The residents of the English counties have nicknames the meaning and origin of which are not always obvious. Why the inhabitants of Liverpool should be called "Dicky Sams" is not very clear. But nearly all the counties have their distinctive nicknames. The Glaswegians are "Keelies," the Lanarkshire men are "Tim Bobbins," while the Lincolnshire folk have long been called "Yellow Bellies," after the tones which once abounded there. Yorkshire men, again, are everywhere "Tykes," a nickname by no means derisive, which is not easy to trace. The inhabitants of Suffolk are designated "Dumplings," those of East and "Hogs" and the Isle of Wight people "Calves."

The Fretful Porcupine.

In the woods of Keewaydin there once roamed a very discontented old porcupine. He was forever fretting. He complained that everything was wrong. Till it was perfectly scandalous, and the Great Spirit, getting tired of his grumbling, said:

"You and the world I have made don't seem to fit. One or the other must be wrong. It is easier to change you. You don't like the trees, you are unhappy on the ground and think everything is upside down, so I'll turn you inside out and put you in the water."

This was the origin of the shad.—Ernest Thompson Seton in Century.

Wellington on Napoleon.

Wellington's judgments of men and history are singularly just and correct. He used few words and never fenced his meaning about with qualifications. When Lord Ellesmere reminded a certain writer's low opinion of Napoleon the duke replied: "Napoleon was the first man of his day on a field of battle and with French troops. I confine myself to that. His policy was mere bullying, and, military masterpiece as he was a Jonathan Wild."—London Review.

A Long Burning Fire.

At the Chequers inn at Slapestones, near Osmotherly, England, is a fire which for more than a century has never been allowed to go out. The place is a quaint little building, to which many visitors resort on account of its never extinguished fire and the turf cakes baked upon its hearth. It has been kept by members of one family for over a hundred years.

Diagnosing His Disposition.

"There's old Bitthers. He takes such a jaundiced view of the world," remarks Gilworthy.

"Not always," says Miggleburr. "He only gets those pessimistic moods on him when he has been drinking."

"Same thing, in effect. He takes a demijohnidized view."

A Long Time.

"Eternity," said the country exhorter who wanted to make things clear, "is forever and forever and five or six eternities on that." Why, brothers and sisters, after millions and billions of centuries had rolled away in eternity it would still be 100,000 years to breakfast time."

His Diet.

"Yes, Angelina, when I muttered something in my sleep last night about being out on a bluff I was dreaming of a delightful excursion a friend and I took to Dover cliff in England several years ago."

Two Good Rules.

"Why is it," asked Robinson, "that you always appear to be happy and contented?"

"I suppose," replied Barker, "it's because I never borrow trouble or lend money."

Sincerity is speaking as we think, believing as we pretend, acting as we profess, performing as we promise and being as we appear to be.

MAKE YOURSELF NECESSARY •• TO SOMEBODY ••

(Emerson)

We have made ourselves necessary to a great many "somebodies," when it comes to the question of Clothing. We know of nothing that is more of a necessity to-day than good Clothing.

Our showing of New Spring Styles in men's Suits has never been equalled, even in our own store, and an inspection of them will most surely convince you how necessary we are to a man's comfort and welfare.

No matter what your taste for clothes is, we can please it. The brightest of Tweeds—the prettiest shades of blue in serges and worsteds, with a range of prices that make choosing an easy matter. Say, $5 to $15 and all the betweens in prices.

A few minutes of your time spent among the suits will tell you more than we can if we used a page of this paper

TIMELY TOPICS.

The tax rate is a little higher this year, but then you know we had to give His Majesty the King a site for his new drill shed.

Those police court records bid fair to turn some of the Aldermen into human phonographs.

If the Police Commissioners refuse to accede to the Council's latest request, the matter had better be referred to the Hague tribunal.

The city seems to have made a good choice of a new assessor. But goodness me, you ought to have heard some of the Aldermen jump on the old Assessment Commission last night!

"A farce!" was what one Alderman called it.

And yet, to hear some people talk last year you'd think it was a tragedy.

It's all right for the Fruit men to invite the Aldermen to their demonstrations, but we don't want our city fathers to know anything about grafting.

Now, good people, if you want to save money on the payment of your taxes, here's how you can do it: Pay on or before June 1, and you get a discount of 2 per cent.; pay on or before July 15, and you get a discount of 1 per cent.; pay on or before September 1st and you pay at par; after September 1st up to November 1st you will be called on to pay 3 per cent. interest, and after November 1st the city will "mark" you 6 per cent. interest. So get busy and remember that procrastination flattens the pocket book.

1,200 For the West.

Montreal, March 22.—Twelve hundred young Englishmen boarded three special C.P.R. trains yesterday on their way to the Northwest. They had come out by the Canada last week; were young and ruddy, and strong, and it was the opinion of the C. P. R. officials that they constituted the finest lot of young men seen for years lent on a similar mission.

In His Interest.

Jack—You know when Mabel rejected me last week I told you my troubles, and you promised to help me. Well, she accepted me last night. Am I to thank you for interceding for me? Cora Belle—Not exactly, dear boy. I simply intimated to Mabel that I was after you myself.

Argument Was Useless.

"But," protested the loving wife, "before I was married I always had a new bonnet every time I wanted one."

"Yes," answered the brutal husband without looking up from his paper, "and I put fresh cheese in the mouse trap every night until I had caught that mouse in the pantry."—Judge.

TRAFFIC IN SLAVES.

The Way Sales Are Conducted in the Marrakesh Market.

In his article on "The Slave Market at Marrakesh" in Harper's Magazine S. L. Bensman gives a vivid picture of this terrible traffic, which goes on approved by the Moroccan government. He describes the beginning of the sale as follows:

"The crowd at the entrance parts to the right and left to admit twelve grave men wearing white turbans and jellabias. They are the details, or auctioneers, and the sale is about to begin.

"Slowly and impressively the details advance in a line to the center of the slave market, almost up to the arcade where the wealthy buyers sit enspectacle. Then the head auctioneer lifts up his voice, and—oh, hideous mockery of it all!—he prays.

"Now each detail has his people sorted out, and the procession begins. Followed by his bargains, he marches round and round the market, and I understand why the dust was laid before the procession commenced. Some of the slaves are absolutely free from emotion of any sort. They move round as stolidly as the blindfolded horses that work the water wheels in gardens feed the town. Others feel their position.

"Twenty-one dollars—twenty-one! cries the detail at whose heels the one young and pretty woman who has not found a buyer limps painfully. She is from the western Sudan, and her big eyes have the terror stricken look that reminds me of a hare that was run down by the hounds a few yards from me on the marshes near my country home last winter.

"'Why is the price so low?' I ask.

"'She is sick,' says the Moor coolly. 'She cannot work. Perhaps she will not live. Who will give more in such a case?'

Wanted, a Library.

Many persons laughed heartily when they read the following advertisement in a recent issue of a German newspaper:

"Wanted—Some French books which a young girl may safely read and which will fit into a small bookcase. The height of each book must not exceed ten inches. The price is of no importance provided all the books have handsome covers and are of the same size."

Rather Prosaic.

A lady who was an ardent votary of modern culture happened to sit at an evening party next to an eminent composer and leader of an orchestra. In the full expectation of eliciting from the maestro a particularly brilliant and intellectual pronouncement, she inquired, "How do you feel after conducting the Ninth Symphony?"

"Hungry," was the laconic reply.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No sale of it is attended by such satisfaction. Some persons have periodical attacks of Cholera Morbus, dysentery or diarrhoea, and have to use great precautions to avoid the change. Change of water, cooking, and grocery supplies bring on the usual attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. Fellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best med cine in the market for all summer Complaints. Two drops only taken in water when the symptoms are noticed. Children like it. Safe and experienced.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all long and throat troubles, there is no preparation of medicine can excel Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness, and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome cough, and by promoting easy expectoration, rapidly carries off and thus stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby giving rest to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. In speaking highly of it we will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup a good remedy. It acts speedily and effectually allays all irritation, and is beneficial in the throat, bronchial tubes, and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering it clear and musical. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and have them reach manhood's estate, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Dr. Wood's Anti-Consumptive Syrup," and whenever a child has the croup, whooping cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

For three years I suffered untold misery, from this terrible complaint. I was at the time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in this country, but to no purpose. I continued getting worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this and two bottles and when the third bottle was finished, I found I was entirely cured, and for a year has been so since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing disease, I cheerfully recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery believing it the yet-latest cure. (Signed) E. D. MOINTER.

"JUST AS GOOD"

Has no glimmer of truth in it when it means a substitute for Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil.

There are cases on record where men and women too have suffered unspeakable torture from piles; where all kinds of remedies have been applied; where the surgeon's knife has been resorted to as the only hope; where electricity has tried its good offices, but without any permanent cure; and Dr. Agnew's Ointment, as the last resort, has proved its magic—an application has given relief. There is no other "just as good." Don't take chances.

The Filigree Ball

BY ANNA KATHERINE GREEN
AUTHOR OF
"THE LEAVENWORTH CASE."

lees susceptible to her grace and to the tone of her spirit—free and the far-away sadness of her look. She faltered only when by chance she looked at the shrinking figure of Francis Jeffrey.
Her name which she uttered without emphasis and yet in a way to arouse attention sank into all hearts with more or less disturbance.
"Alice Carey, Junior!" How in days gone by, and not so long gone by, either, these three words had aroused the enthusiasm of many a gallant man and inspired the toast at many a gallant feast! They had their charm yet, if the heightened color observable in many a cheek there was a true index to the quickening heart below.
But how are you connected with the deceased Mrs. Jeffrey?"
I am the child of her mother by a former husband. We were half-sisters."
No bitterness in this statement, only an innate sadness. The controversy or excitement was over. He awaited for an account as her childhood, she moved to or to be the nurse of her relations with her sister. But little was gained by this, for their story appeared to have been of a sympathetic character up to the time of Alice Carey's return from school, when they changed somewhat; but even then Miss Tuttle was naturally averse to saying. Indeed she almost refused to do so, and the coroner, seeing that no point gained more by this refusal than by any admission she might make herself, did not press this subject, but passed on to what appeared to be the most important explained actions on her part which pointed toward arrest.
The first inquiry was in reference to the conversation held between her and Mrs. Jeffrey at the time he visited her room. We had listened to his statement of it and we wished to hear here. But the one which had been given her by the lawyer appeared to be unsatisfactory to her, and her testimony naturally coincided with that, but was somewhat more full and satisfactory.
They had talked of her sister's follies and she had expressed impatience, and that was all she could say on the subject—all she would say, as we guessed from her saw.
The coroner introduced a fresh topic.
"What can you tell us about the interview you had with your sister just prior to her going out on the night of her death?"
Very little, except that it differed entirely from what is generally supposed. She did not come to my room for conversation but simply to tell me that she had an appointment with me. She was in an excited mood but said nothing to alarm me. She even refused the chair she left me; refused to put me off my guard, perhaps because she was no longer responsible."
"Did she know that Mr. Jeffrey had called to see her earlier in the day? Did she make any allusion to it, myself?"
"None at all. She shrugged her shoulders when I asked if she was not upset anticipating further questions by running from the room. She was in a nervous excitable state in her ways and never more so than at that moment. Had I known that I would have been different? Would to God that she had shown herself to be a reflective creature! Then she might have reached her heart and this tragedy would have been averted."
The coroner favored the witness with a look of respect, perhaps because such a question must occur sarcily be cruel.
"Is that all you have to say concerning this important visit, the last you held with your sister before her death?"
"No, sir, there is something else, something which I should like to relate to this jury. When she came into my room, she had in her hand a little ribbon; that is, she held the two ends of a long satin ribbon which seemed to come from her throat. Handing those two ends to me, she asked me to tie them about her wrist. 'A knot under and a bow on top,' she said, 'and be quick, for I can't slip off.' All this was something I had often been called on to do for her, I observed no hesitation in complying with her request. Indeed, I felt none. I thought it was but fun or her bouquet she held concealed in the folds of her dress, but it proved to be nevertheless,you know what. I pray that you will not oblige me to mention it."
It was such a stroke as no lawyer would have dared to make,—I heard afterward that she had refused the offices of three lawyers who had proffered her their services. But uttered as it was with a noble air and a certain dignified serenity, it had a great effect upon those about her and I noticed a moment the wavering tide of favor in her direction.
The coroner, who doubtless was perfectly acquainted with the explanation with which she had provided herself, but perhaps did not look for it to antedate his attack, bowed his quiet acknowledgment of her request and then immediately proceeded to enter it.
"I should be glad to spare you," said he, "but I do not find it in my slide. You know that Mr. Jeffrey had a pistol?"
"I did."
"That it was kept in their apartment?"
"Yes."
"In the upper drawer of a certain bureau?"
"Yes."
"Now, Miss Tuttle, will you tell us why you went to that drawer—if you did go to that drawer—immediately after Mrs. Jeffrey left your room?"
She had probably felt this question coming, not only since the coroner began to speak but ever since the evidence elicited from Lombard proved that her visit to this drawer had been noticed. Yet she had no answer ready.
"I did not go for the pistol," she finally declared. But she did not say what she had gone for, and the coroner did not press her.
Again the tide swung back.
She seemed to feel the change but did not show it in the way naturally looked for. Instead of growing perturbed or openly depressed she bloomed into greater beauty and expressed more than ever joy, not only but the men she instinctively faced as the tide of her fortunes began to lower. Did the coroner perceive this and recognize at last both the power and the peril of her cause and the power they were likely to carry with them? Taking the witness-chair an awful note as he declared:
"You had another cribbon in that room?"
She let her head droop just a trifle.
"Alas!" she murmured.
"You may have had two ribbons and took out a book with a peculiar cover, a cover of red leather. Miss, I am clearly recognized as that of the book in which he found a certain letter."
"You have seen such a book out?"
"I did."
"For what purpose, Miss Tuttle?"
She had no answer ready. But some consideration made her hesitate and the words never came, the coroner, rising and speak, it was to say:
"My sister asked another favor of me after I had tied the ribbon. Pausing in her dressing at the table, she turned to me in a tone quite in keeping with her whole conversation and begged me to look for her husband in the book they were reading together. Her request was a little odd, but this was the very natural one of wishing to find a passage at such a chance, but as she had placed it in the front of the book instead of the back, where they were reading, she was afraid that he would fail to find it. That is why I was asked to take it out for her and insert it again somewhere near the end." She was in a hurry or she would return and do it herself. As she spoke Mrs. Jeffrey turned in anger, I hallowed with joy this evidence of her affection for her husband, and as it was in obedience to her request, the single act in which I obeyed her, it was forcibly then as now, that I went to the shelves in her room and took down the book."
"And did you find the note where she said it was?"
"Yes, and put it in toward the end of the book."
"Nothing more? Did you read the note?"
"I was forbidden," was Miss Tuttle's quiet answer.
"Indeed this woman was a thoroughbred or else she was an adept in the part she had to play in the scene encountered. The gentleness of her manner, the way in which she met the eyes of the jury, whose dark depths of passions were visible, but passed on as if they were but the reflection of an equally forbidden will, made her a figure to be remembered, but it was a fascinating puzzle that awoke a species of awe in those who studied contents, yet her answers were rather clever than true. Some subtle power allowed yourself to be swayed by the look of her face and voice. Oh, that he rich, and yoice.
"You did not remain before Dorothea Jeffrey?" was the question of the coroner.
"I have a witness who knows more about that than I do," she suggested; and dumbfounded by the remark I looked at him reply, waited with unmoved countenance, but with a visibly bounding interest in his eyes which seemed to prove a fresh attack.
I saw a violent one and of a character she was least fitted to resist. Taking the note as I have so often mentioned, the coroner drew away the ribbon lying on my arm and read the pencilled. In a moment her hands were over her eyes.
"Why do you do this?" he asked.
"Did you think that I was going to disappear?"
She smiled pitifully as she let her hands fall again,
"I am afraid of firearms," she explained. "I always have had, ever since my father was killed in war, and this one—"
"I understand," said the coroner, with a slight glance in the direction of the note which he had evidently just discharged."
Instantly a complete breaking-up of her hitherto well maintained composure altered her whole aspect and she vehemently cried:
"I did, I did. It was on Waverley Avenue that night, and I heard the shot which in all probability ended my sister's life. I waited farther than I intended; I strolled into the street which had such bitter memories for us and I heard—No, I had not in search of my sister. I had not associated my sister's going out with any intention of visiting this house; I was merely troubled in mind and anxious and—and—"
She had overrated her strength or her cleverness. She broke down, unable to finish the sentence, and so did not try. She had been led by the impulse of the moment farther than she had intended, and, perhaps to her own confusion, paused with her first perceptible loss of courage before the yawning gulf opening before her.
I felt myself seized by a very comfortable dread lest her concealments and unfinished sentences hid a further knowledge of this crime than I was yet ready to admit.
The coroner, who is an older man than myself, betrayed a certain satisfaction but no dread. He only said the question which underlies his sharpest speeches, a query plainly put, yet one quietly remarked:
"And no under a similar impulse you, at will or Mr. Jeffrey, chose this uncanny place to ramble in. To all appearance that old hearth acted much more like a lodestone upon members of your family than you were willing to at one time to acknowledge."
This reference to words she had herself been heard to use seemed to overwhelm her. She looked at me and she cast a fleeting look of anguish at Mr. Jeffrey. Then she was herself again, and, meeting with no help there, or anywhere, instead, rose to her full height of stature, she recovered as best she could the position she had lost and, with a trembling question of her own, attempted to put the coroner in fault and to gain time for herself.
"You say 'under this,' Do you mean to imply that I entered that old house?"
"Yes, I do mean the grave, almost-sad reply, "did you not know that in some earth, dropped from the hand of a murderer, and at the time when a hundred guests flew in terror from this house, there fell to the floor a mate of a footstep,— a footstep which you are at liberty to assume is your own?"
"Ah!" she murmured, her hands going to her head.
But in another moment she had recovered herself and turned directly to the coroner.
"You stand there—I never said that I did not walk there—when I went later to see my sister and in sight of a house where I expected to find her. As she was not immediately there in a parlor, possibly her regret carried her far enough to where she had not dreamed of going, with she had not dreamed of going, with she had not dreamed of going, with

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"MORE THAN QUEEN."

The announcement that Mr. Wm. Humphrey will be seen here in the great creation of Napoleon in Julia Arthur's play, "More than Queen," has aroused a good deal of interest among theatre-goers. Miss Arthur's lavish production will be seen here in its entirety, and the cast will be a particularly strong one. Prominent among its members will be Miss Anne Sutherland, who essays the part of Josephine. Among the leading dramatic critics in America, Miss Sutherland is regarded as the only one qualified to fill the place of Miss Arthur, now in retirement. "More than Queen" will be seen at the Grand opera house to-morrow night.

Toronto, March 18.

Carroll v. Gill—Judgment in this action, tried at Belleville. Action for money alleged to be due under a contract for sale of stock and for damages for breach of contract. Held, that plaintiff knew there was a written contract between defendant, H. A. Gill, and one Gilbert, Gilbert, McCaffrey and Gilbert, as it is referred to in the letter which forms the contract between plaintiff and the defendant firm, and he is therefore bound by the terms thereof, and when he said he had no certificate of the change of manner of defendant firm, to whose entire satisfaction the work was to be done, Gilbert, Gilbert & Bangs, for breach of contract is not well founded. Any contract which he has to ground by the late Mr. McCaffrey could be only an estimate, regarding a matter as to which both parties had the same means of judging, and plaintiff knew well that the defendant firm could not prevent the railway company from changing the location of the line. No significance or leverage is to be attached to the alleged representations of Mr. McCaffrey as to the character and profits of sole and exclusive work. There is no question of any contract for a definite sum. Defendants are to be paid so much per yard for each class of work done. The defendant firm would never bind themselves to give better terms than they themselves had. The action must be dismissed as costs in the same direction. No one connected with Hastings has any idea until some time in November that plaintiff was anything but a foreman or servant of the defendant firm, and plaintiff acquiesced in all the changes of work, grading, etc., without making formal protest until 20th November. Action dismissed with costs. Thirty days' stay. If H. A. has been overpaid, and defendants can have a reference. If they care to pursue the counterclaim. S. Masson (Belleville), E. G. Porter (Belleville), and W. Carnew (Belleville) for plaintiff. H. M. Beretche, K. C., for defendant H. A. Ritchie. W. Hilliard (Morrisburg) for defendants Gilbert and Gilbert.

Congratulatory Resolution.

At the regular meeting of Mizpah Lodge, I.O.O.F., held last evening, the following resolution was unanimously adopted in honor of Past Grand Sire Shanks, recently elected Grand Master of the Manitoba Grand Lodge:

Moved by P. G. Cooper, seconded by P. G. Jones, that the members of Mizpah, No. 167, I. O. O. F., your mother lodge, tender you our hearty congratulations on your attaining to the highest office in the gift of the Grand Lodge of Manitoba. May you have a successful term and may Oddfellowship prosper in the Prairie Province under your guiding hand.

"The Oldest London Kitchen."

Perhaps the oldest relic in London of a mediæval kitchen is at Westminster abbey, though little remains to indicate it save the rubble flooring, the lattice and arches in an adjoining cellar, now the handsome dining hall of Canon Wilberforce. The monk who acted as kitchener or refectorian had a responsibility as great as any hotel manager or chef in these days, for among the fellow monks, to say nothing of the pensioners, were cellites as keen as any among the world famed diners of today. Then the abbey kitchen was scarcely more elaborate than any one of those which linger on in the remote cottages of the rough Cornish coast or on the Yorkshire moors, where the entire cooking of the family is done on a flat hearth, with no other fuel than turf or peat for twigs. The "south pot" hangs from a crane or stands on a tripod and is most accommodating in its uses. Would you make bread? Lay the dough on a clean iron plate and invert the broth pot over it; then keep up all round it your lighted turf or wood.—Windsor Magazine.

A Clause in Napoleon's Will.

Peter the Great is said to have made a will in which he exhorted his heirs to approach as nearly as possible to Constantinople and toward India, but the authenticity of this document has been disputed, and it is shrewdly suspected to have been forged late in the eighteenth century by August von Kotzebue. Of the genuineness, however, of the last will and testament of Napoleon I. there can be no manner of doubt. One of its clauses was as vindictive as the testamentary injunction of Queen Amstrigilda to her husband to have her two doctors killed and buried with her.

The exile of Longwood absolutely bequeathed to the French a fellow called Cantillon, who had been tried but let go for an attempt to murder the Duke of Wellington. The man was still surviving in Brussels when Napoleon III., rose to the throne, and Cantillon was duly paid his legacy.

The Fancy and the Butterfly.

She was a pansy. There she stood in the great garden of Japan, coquettishly fanning herself with a leaf. And he was a butterfly, a handsome fellow. Daily he flew to her to compliment the slender form and to kiss the tears away the night had left upon her brow. Wah the secret between pansy and butterfly, and those who found out soon the pansy and butterfly, and those who found out soon the pansy and butterfly, and those who found out soon the

When the snow is on the hilltop
And the ice fills up the dale
And the winds from north of Banagroff
Come a-whooping down the trail,
How our souls long for the springtime,
And the sprightly chick-a-dee,
For the succulent horseradish
And the tasty bumble-bee.

When the frost goes in the gas pipes
And the ice at Trenton jams
And we get the deepest patience,
Try to be as meek as lambs,
Still our hearts just keep on yearning
For a real live balmy day.
When the frost is off the pumpkin
And the cold is on the hay.

When the coal bin's nearly empty
And the wood pile's flattened out
And our bank account has dwindled
Till it's well nigh up the spout,
Then the deeper-seated longing
Of our hearts and souls together
And a prayer sincerely offered
For a change to summer weather.

CATARRH IS CERTAINLY CURABLE.

In fact it is one of the most curable diseases if fragrant healing Catarrh-ozone is used. No matter how long you have suffered with catarrh, you can be perfectly cured by inhaling the antiseptic vapor of Catarrhozone, which strikes at the foundation of the trouble and establishes such a healthy condition in the system that catarrhal germs simply can't exist. "I suffered from catarrh of the nose and throat for years," writes R. H. Downie, of Plattsville. "My nostrils were always stuffed up and I had a most disagreeable, hacking cough. Catarrhozone cured me completely." Catarrhozone never fails. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25 cents.

HIGHER TAX RATE THAN LAST YEAR.

Council Last Night Fixed it at 23 3-10 Mills, Protestant Rate; 25 5-10, Catholic Rate

Mr. William Reeves Was Appointed Assessor, at a Salary of $500 Per Annum.

Police Court Matters Again Caused Aldermen to Wax Eloquent — Interesting Notes.

Nobody appeared to think, when the Council met last night, that it was going to be the most important session of the year, but it was, just the same. The estimates were brought down, the tax rate struck, an assessor appointed, and many other interesting things touched on, and even then, in a three-hours session, the Aldermen found time to talk an hour or so on that perennial topic, who shall act as Police Court Clerk? Mr. P. J. M. Anderson, County Attorney, was present and gave the Council some legal advice, which they listened to gracefully and then decided not to accept. The idea! And Mr. Anderson used such beautiful language, too!

Ald. Magrath was the only absentee, he being at present on the mighty deep.

Communications, etc.

A. M. Hopkins wrote in reference to voting machines, which he was pushing and of course was the city-referred.

Mr. E. S. Wallbridge wrote asking for the free use of the City Hall on the evening of April 1st, for the purpose of holding a meeting in the interests of the Fruit Growers' Association.—Granted.

The following parties wrote applying for the position of Assessor: Reuben Lynn, Wm. Reeves, Jr., and Palen. H. Parker Thomas and H. B. Hunt.—Laid on table.

Some residents of Barton and Bertie Sts. asked that the streets of these thoroughfares.—Referred to Public Works Committee.

A petition from residents of Dunbar St., to granolithic walks, was also referred.

Residents of Great St. James and Roberts Sts. were complaining of an alleged nuisance caused by the Marsh & Henthorn foundry.—Laid on table.

The Hydro-Electric Power Co. presented and ordered to be paid John Gallagher, account.....$16.15
S. T. Harris, account..... 6.00

The Chairman of the Executive Committee, Ald. Fraser, presented the estimates for the year, which were laid on the table.

Reports of Committees.

The reports of the various committees, as usual, were read, and Ald. Patterson was chairman in committee of the whole.

That Alleged Nuisance.

Mr. William Tennent was heard in reference to the alleged nuisance caused by the foundry. He said the foundry people dumped their cast sheet and ashes in close proximity to the street, the wind blowing the same around to the great annoyance and discomfort of the neighbors. But the nuisance of which he was most of all, as coal stithings were used in the fire and large quantities of small cinders were the result of the work indulged in cavetroughs, spoiled their eastern water and dirtied clothes on lines.

Inspector Arnott was present, and stated that he had examined into the matter. The smokestack was the worst cause of complaint, and the only way it would be remedied was to shut the foundry down.

Ald. Marsh, a partner in the foundry, made an explanation. It was a question thing that, when Mr. Tennent was not using the city hall, dirty there were no complaints from him. Some months ago the smokestack was burned now as then. The chimney was repaired at considerable amount time; they were sold at 25c. a load, and the demand for them was great. In winter, he thought, there could be very little cinder dust blown over.

Ald. Sinclair said they could not afford to do away with the foreigners manufacturers. For his part, he would like to see factory stacks so that the city air, all that we would all have to wear veils and smoked glasses to keep cinders.

Mr. Tennent said the alleged nuisance had depreciated the value of the property 50 per cent.

The Chairman expressed their sympathy with Mr. Tennent, but could not see their way clear to take any action.

Police Court Affairs.

It will be remembered that the Executive Committee on Friday night decided to request the Police Commissioners to instruct the Police Court Clerk to keep a record of the Police Court proceedings and that same be read to the Council. When the Committee's recommendation came before the Council last night Ald. Salmon said that Mr. P. J. M. Anderson, County Attorney, was present and might, if asked, give the Council some advice in the matter. He moved that Mr. Anderson be heard.

Mr. Anderson delivered a rather long address, pointing out that it was inconsistent for Mr. Mikel, as City Solicitor, to act as Police Court Clerk. By law, provided that the Council could appoint another Police Court Clerk, but they could not appoint a substitute. In his judgment the Council would be well advised to appoint another Police Court Clerk, as he thought Mr. Mikel had plenty to do now. He thought the Chief of Police could do the work and without interference with his regular duties.

A long discussion ensued, in which nothing new was brought out.

At last Ald. Ketchenon said he had been told by legal talent that the City Solicitor could not legally act as Police Court Clerk. He moved that the Executive Committee's reports be not adopted, but that Chief Newton be appointed Police Court Clerk in place of W. G. Mikel, he to turn over the fines and fees collected directly to the City Treasurer.

Ald. McFee—"I would like the words, 'with no extra remuneration,' added to that motion."

Ald. Ketchenon—"There's no mention of extra remuneration."

There was another lively burst of conversation, and at last the Mayor said they had spent too much time on this matter already. The City Solicitor had told them that the course they proposed to adopt was legal. They should take his advice or else get another legal adviser. He moved that the recommendation of the Executive Committee be adopted.

After a little more talk, Ald. Ketchenon's motion, that Chief Newton be appointed Police Court Clerk, was put and lost by 5 to 4, the Committee's recommendation being adopted on the same division.

Other Matters.

The Fire chairman announced that he had completed arrangements for the purchase of 500 feet of hose.

The City Treasurer was given the exclusive right to rent the City Hall.

The Estimates.

The Chairman of the Executive Committee then presented his estimates for the year, as follows:

Enquiries.

Ald. Patterson asked if anything had been heard about the lot on Rear street, which the city desired to purchase.

Nothing, the Mayor said.

Introduction of By-laws.

Ald. Panter introduced six by-laws, one to appoint an assessor, and the others in relation to the levying and collection of taxes for the year.

Ald. Marsh was in the chair.

Then it came to filling in the blank in the Assessor by-law, Ald. Sinclair said the office was an important one, and he did not think they had applications from the best qualified men in the city.

Ald. McFee said they could only deal with the applications before them. He moved that Mr. H. B. Hunt be appointed.

Ald. Ketchenon nominated Mr. Wm. Reeves.

Ald. Sinclair nominated Mr. H. Parker Thomas.

Mr. Reeves was appointed, those voting for him being the Mayor and Alds. Patterson, Salmon, Green, Gordon and Ketchenon.

The remuneration was fixed at $500 per year, and the new Assessor will take office on April 1st.

The various by-laws were passed through the different stages and numbered respectively from 1144 to 1149.

Council adjourned shortly after 11 o'clock.

Died of Dropsy.

Mr. Robert Dafoe, who was a victim of dropsy, died yesterday afternoon at the family residence, Conniston Road. In the year 1838 the deceased was born in the Township of Sidney, and all his life had been spent in this vicinity. Last fall he was attacked with the disease, which caused his death. Mr. Dafoe was a member of the Tabernacle. A widow and two daughters, Misses Jennie and Nellie, survive. Mr. W. Dafoe, Principal of No. 2 School, is a brother of the deceased.

A Hint for Mr. Smith.

Bancroft Times: It is about time Game Warden Smith paid another visit to this part of the country. We are reliably informed that deer are being killed almost every day within a few miles of the village. Some evil-disposed ones are a few lazy loafers who live on the Monk Road. They have not done anything all winter, and this is the way they have of replenishing their larders. Mounted on a pair of snowshoes those human wolves pursue the helpless creatures, which have no chance to escape owing to the great depth of snow, and the killing is done as often with club as with a gun. This sort of thing should be stopped and we look to the Game Warden as the proper person to do it.

OPENING AT RITCHIE'S.

STACKS OF NEW AND BEAUTIFUL GOODS DISPLAYED IN PROFUSION.

The spring opening at Ritchie's is an event always looked forward to with interest by the ladies of Belleville and surrounding district. Affairing the public for about half a century this store has become indispensible to the city and surrounding district as a distributor of merchandise from all parts of the world.

Mr. Ritchie has recently returned from a purchasing trip to the foreign markets, and the results of his efforts are apparent in the stacks of new and beautiful goods throughout his store. At no time in the history of the business has the occasion been marked by such elaborate and tasteful display in all the departments.

The millinery department has been made more than ever a special feature of the establishment, and the result is seen in the very fine exhibit. This now-room itself is beautifully decorated, and the massed display could now carpet has been laid, which adds greatly to the appearance of the room. This department is under new management, the first class services of the services of Miss Woollatt, late of London, who has had experience in the best millinery houses of Canada. Miss Woollatt has with her a large staff of expert designers and trimmers, and their ability to produce pretty millinery is illustrated in the display made to-day. In taking a general look through it is at once noticed that the hats are a trifle smaller than last season and the shapes are very varied. Among the new styles are the Torpedo, the Trocano and the toque shapes. Many hats roll up high at the back, some roll from the sides and front, and a great many have pointed fronts. Toques and Turbans will be greatly worn and these are many pretty styles in them.

Flowers will again be the predominating artist for hat decoration. There are a great many different flowers used, such as the button-hose, forget-me-not and lily of the valley, also quantities of fruits, berries, grains and abundance of foliage. Small roses made of straw also form pretty decorations and abundance of pretty fancy straws are used, combined with touches of gold and sequins. Many of the pointed hats are draped with wide lace and some are faced with many rows of colored velvet ribbon. Handsome ostrich plumes and tips are fashionable and plenty of foreign and wide ribbons for the new color tones.

The champagne, tuscon and burnt shades blended together form pretty effects, and these are much used, some were. The soft shades of castor and brown, and the mauve tints from the light violet shade down to the deep vatican purple are fashionable. Greentones from the pale shade of the deep apple tints are all seen and a sprinkling of white and cream are very pretty all black hats, but many of these have touches of color introduced in the facing, or in the ribbons. There were lots of pretty hats for young girls, and plenty for the very little tots.

Ritchie's Waist has been unusually pretty this season, and later on there promises to be quite a run on the London and New York styles of broad trimmed sailors.

In the carpet department there were piles upon piles of new carpets and lovely things in rugs. New carpets have been laid in many rooms also, and the "Many ladies paid a visit to this fine room to look at the beautiful display.

The mantle and ready-to-wear section, under Miss Beaton, is overflowing with new costumes, jackets, skirts and blouses. Owing to the lot of new imported jackets have not arrived in time for Easter, but will be here shortly.

The blouses are beautiful in its array of new silks, dress goods, parcels, dress trimmings, hosiery, gloves, and underwear, &c., &c.

The department for men's and boys' clothing has also had made preparations for plenty of business, and have the great rules of suits and overcoats. The firm expresse themselves as more than pleased with the opening of this department. The people evidently appreciating the opportunity of getting a better class of clothing than has been hitherto possible.

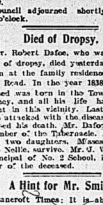
FOR ENERGY AND STRENGTH—ANTI-PILL



Sold in Ballavilly by J. S. McKeown.

Prevalent conditions that go to make people look old and fasten age upon them before time are described in the following letter from a woman who received immediate relief from a sample of ANTI-PILL.

"I would wake in the morning feeling tired. My feet and ankles would swell. I had a horrible dragged sensation. My head ached as though it would burst. My bowels were irregular. I had a disagreeable feeling of overflowing after eating. Food would not digest, and caused great distress. I was nervous. I was treated for dyspepsia, but received little or no relief. A neighbor of Dr. Leonard's recommended ANTI-PILL. I followed up its use, and how happy I was entirely cured me."

ANTI-PILL is sold by druggists, 50 cents, or mailed by addressing WILSON-PILL CO., Hagersville, Ont. Free sample mailed to any address.

Russian Army Loses 600 Men, Killed and Wounded, At Chyungsung—Sharp Encounter Reported 30 Miles Northeast of Wiju on the Yalu River—Firing, Off Yinkow—Russian Vladivostok Squadron Attacks.

London, March 22.—A number of rumors are printed in the morning papers this morning, but they must be taken with great reserve.

The Daily Telegraph's Tokio correspondent cables a newspaper account of the Japanese occupation of Port Arthur after a combined land and sea attack Saturday and Sunday.

It is asserted that a division of Japanese landed on the Liaotung Peninsula Saturday and engaged the Russians near Port Arthur, while the fleet bombarded from Saturday evening until Sunday morning.

Russians Lost 600.

The same correspondent reports a sharp encounter at Chyongsong, on the Yalu River, about thirty miles northeast of Wiju, in which the Russians lost 600 killed and wounded.

The Daily Chronicle's Shanghai correspondent hears from Newchwang that the Japanese crossed Tatung Pass, forty miles from Haicheng, and collision occurred with the Russians.

Reports from Seoul and Tokio are to the effect that Marquis Ito has arranged to lend $2,500,000 to Corea on easy terms.

Wang Extenties of Time.

According to the Standard's Tientsin correspondent, China is appealing to the powers for an extension of a year in the period for the payment of the indemnity growing out of the Boxer troubles.

The correspondent at Tientsin of The Daily Mail reports that Eastanks, a Japanese merchant, but a Russian spy, has been assassinated by being killed alive, but that the Japanese authorities disavow any knowledge of the assassins.

The Morning Post's Hamburg correspondent says that Russia has purchased the Hamburg steamer Hafis, which is now at Vladivostock, for $250,000, and that the ownership name has been changed to Alexeitrapani.

Firing Off Yinkow.

Yinkow, March 22.—Firing was heard off the coast, apparently about six miles to the southward, this morning. There was fourteen shots between 7 and 7.30. "The morning was hazy, and it was impossible to distinguish objects at sea. A credible report has reached here that two cruisers and five gunboats were off Kinchow yesterday.

Northern Squadron's Attack.

Constadt, March 22.—The Vestnik, the leading service organ here announces that the Russian Vladivostock squadron has attacked the Morocan (in Volcano Bay) and Otarunai (in Ishikari Bay), both on the Japanese Island of Yesso, where an excellent quality of coal is supplied to the Japanese warships.

Chained Ships to Block Channel.

London, March 22.—Japan is about to make a sensational attempt to bottle up Port Arthur once and for all.

Fifteen big steamships are being prepared at Nagasaki for the purpose. They are being loaded with stone, and are to be linked together with chains and wire cables. They are to steam toward Port Arthur in a line, and it is immaterial whether they are sunk by Russian guns or are blown up by their crews.

In either event they will thoroughly block the entrance to the harbor, according to the belief of the naval experts who are engineering the plan.

Through Russian Spectacles.

St. Petersburg, March 22.—The following Gazette from Mukden, March 20, was received yesterday:

"General Zhilinski reports as follows:

"The troops are in good spirits and there is no sickness.

"According to reports received from the frontier guards on the Eastern Chinese Railway, everything is in order there. At Udyini station Captain Ulksnoff, with 70 cavalrymen, has driven off a band of 100 Chunchuses (Chinese bandits).

"The occupations of the towns of Anju and Pingyang by the enemy's infantry and artillery is confirmed. An increased movement of the troops and transports on the road between Pingyang and Anju is noticeable.

"Thirteen of the enemy's transports recently unloaded at Chemulpho.

"According to reports there have been no preparations for landing on the coast of Caoliao or opposite Kinchow.

"All reports appearing in foreign newspapers of the blowing of Japanese troops at different points on the coast are inventions."

Official advices report the concentration of armed Mongolians dispersed as pilgrims at Urga, moving south of Lake Baikal, and a few miles from the Russian frontier.

Russians Are Sick.

A telegram has been received from Medical Officer Treyuf, at Chita, Eastern Siberia, saying:

"There are many cases of sickness here."

Chinese Squadron.

Che Foo, March 22.—The Chinese Peayang squadron, consisting of the cruisers Hsiang, Hsing, Hsien and Haishew, under command of Admiral Tsah have arrived here.

Russians Driven Out.

St. Petersburg, March 22.—Gen. Zhilinski's official confirmation of the reports that the Russian outposts abandoned Anju upon the approach of Japanese in force, is not no surprise here, as such action is in perfect accord with the Russian plan of campaign.

Signed For Two Years.

Indianapolis, March 22.—At a meeting here yesterday the scale prepared by the coal operators and accepted by the miners was signed by the joint interstate committee, consisting of two miners and two operators of each of the four states forming the central competitive district. No change was made from the original provisions of the operators. The scale is operative for two years.

SURGEONS RESORT TO THE KNIFE

WHEN A SIMPLE HOME REMEDY CURES.

Why do physicians always advise an operation for the cure of hemorrhoids or piles? Are they unconsciously influenced by the diets of operating surgeons, who stoutly assert and maintain that all other treatments are merely palliative, and that the knife affords the only means of cure?

There could be no greater failure, the worst possible case of piles are permanently cured by the use of Pyramid Pile Cure, which is in suppository form, is applied directly to the source of the complaint, and removes the cause, which an operation does not.

"I have been a sufferer from piles for over forty years, and after trying everything I could hear of or read of, without benefit or relief, I came to the conclusion to try Pyramid Pile Cure a trial, and I can truly say it has given me entire satisfaction; it is a wonderful remedy. The bleeding has entirely ceased, the protruding has stopped, there is no longer any itching, and I feel no swelling of the parts. In fact I feel like a new man.

"I had to wear a truss for several years, to keep the bowel up, but I have now discarded it, after using six boxes of Pyramid Pile Cure. I think after forty years of suffering, that my case was a small amount to make such an agreeable change, as I was unable to do any work that required stooping in the last eight years. I recommend Pyramid Pile Cure to every one with whom I come in contact. Price fifty cents, by mail, prepaid. Geo. W. Ivy, Confederate Soldier, Pulaski, Richmond, Va."

We vouch for the truth and accuracy of the above testimonial, and urge all sufferers to purchase a fifty cent box of this famous remedy at the nearest drug store, and give it a trial to-night. Accept no substitute and remember there is no remedy "just as good." The Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich., publish a little book on the causes and cure of piles, and will gladly send it free to any address.

TWO M.P.P.'S AND "SOO"

Members Not Interested Though Soo Owes Them $400,000.

Committee of Messrs. Conmee and Bowman, Members of the Legislature, With the Reorganization Plan of the Consolidated Company Submitted in the House—Dr. Willoughby Made Joe Armstrong's Birthday Present.

Toronto, March 22.—Before the orders of the day were called in the Legislature yesterday, Dr. Willoughby, in a paragraph reading like Offbe, referring to Friday's incident in the House, which said that "the Whips had before the House met conferred with each other regarding the business that was to come up; that the Ministerial Whip had received from his colleagues a pledge and assurance that no contentious subject would be forced to a division, and that many Ministerial members had left Toronto by the early evening trains, not expecting that their absence would embarrass their Government." He accordingly said the conference was not between the Ministerial Whip and the Premier and himself.

Made It Unpleasant.

The Conservatives took advantage of another "off day" by making things exceedingly unpleasant for the ministers and some of their supporters. Incidentally a little side play was thrown on the conference between two members of the right side of the House, and legislation which the Government will attempt to put through this session for the purpose of aiding in the reorganization of the industrial enterprises of Sault Ste. Marie. Mr. Hanna moved for a return, showing: (1), What lands and securities are covered by the lien of Messrs. Conmee and Bowman, M.P.P.'s, against the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company, for upwards of $400,000, and dated on or about Oct. 12, 1903; (2), What charge on the assets of the company, (3,) And showing the amount of the said judgment at the present time.

Conmee and Bowman, Contractors.

From the debate which followed it developed that Messrs. Conmee and Bowman were contractors for a part of the construction of the Algoma Central Railway, one of the Soo properties, and that the contract was sublet to Foley Bros. for a reduction of 15 per cent. of the original contract price; that when the Consolidated Company became insolvent Messrs. Conmee and Bowman secured judgment for the amount of their claim, over $400,000 and that Foley Bros. also stand as judgment creditors for their claim, less than $100,000. Mr. Conmee asserted that his claim was amply secured, and that he was in no way interested in the legislation before the House. He earnestly resented the insinuation that pressure had been exerted on the Premier by supporters to expedite the enterprise, and questioned the motives of Mr. Hanna in bringing the matter before the House.

Debate Waxed Warm.

The debate waxed quite warm, and Mr. Lennox was subjected to an annoying cross-examinating, the Premier somewhat grawling at times and calling "carried" several times in order to shake off further talk. At length, he took the floor, and as the member for Port Arthur was on his feet and apparently desirous to answer some remarks of Mr. Whitney, it was necessary for Sir Rose to urgently motion his supporter to subside. This rather amused the Opposition, who were anxious to draw out the Port Arthur man, and when the Premier's agitation was noticed, Dr. Willoughby observed: "You can explain it better than he can."

The motion was finally carried.

Sea Judgments.

Dr. Pyne was granted an order for a return, showing full particulars of all claims, judgments and priorities chargeable against the Sault Ste. Consolidated Companies and the Algoma, Central Railway; the names of the creditors and the nature and amount of their respective claims and particulars of all assets on which are based, and subject to which it is the intention of the Government to guarantee the sum of $2,000,000 to such companies as embodied in the bill introduced in this House, before the second reading of such bill.

More Questions to Answer.

The Opposition are apparently determined to have full information before proceeding with the bill. Conmee and Bowman in the Soo reorganization scheme, for Dr. Whitney has given notice that he will ask the following questions:

What is the exact nature and description of the securities held by Messrs. Conmee and Bowman, members of this House, referred to by Mr. Hanna in his motion for answer to a question.

Order for House for a return giving the nature and description of the securities mentioned above.

He will also ask: Are the capitalists behind or interested in or financing the capital for the application for the reorganization of the Soo Railway Company, and if so, has the Premier stated some days ago he would give the House?

Increase in Committee.

The House went into committee on the following bills: Respecting the Presbyterian Church of Canada, at Newmarket (Davis); respecting the town of Newmarket (Richardson); to confirm bylaw No. 699 of the township of Cornwall (McCart); to further extend the powers of the Consolidated Gas Company (Lucas); respecting the Kingston Street Railway (Pyne); respecting the city of Windsor (Rourke); to consolidate a portion of the debt of the township of Romney (Fardo); to empower certain powers on the trustees of the estate of the late John Bacon (Pyne); to confirm bylaw No. 1,137 of the city of Belleville (Morrison); to incorporate the village of Chatsworth (MacKay); respecting the construction of local improvements within the town of North Toronto (St. John).

Second Readings.

These bills passed their second readings: Respecting the town of Perth (Matheson); to confirm bylaw No. 519 of the University of Oxford (Munro); respecting the Separate Schools in the town of Sturgeon Falls (Michaud); enabling and directing the Royal College of Dental Surgeons for Ontario to admit John Henry Gorman as a student in his final year (Powell).

LOOK FOR A SHORT SESSION.

Order Paper in House of Commons Cleared in Short Time.

Ottawa, March 22.—In thirty-five minutes the House yesterday afternoon swept through the order paper and adjourned. The feeling grows that the session will be a short one and may not last more than three months. There are only two Government measures of importance—the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway contract and the militia bill. The latter is non-contentious, and a few weeks is believed to be the limit of the debate on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway contract. What private legislation there is will go with a rush when the party issues are exhausted.

Trent Valley Canal.

Concerning the Trent Valley Canal, Minister Emmerson stated in reply to Mr. Lennox that the first appropriation for the work was $100,000, and that the original estimations of the work had been underrated, and were to be considerable. The work was actually commenced in 1880. About $2,000,000 has been spent on the work since 1896. The total expenditure to date is $3,825,000, and the estimated amount required to complete the work via Lake Simcoe is $1,650,000; via Port Hope, $6,850,000.

Nothing Since 1903.

Mr. Monk was informed that the Government has paid nothing since July 1, 1903, on the million dollars granted by the Canadian Montreal and Great Britain $110,650.

Replying to Mr. Clarke, the Minister of Railways said that the differences between the Government and the International Railway Bridge had been adjusted. The Dominion will pay $4,481 out of the $12,000 dated fund and Valleyfield will pay $2,919 for transportation.

Protest Against Legislation.

Mr. Clarke was informed that protests have been received by the Dominion Board of Trade, Engineers, Engineers, protesting against the engagement of aliens in the service being made in connection with the proposed national transcontinental railway.

To-day the Government will take up the Militia Bill, and if it exhausts this order the estimates will then be considered.

Jabel Robinson asked if the Government proposed to introduce a bill regarding Sabbath observance. The Premier replied that the Government had been applied to in that matter, but the question was a difficult one, involving law, jurisdiction of the Provinces, and had been referred to the law officers of the Crown. The Government do not like to interfere until the law officers make their report.

NEW FISHING REGULATIONS.

Close Seasons For Black Bass and Maskinonge Extended.

Toronto, March 22.—As a result of a conference between S. T. Bastedo, Deputy Minister of Fisheries, and the Dominion Government, a number of new regulations governing fishing in Ontario and border waters will be promulgated. A new regulation will immediately be put in force protecting any speckled trout caught in Ontario being taken outside the Province. The sale of speckled trout of all sizes is prohibited. The number of black bass that may be taken by anglers is reduced from twelve to eight, and the size increased from 10 inches to 12 inches. Whitefish and lake trout of less than 2½ pounds cannot be taken. Twenty perch of inches may be taken in the Great Lakes, and 7 inches inland.

The legal length of maskinonge has been made 30 inches, and nothing can be taken under this. No yellow pickerel under 15 inches, no blue pickerel under 12 inches, and no sturgeon under 36 inches.

The close season for black bass and maskinonge will be from Jan. 1 to June 30. The close season for pickerel will be from June 1 to May 13. Fishing in Lake Erie from Nov. 15 to March 15 will be stopped, providing the State of Ohio adopts a similar regulation.

MAY NOT END BY EASTER

Tax Bill to Keep the Legislature Busy at Work.

Another Discussion on the Question of Forestry Chair at University or Guelph O.A.C.—Mr. Dryden's Bill to Amend Factories' Act Causes a Kick From the Opposition—Bills Advanced.

Toronto, March 23.—Indications do not point to an early prorogation of the Legislature. A week ago there was a good deal of talk of finishing up by Easter, but the order paper still contains much material for discussion, which may throw the close of the session away into the middle of April. The most elaborate measure is the Taxation Bill, which has hardly been touched. Of the 227 sections not more than 30 have been disposed of. Moreover, the committees have much work to do and until the report of the House there will be no morning sessions. The Sod Guarantee Bill is yet to get its second reading, and if certain hints thrown out are to be taken as an indication of the temper of the Opposition they may attempt to get rid of the matter by talking it to death. Their most powerful debaters are loaded up with material for an assault which is expected to give the Government a very bad quarter of an hour. A caucus of the Conservative members was held yesterday, when it is stated the Sod Loan was principally discussed and a plan of campaign drawn up with reference to it.

The Chair of Forestry.

On the second reading of the bill to amend the University Act of 1901, Mr. Whitney asked the Minister of Education to repeat what he said the other day regarding the establishment of a chair of forestry. Mr. Harcourt gave the desired information, saying the first proposition came from the Toronto University authorities for a chair of forestry there. Then Dr. Mills, the then president of the Agricultural College, suggested that Guelph was the proper place. A conference was suggested, and it was agreed that the teaching at Guelph could be made a part of, but not subsidiary to, the teaching at Toronto. Then he found some correspondence from students of the School of Science urging the claims of that institution. It appeared to the Minister that the Provincial University was the place with some provision so that the students at Guelph might avail themselves of the teaching.

Mr. Whitney said he had been informed that Mr. Mills receded from his position and acknowledged the propriety of the establishment of the chair at the university, and he (Whitney) was assured that a joint memorandum signed by Mr. Mills and the president of the university, setting out that position, was now on file in the Education Department. This was dated Dec. 6, 1902, and was accompanied by a resolution of the University Senate, looking for the establishment of the chair at Toronto, with a summer school at Guelph.

Mr. Mills Had Receded.

Mr. Harcourt said Mr. Whitney was right in the statement that Mr. Mills had receded from this position.

Three or four times Mr. Whitney asked for a direct answer to the question whether such a memorandum was on file, and complained that the Minister was evading the question. Mr. Harcourt finally said he knew that the gentlemen had come to a general understanding, but the details had not been worked out. Mr. Whitney did not like to say so, but the House might be justified in suspecting that the Minister was trying to conceal something.

Mr. Pyne informed the House that Queen's put forestry upon its calendar of instruction last year.

Mr. Downey said the place for a school of forestry was at Guelph, and having in mind the progress of the Government for a forest tree nursery at the Agricultural College the Government ought to give an ear to the representations in favor of the Agricultural College as the proper place to establish the chair.

Mr. Reid spoke a word for Queen's University, but Mr. Pense said he had authority from Queen's to say that it consented to Toronto getting the chair.

Factory Act Amendments.

Whether factory girls should be allowed to wear their hair in plaits and securely fastened to the head or flowing down the back, was the subject next taken up. A bill to amend the factories act, introduced by Hon. Mr. Dryden, makes the fashion tight, and it produced a storm of objections from Mr. Kelly, Dr. Barr and Mr. Whitney.

Another provision makes the hours of work not to exceed from 7 to 7. Dr. Barr and Mr. Lucas claim it ought to limit the hours to 7 to 6. Mr. Dryden amended the bill by allowing the wearing of a cap, but this was not made compulsory.

Protection For Investors.

The Attorney-General moved the second reading of his bill to amend the loan corporations act. The bill is the outcome of Mr. Downey's observations during the last session of the House respecting the operations of a number of loan companies. It disassociates the borrower from partnership in these companies, and protects the investors who are lured into enterprises which promise homes on impossible terms.

Mr. Downey commended the Attorney-General's effort to remove the grievances existing. Since the inspector of insurance had formulated by-laws for the government of these companies, a number of them had gone out of business.

Mr. Whitney remarked that a good deal of the trouble had arisen from the inaction of the department, because licenses were given to all sorts of loan companies to do business on the terminating loan contract plan. While the bill was good, it might go further. He thought that the borrower may be permitted to pay off his obligations as soon as he wants to. Also, it should be provided that companies, in their annual statements, tell what assets they hold.

First Readings.

The following bills were introduced: Mr. Kribs, to amend the act respecting the registration of land titles; Mr. Cameron (Fort William), to incorporate the Kaministiqua Company.

Third Readings.

The following bills were read a third time: Mr. Hall, the Town of Newmarket, to confer certain powers on the trustees of the estate of the late John Bacon; to confirm By-law No. 1,137 of the City of Belleville.

Municipal Taxation Bill.

The House then went into committee on the Municipal Taxation Bill. The whole of the evening and part of the afternoon were consumed with three or four sections of the bill, indicating that there will be a protracted debate on some of the more contentious clauses.

MAJORITY OF SIXTEEN.

"We're Twisted Your Pigtails Now," Shouted Irish Member.

London, March 23.—The majority again fell very low last night in the House of Commons, a motion from the Irish benches censuring the Government's action with regard to Irish waterways being defeated by a majority of only sixteen.

The figures were greeted with prolonged Irish cheers, and a voice: "You shall drink to the defeat," while John Gordon, Swift MacNeil, the member for South Donegal, amid laughter, shouted: "We've twisted your pigtails now."

Again a Majority of 96.

London, March 23.—(C.A.P.)—In a snap division in the House of Commons on the Irish drainage scheme, the Government only got sixteen of a majority, due to their supporters being out lunching. The result was received with prolonged Irish cheering, one member crying: "You shall drink it to the dregs." After frantic efforts the passing of the supplementary naval estimates was accured by a Government majority of ninety-six.

State Owned Phones.

London, March 23.—(C.A.P.)—Lord Stanley, Postmaster-General, announced in the House of Commons yesterday that the Postoffice Department was negotiating for the purchase of the National Telephone Company. He asked that a small select committee be appointed to consider the details and the expenditure of £3,000,000 upon the work during the next five years.

FUNERAL OF "OLD DUKE."

Solemn Military Display—Royalty, Nobility and Famous Soldiers Present.

London, March 23.—The Duke of Cambridge was buried yesterday after a funeral such as has been accorded to few soldiers. Since the death of the Duke of Wellington, King Edward, Queen Alexandra and nearly all the members of the royal family, representatives of foreign monarchs, a majority of the nobility, the diplomatic corps and representative British regiments of all walks in life, attended the impressive national service at Westminster Abbey. Thereafter the body was taken to Kensal Green Cemetery and buried. Thousands of troops marched through and lined the streets.

Among the principal mourners were Admiral and Colonel Fitzgeorge, the late Duke's sons. Beside the coffin stood five field marshals, Wolseley, Haines, Roberts, Norman and Wood, who, with a score of other famous British generals, acted as pallbearers.

Observed in Toronto.

Toronto, March 23.—The 9th Field Battery paraded in Queen's Park at noon yesterday and fired a salute of 85 guns, one for each year of the Duke's age. The ceremony occupied an hour and a quarter.

LEGALIZING BLACKMAILING.

The Ontario Legislature has now before it an extraordinary proposition, by the form of a Bill to legalize an agreement entered into between the Public School Board of School Trustees in the Village of Sturgeon Falls and the Separate School Trustees, to divert part of the Common School funds to the support of Separate Schools, which, upon its face, bears evidence of what borders closely upon blackmailing. The transaction is thus described by a contemporary:

"In 1896 the Sturgeon Falls Pulp Company was seeking a bonus of $7,000 from the Village of Sturgeon Falls. The Village Council was composed of an equal number of Protestants and Roman Catholics, or, to put the matter more fairly, Public and Separate School supporters. The people of the village were anxious that the bonus should be voted, but the Separate School supporters in the Council declined to allow the proposal to be placed before the people until the Public School Trustees had agreed that one-half of the school taxes upon the company's fixed assessment of $40,000 should be devoted to the support of the Separate Schools. When the Public School Trustees had agreed to do this, the bonus went through practically unopposed."

If this be not a corrupt agreement it would be difficult to know what would constitute one. The Public School Board declined to carry out the agreement on the ground that they had no authority in law to make such a bargain, and for the reason that the Public School supporters of this village had threatened to hold them responsible, individually, if they paid any portion of the taxes of the village to the Separate School Board, which belonged to the Public School Board. Now the Separate School Board applies to the Legislature for an Act compelling the Public School Board to carry out the illegal agreement, into which they entered in 1896. From the discussion which took place in the Private Bills Committee, it is evident the Bill will become law, the refusal of the Public School to pay the money being declared by the Attorney-General a "gross fraud."

Let us look at this transaction and see what it suggests to the common mind. The Separate School supporters threaten the Public School Board, that unless the latter agreed to pay to the former certain moneys paid upon property, assessable only for Public School purposes, to which they were not entitled to one cent, they, the supporters of Separate Schools, would oppose and defeat a certain by-law granting a bonus to a pulp mill industry, which was to be established on receiving such bonus. Anxious to have the by-law passed, the Public School Board allowed itself to be coerced into a compliance with this blackmailing demand, having, as the members of the Board now admit, they had no power or authority to enter into any such agreement, and now justify it by the Private Bills Committee, on the ground that they "shrewdly suspected that the "agreement was ultra vires, and would, therefore, be a nullity," and "being disposed to fight diplomacy "with diplomacy, entered into "the agreement." This excuse for doing an illegal act is on the face of it, disreputable, and if the Legislature were to enact a law compelling these Trustees to pay the proportion of taxes thus promised under threats out of their own pockets, it would be but a just retribution for practising such "diplomacy," while the threat by which the promise was extorted was a clear case of blackmailing, the reason assigned for making it being worthy of the strongest condemnation.

So far, so good, but should the Legislature step in and take from the supporters of the Public Schools money which belongs exclusively to them? simply because a Board of Trustees, without their knowledge or consent, illegally promised at the point of the bayonet to give away their trust in consideration of the votes of the Separate School supporters being cast for a by-law then about to be submitted to the people?

The whole transaction on the part of both parties is a most disreputable one, and should not be legalized. Election frauds, however, appear to have great merits in the opinion of our present rulers.

TIMELY TOPICS.

A high Russian officer says the reverses Russia has met with will do her good. Under the circumstances, then, we will not violate the proclamation of neutrality by hoping that Russia will meet with many more reverses. For we'd all like to see Japan "do her good."

China's alleged neutrality in the present war seems liable to turn out like the alleged neutrality of Peterboro in the late hockey mix-up.

"Wonders," as the old lady said, "will never be done seeing." Here's the Hamilton Times correcting a contemporary which wrongly quoted a passage of scripture.

Y.M.C.A. officials in this city, we are told, intend to make a "big push" shortly to secure funds with which to erect a new building for their headquarters in Belleville. The scheme, we believe, must commend itself to all people interested in the welfare of the rising generation. The Y.M.C.A. has shown itself to be a power for good in this city. Other places, some of them possessing a tithe of Belleville's advantages, can boast of fine Y. M. C. A. buildings erected in recent years, why should we be behind the times? It is to be hoped that the scheme when placed before our philanthropic men and women of means, may meet with their endorsation and encouragement, and that a substantial building may shortly be erected as a monument to the glory of God and the well-being of our young men.

In answer to a question put in the House of Commons, the Minister of Public Works stated that the first appropriation for the Trent Valley Canal was made in 1879-80, and that work was actually commenced in 1880. The sums annually expended on the canal be gave as follows:—

1883	40,707
1884	192,203
1885	121,282
1886	76,103
1887	179,541
1888	114,879
1889	47,582
1890	58,644
1891	9,826
1892	4,417
1893	9,982
1894	39,179
1895	53,997
1896	302,379
1897	488,575
1898	351,273
1899	166,611
1900	334,583
1901	391,441
1902	449,075
1903	523,950
Total	$3,825,837

The Minister estimated the total estimated expenditure required to complete the work via Port Hope at $6,850,000, and via Trenton, $6,-650,000.

Most people will begin to think that, having spent $3,825,837, it is about time for the Government to complete the work, so that the country may receive some return for the money invested. Why this humbugging about a Port Hope terminus? Do the Government expect to bribe the constituencies in the vicinity of Port Hope by holding out to them this "phantasmagoria" of a canal? It looks like it.

We are informed on reliable authority that nets are being placed in the bay in the vicinity of the bay bridge, which will catch the fish about to spawn. Can nothing be done to stop this? If it is legal, so much the worse. The gentleman who tells us of this matter says he is willing to contribute toward the expense necessary to have this practice stopped, if it is possible to do so. Again we would ask, Can nothing be done?

"Japanese are moving ahead," say the despatches. That's an old tale now. If the Japs want to stay in the limelight they must gunge up and play the game.

The Mayor and Cap. Allen have gone to Petesboro, and it to be hoped they won't run up against such a rib-bending crowd as we did on one occasion last January.

The Globe announces a session of 40 minutes, on Monday, in the House of Commons, and then manufactures an excuse for it. Had it been a session of the Senate its readers would have had, instead of an excuse, a little sneering at the octogenarians, etc.

There is a humorous suggestion in the sentence from a London despatch which says: "By frantic efforts the Imperial Government secured a majority of 66." By frantic "frantic efforts" necessary. Did the Government want to pass the century mark?

The Japs have lossed 200 shells, worth a million dollars, into Port Arthur. The shell game was probably never played on so large a scale before.

The Laurier Government is likely to have trouble with Bourassa and his fellows over the Militia Bill. But it will serve Sir. Wilfrid right. Bourassa is only following in the footsteps of the Premier himself, who for years has held up the bogey of "militarism" and forced handsprings with terror at the idea of being drawn into "European complications." Now Bourassa, after Laurier has started him on the road, takes the bit in his teeth and bolts fair in southward Herod. It serves the Premier right; he shouldn't play with edge tools.

FOXBORO.

The I.O.F. seems to be booming in our village at present. The members of the order here, assisted by G. W. Brown, of Belleville, and Jas. Glendenning, of M.P.P., attended mass to their number during the present month, and promise a still larger mass in the month of April.

Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Faulkner entertained a number of their friends on Tuesday evening last.

We all extend our deepest sympathy to the family of the late Stephen Bowerman, of Toronto, formerly residents of our village.

The General Mission Band Brown has plans at the Methodist church here on Monday at 2 p.m. The deceased lady has been a great sufferer for many months.

We are glad to learn that Mrs. Lewis Bradshaw has recovered from a very severe attack of grip.

Dr. Deacon's "Hello, Bobs" is being pressed by the young people of the village and will be given in the Sundby School rooms of the Methodist church on Thursday evening, March 31st.

All are looking forward with much interest to this entertainment, for the young people tell us that it will be the event of the season.

Dr. Faulkner, of Foxboro, spent Sunday in Stirling. He has been very busy during the last few weeks on account of so much sickness in our midst, and also on account of being the Warden of Hastings County, new duties come to him which require a share of his time and attention.

Mrs. Kimmerly, daughter of Mrs. Wm. Bixby, is very sick.

Our village merchant, T. L. Windsor, received a telephone message last Wednesday, asking him to come at once to Frankford, as his father was seriously ill. The family have very little hopes of his recovery.

READ IT THROUGH.

'Twould Spoil This Story to Tell It in the Headlines.

To use an eighteenth century phrase, this is an o'er true tale." Having happened in a small Virginia town in the west of 1901, it is a story very much of the present. Up to a short time ago Mrs. John E. Harmon, of Mills Station, Va., had no personal knowledge of the rare curative properties of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. "Last January," she says, "my baby took a dreadful cold and at one time I feared she would have pneumonia, but one of my neighbors told me how this remedy had cured her little boy and I began giving it to my baby at once and it soon broke her. I hartily thank the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for placing so great a cure within my reach. I cannot recommend it too highly or say too much in its favor. I hope all who read this will try it and be convinced as I was." For sale by all druggists.

COLDS ARE DANGEROUS.

How often you hear it remarked: "It's only a cold," and a few days later learn that the man is on his back with pneumonia. This is of such common occurence that a cold, however slight, should not be disregarded. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy counteracts any tendency toward pneumonia. It always cures and is pleasant to take. MAN'S MOST CRITICAL AGE.

Very often the vital resources are small to withstand the strain that lies between fifty-seven and sixty-two years of age there is a strange slowing down and loss of vitality. It is important that this important period of decay should be checked; strength must be imparted to the tired brain. At this weakened point must be fortified. The wise man will use Ferrozone, whose potency is particularly applicable to these critical periods. Ferrozone quickens the whole being, imparts vigor and power, pushes back the onset of senility in a very un-afflicted way. It's because Ferrozone gives strength, vitality and vigor that it is useful to old men. Try it. Price 50c.

Eddystone Lighthouse.

The famous Eddystone lighthouse stands fourteen miles off the coast of Land's End and is perhaps the most celebrated in the world. It has often been used as an illustration by poets and preachers, for no other lighthouse is in such a tenacious or dangerous place, and none costs so much money and trouble. There are three keepers, who live there with their families, and two of them are always on duty, while the third is on the main coast enjoying a vacation. They relieve one another each month, so that none of the keepers remain on duty more than two months at a time. The present and next are said to be absolutely necessary to preserve the nerves of the keepers. The lighthouse is 135 feet high, was erected in 1882 at a cost of $400,000 and rises from a submerged rock. The first lighthouse was erected on this rock as long ago as 1697, but was washed away six years after and was not replaced for a long time. The second was burned down in 1775; the third stood from 1707 to 1882 and was famous in history.

NO DIFFERENCE.

No distinction is made as to the kind of Piles that Hem-Roid cures.

The names Internal, External, Bleeding, Itching, Blind, Protruding Piles, etc., are simply names of the different stages through which every case must pass if it continues long enough.

Piles are caused by congestion or stagnation of blood in the lower bowel, and it takes an internal remedy to remove the cause.

Dr. Leonhardt's Hem-Roid is a tablet taken internally.

It is a permanent cure and no case of Piles has ever been found it failed to cure.

MAKER OF BANK NOTES.

English Firm Widen For Generations Has Made the Government Paper.

The death is announced of Mr Melville Portal, at his residence, Laverstoke House, Whitchurch, Hants, at the ago of eighty-four.

Mr. Portal was head of the famous firm which for generations has manufactured at Laverstoke the paper on which Bank of England notes are printed, and a curious story is told in Hampshire in connection with that circumstance.

The founder of the family was Henri Portal, a descendant of some French Huguenots who were naturalized in 1711 at Winchester. Henri Portal, seeking a means of subsistence, built a paper mill on the River Test at Laverstoke, and owing partly to the process of manufacture and partly to a peculiarity in the water of the Test, paper of so fine a quality was turned out that the Bank of England granted to Henri Portal the privilege of making its bank-note paper.

When his descendant, John Portal was lying mortally ill in the late forties, the story goes that John's two sons, Melville and Wyndham, were given their choice of his property, and the former took the paper mill and the latter the estates.

The second son (now Sir Wyndham Portal, M.P.) was created a baronet in 1901), found his property continually dwindling in value, while Melville's mills brought in enormous riches.

The late Sir Gerald Portal, who made a famous name in connection with the development of Uganda, was a son of Mr. Melville Portal.

A correspondent writes to The London Chronicle: You had in your paper a review of the "tea-chest caligraphy" of Mr. J. M. Barrie. That just describes it. I have had several letters from Mr. Barrie, some of which I have been able to read. I remember that once I was at a Scotch gathering, the chairman of which declared that he had received a letter from Mr. Barrie, apologizing for his absence, and that he would now read it. He never did. As a matter of fact, the letter had been got by the chairman just as he was leaving home. He had glanced at the signature, and gathered that the communication would be a reply to an invitation that he had sent to Mr. Barrie to be present at the meeting. On the plate form he was unable to decipher more than the words "Dear Mr. So-and-so" and "yours truly, J. M. Barrie." He passed the letter to the reporter, one of whom has it yet.

COLD STORAGE RATS.

Perfectly at Home in a Temperature Below the Freezing Point.

When cold storage was first introduced into this country the chilly chamber was thought to be absolutely free from rats and mice. The temperature was kept considerably below the freezing point, and in the cold surroundings rats and mice were unable to live.

In time, however, the cold stores packed away there proved too tempting for thieving rodents, and they began to make their way in cold and large rooms, at first paying a hurried call and as soon as they had taken a few nibbles making with a shiver out into warmer places.

Gradually, however, these visits were lengthened and became more frequent, not without considerable mortality among the rats, but in the end there grew into being what is known as the "cold storage rat." This animal has neither fur nor ears, both having been frozen for his ancestors, resulting in their total loss to the families of the first intrepid pirates of cold storage.

These ratless and tailless cold storage rats perfectly at home in a temperature below the zero mark. This, I think, is one of the most striking examples of how the animal kingdom in the wise economy of nature can adapt itself to the most severe surroundings.

SAVINGS BANKS.

They Were First Suggested in 1807 by Special Committee.

Primitive savings banks were founded at Hamburg in 1778 and at Berne in 1787, the idea having been suggested by Daniel Defoe in 1697. Francis Maseres, cousin of Lord Lyttelton, wrote the ratepayers of any English parish powers to receive and invest savings and to pay interest and deferred annities, but a bill to this effect failed to pass through parliament. The first practical attempt were on a small and tentative scale. A children's bank was started by Priscilla Wakefield at Tottenham in 1793.

The Rev. J. Smith of Andover, with Sir Stephen Lakyn, agreed in 1799 to receive small sums from his parishioners during the summer, to be returned with one-third bounty at Christmas, a liberal offer which was eagerly embraced.

The first "Parish" or "Savings Banks" has been given, however, to the Rev. H. Duncan of Ruthwell, Dumfriesshire, who founded the savings bank in 1810 on so successful a basis that in four years it possessed an accumulated fund of £1,050.

Acts to encourage savings banks in England and Ireland were passed in 1817 and were extended to Scotland in 1835.—Pearson's.

PROLIFIC INSECTS.

The Termites, or White Ants, Are the Greatest Egg Layers.

There is infinite variety in the number of eggs laid by different animals, the general rule being that those highest in the scale are the least prolific.

Among vertebrates fish are the most prolific. Trout and salmon average 1,000 eggs to every pound of weight. Buckland reckoned the roe of a half pound herring at 10,950, of a sole per pound turbot at 385,000 and of a thirty pound cod at 5,000,000, while the sturgeon has more than a third of its weight ready for the toothsome caviare.

Mollusks vary in their powers of reproduction from thirty to fifty at a time in snails, to the thousands of the whelk, while the spat of some oysters is 2,000,000. It is among insects that stupendous numbers appear, reaching a climax in the termites, or white ants. The queens of these are egg laying machines of the most astonishing fecundity. They bounce huge cylindrical packages, 2,000 times their usual size, attached to one end. This is said at the rate of sixty eggs a minute, or 80,000 a day, reaches probably in two years the enormous total of 50,000,000!

Winter Heathens Blossoms.

The legend regarding the origin of the Glastonbury thorn is well known—how Joseph of Arimathea, in visiting Britain on a preaching mission, arrived weary at Glastonbury, and while he rested his hawthorn walking stick was thrust into the ground; how it at once began to grow and sever after, so the legend says, the sacred cup did ma day. The thorn is simply an early flowering variety of our common hawthorn. That it does flower remarkably early is quite true, for a tree in the Royal Botanic gardens, Kew, opens its flowers between November and March. —London Knowledge.

A Tiny Dog.

The Mexican Rat Dog is so very minute in size as to appear almost incredible to those who have not actually seen the animal itself. A well known writer on natural history, speaking of this tiny member of the canine species, says that "it is precisely like the white woolen toy dogs which sit upon a pair of bellows and which pretend give forth a nondescript sound intended to do duty for a legitimate bark."

The Last Baby.

"What has become of your baby sister, Johnny?" asked a neighbor of her four-year-old son. "I haven't seen her for an hour or more."

"Oh, don't worry 'bout her, mamma," replied Johnny. "You'll find her when you sweep the house on Saturday.

A Blunderer.

"Of course I will be uglier some day," she whispered.

"Impossible," he replied gallantly. And he wonders that she sent his present back.

Things Japan Has Not.

In a book on Japan Douglas Sladen recounts the things that the Japanese have not. They have no bread, no beds, no boots and shoes, no trousers for the men, no petticoats for the women, little sounds alarming, but both sexes wear instead several dressing gowns, one over the other—the kimonos of commerce. In their houses they have no windows, no doors, no walls, no ceilings, no sheets of canvas, not even a washing stand, and the wardrobe is only a lot of boxes piled one on top of another. In the kitchens they have no range, no pots, no pans, no floor tiles, no fixed, no kitchen tables. But, then, they have no tables or chairs in the drawing room, and in the real native house the drawing room itself is only a lot of bedrooms with their walls taken down. There is no reason why you should find anything in a Japanese house except mats and a charcoal stove for warming your fingers and the teapot and committing suicide. Japan is full of cherry trees and plum trees, but they do without fruit. The cherries are used for the blossoms and the plums for hanging poems on.

Men and Animals in Water.

The animal has no advantage in any way in water over man, and yet the man drowns while the animal swims. The dog, the horse, the cow and even the cat all take to the water and are able to walk as they do when out of water. Throw a dog into the stream, and at once he begins to walk just as he does on dry land. Why should a man, woman or child act differently under the circumstances?

It seems strange that people have to be told to do what the animals do instinctively and instantly. Man's ignorance of so simple a thing as treading water is remarkable, and it is almost reason or excuse. There is a popular notion afoot that in some way the dog and other animals are lighter and swim over man in water. Nothing could be further from the truth. The advantage lies with man, provided he goes with a paddle formed hand and knows enough to use it, which something the animal rarely or never does.

Ancient Sports Among the Hebrews.

Pigeons as letter carriers, tradition tells us, were employed at the time when Jacob fled from Laban, and as medicines of communication between headquarters and the front in the days of the other side of the Jordan. At the time of the Talmud they were used in amusing games. The Talmud tells us that betting was indulged in at the pigeon play. The owner of the pigeon which reached the goal first was declared was the winner.

Another play connected with betting was the game of Kubya means a small pot (Arabic kubeta, small glass). The kubya was a little pot, whereinto dice were shaken and thrown upon the table. The dice were numbered as our modern ones are, and Talmudical games the Talmud was in arms, and their players were not allowed to appear as witnesses before the bar.

Columbus and the Gulf Stream.

It is curious to note in the history of the gulf stream how great its influence has been on the fortunes of the new world. Before the discovery of America strange woods and fruits were frequently found on the shores of Europe and off lying islands. Some of these were seen and examined by Columbus, and to his thoughtful mind they were confirming evidence of the fact that strange lands were not far to the westward. These woods were carried by the gulf stream and by the prevailing winds from the American continent, so that in part the gulf stream is responsible for the discovery of the new world.

Washing Of the Russian.

England is always glad to get another citizen, but sometimes she goes about it in a strange manner, according to the Springfield Republican. A sailor deserted from a Russian battleship and joined an English crew on a faraway island. He told them that he was tired of the rule of the czar and wanted to become an English citizen. They were at a loss how to naturalise him, but finally each one threw a bucket of water on him and so washed off the Russian.

A Tart Retort.

In arguing a case in an English court the late Frederic Rene Coudert, whose name was rapier-like, took occasion to deprecate the legal learning of Lord Chancellor Fitzgibbon, whom his opponent was quoting. The trial judge took timid exception to this. "I have read his opinions," he said, "and I often wished I knew as little as he did." "I wish you did!" retorted Coudert.

The Trouble.

"I wonder why Mr. Oldbow goes to see Miss Frocks after she has rejected him so emphatically," remarked Hollack.

"Just to pass away the time," suggested Tomdik.

"But the reason he was refused was that he had already passed away too much time."

Rather Dreadful.

"Does young Squiggles go much into society?"

"Not now. But he did when he first came here. He got into it about $2,700, thanks to his pleasing manners and his power of touch."

Paying For It.

"Before I was married," said the confirmed pessimist, "I spent my money on candy, and as the result I now have to spend it on my wife's dentist bills."

Nothing is politically right which is morally wrong.—O'Connell.

It's So Easy

It's easy enough for a salesman to have you slip into a suit, take you before a mirror, pat you on the back and say, "Did you ever see anything fit you so perfectly? Look at the way that collar hugs the neck; how well the shoulders set, etc."

PERHAPS:

But how about the wear of the fit? Depends upon the tailoring. What is to hold that collar in place or to keep those shoulders in shape? So don't go altogether by appearance; judge by what you know of the reputation of the store.

Ever since we have been in the clothing business, we have stood, we shall continue to stand back of every piece of clothing we sell, to the end.

If, when the seaon is over, you think you haven't had your money's worth of wear, come back and let us settle with you.

This is a safe store to tie to for clothes.

Test us on your spring suit.

TIMELY TOPICS.

It will be seen, by reference to the advertisement on our seventh page, that a public meeting will be held in the City Hall on Friday night to discuss the Ontario Electric Railway, which it is proposed to build from Brockville to Toronto. The promoters of the scheme will be present, with maps, plans, etc., to lay before the people of this city, and it would appear the part of wisdom for as many of our citizens as possible to attend and give a careful hearing to men who have given the matter much study. The promoters claim to have already spent $60,000 on the enterprise, so they must have considerable faith in it. Turn out and hear them; they may be able to open your eyes as to the possibilities of railway development for this section. At any rate the proposal is along the line of progress, and a careful consideration, pro and con., can do no one any harm and may do the city and district, in the long run, much good.

HOW SHOT IS MADE.

One Case In Which Man Caused Instant Death by Severe Fall Before.

"Did you know the method of making shot has never changed? No? Well, it's a fact," said the shot maker. "Hundreds of years ago shot was made in just the same way it is made now. Seems strange, doesn't it, that with all the improvements in other lines none has been made in this? Oh, yes, plenty of men have tried to find some better way, but they all have had to give it up and go back to the old shot tower. They wanted to get rid of the high tower, for that is the most expensive part of the plant.

"You know, shot is made by pouring a melted composition of lead and arsenic through a screen or from a big ladle with a serrated edge at the top of the tower and letting it fall into a tank of water. The drops of lead get perfectly round on their way down just like raindrops, and by the time they reach the water they are cold enough so they do not flatten out when they strike. Then the water finishes the cooling process.

"They have tried dropping the lead through a big tube, with a blast of cold air against the outside, and they have tried dropping it through glycerin, but none of these ways seems to work. Why can't they improve on it? Well, I suppose because the fellow who started making shot found the right way. He just following the course that Nature takes in making hail, and I don't suppose they can beat her at her own game."

India's Sacred Fires.

The sacred fires of India have not all been extinguished. The most ancient which still exists was first consecrated twelve centuries ago in commemoration of the voyage made by the Parsees when they emigrated from Persia to India. The fire is fed five times every two hours with sandalwood and other fragrant materials, combined with very dry fuel.

Wild Ballet in Sault.

Vancouver, B.C., March 23.—John Spittal, a famous hunter and trapper, was found dead in his shack near Terra Nova Cannery, on the Fraser River, with a bullet hole in his skull and other indications of foul play. The door of the shack was secured on the outside with a padlock. Spittal's two guns are missing, and there was a coat in the room that did not belong to the dead man. Spittal had been missing for the past five weeks. No one had, in view of the cabin being locked, thought until yesterday of searching it for the lost man.

...ver of Grape Training.

The grape bears its fruit on shoots of the season; which in turn usually arise from canes of the previous year's growth. Old wood on the grape is therefore of little value; hence the...development of so many systems of training which maintain only a single permanent framework, from the top of which the bearing canes are renewed each year. The so called "renewal," "high renewal," "Kniffen," "Munson," and various overhead systems of training all possess this feature in common.

Sense's Dog.

Unusual interest is centered in a case heard in the Dublin Police Court yesterday, in which the leading figure was a bulldog that formerly belonged to General Philip Botha and went through a good portion of the South African war. Ernest Warmingham, canteen manager for the contractors, was summoned for cruelty to the animal, which has been stationed for some time past with the Royal Irish Rifles at Richmond Barracks.

The bulldog, which now belongs to Color Sergeant Edwards, Royal Irish Rifles, was accommodated with a seat in the witness box, from which point he seemed to take a languid interest in the proceedings. He was dressed in a coat with green facings and wore several South African medals with clasps. The animal's record is an eventful one. During the Boer war he was captured by the Second Royal Irish Rifles Mounted Infantry, from Commandant Philip Botha's farm in the Doornberg, in September, 1900. From that time until the end of the war he trekked with the rifles' mounted force from Griqualand in the west to Basutoland in the east, and he still bears the scar of a wound received in action. Later he was with General French's column in Cape Colony. For his service the bulldog now wears the Queen's South African Medal with three clasps and the King's South African Medal with two clasps. Mr. Drury remarked, when the case was called, that this was the most distinguished dog in the country, as he had medals.—London Telegraph.

Staff College Commandant.

Col. Sir H. S. Rawlinson, Bart., C.B., who has been appointed Commandant of the Staff College, in succession to Col. H. S. G. Miles, C.B., who will shortly take over the command of the troops in Cape Colony, is a son of the translator of the tuneiform inscription, and has had an active military career. His first active service was in the Burmese war of 1885-7. In 1892 he exchanged from the King's Royal Rifles into the Coldstream Guards, and in 1898 was Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General to Lord Kitchener in the Soudan campaign, being present at the battles of Atbara and Khartoum. During the recent war in South Africa he took part in the defence of Ladysmith, and afterwards commanded a mobile column with much success, being mentioned no fewer than six times in despatches.

There is nothing equal to Minard's Liniment for Burns, Scalds, or any destroying wounds. No article of its kind has given such universal satisfaction, or has been so largely used for the relief and cure of Diphtheria, Croup, Colds, Coughs, Sore Throat, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Toothache, Earache, Sciatica, Lumbago, Backache, Pleurisy, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Chilblains, Frost Bites, Chapped Hands, Caked Breast, Scratches, Sore Nipples, Chafing, Stings of Insects, Bites of Animals, Cramps, Pains and Aches of all kinds. Its price (25 cents) places it within the reach of all, and it is worth its weight in gold to any family. Minard's Liniment is for sale everywhere.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles, there is no preparation of medicines can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all pressure, and leaves the diseased parts. It immediately loosens the most distressing cough, and by promoting expectoration, relieves the mucous which chokes up the air cells and makes difficulty in breathing. It thereby gives relief to that depressing feeling often experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily acts upon the allays all irritation, and hoarseness in the throat and bronchial tubes, and restores them to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. Mothers, guard the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and sleepless nights, by procuring a bottle of "Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup" at once. Whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or is threatened with croup, use according to directions.

On occasion of coughs, what one needs is as difficult as getting it. Will positively cure sick headache in 20 minutes. Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Little Liver Pills. This is not talk, but truth. Can be had for a small vertisement. Small pill, small dose, small price.

No prayer ever failed to be heard because it was too short.

The Thomas Organ Co., Ltd., Woodstock—Men who follow sedentary occupations, and especially those who work in close air and exercise, are most prone to disorders of the liver, more frequently than those who lead active, outdoor lives. Burdock Blood Bitters is a tonic, aids the Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most effective medicine in the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and do their work thoroughly. When considering their excellence.

Never be in a hurry in doing little because you can't do much.

A firm foundation—Headaches. — Bilious headache, to which women are more subject than men, originates in the same subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach requires food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from the bile which is unnecessarily secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills correct the disordered liver, and in neutralizing the effects of the bilious headache, one of these pills is sure on the nerves which cause the headache. Try them.

Dr. Low's Worm Syrup represents but 18 hours of human labor.

Pill by pill—Parmelee's Vegetable Remedy for sick headache. Carter's Little Liver Pills are a positive cure for those from people who have used them for years. Don't forget this.

If you have a good business, it is always better to buy where you are. The Bell Piano & Organ Co., Limited, Properties of IRON, combined with Dandelion and other vegetable medicines, are found in Carter's Iron Pills, a wonderful blood purifier, nerve and body tonic, and improves the blood and complexion.

When one gets hopping mad his temper soon gets up and walks off.

GENTLEMEN,—I WAS WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER CALLED "A WRECK" WHEN HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, About five years ago I was a physical wreck, troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered terribly from Sick Headache. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but got no relief. I was continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Mother Seigel & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the fourth bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured; and as a year has elapsed since then I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. I am glad to say that this had not occurred, but I heartily recommend Mother Seigel & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery believing that the perfect use of it will cure any one. (Signed) T. H. MOINTEE.

The biggest brave lies are always make the best cheat.

Dr. Low's Worm Syrup.—Mr. John Anderson, Kimloss, writes: "I ventyre to say that Dr. Low's Worm Syrup is the greatest benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. Dr. Low's Worm Syrup is a safe, sure and effectual remedy. Also four of great virtue in cases of scrofula or bronchial affections and consumption.

made her proud soul quiver in revolt, notwithstanding the patience with which she had humbled herself. With red cheeks and glistening eyes she surveyed the man who had made her suffer so, and instantly every other man there suffered with her; everything possible Durbin, whose heart was never his strong point. But our hearts were moved, our reason were not convinced, as was generally shown, when, with a bow of dismissal, the coroner released her, and she passed back to her seat.

What would their verdict be? There were present two persons who affected to believe that it would be one of suicide occasioned by dementia. These were Mr. Tuttle and Dr. Low, the latter, who, now that the critical period had passed, looked pale and unsteady, boldly in their seats and met the glances of judge and upon them with dignity, if not with the assurance of complete innocence. But from the countenances with which they greeted each other's eyes and the almost audible sighs of relief which escaped from both faces, it was visible to all that they regarded their cause as a common one, and that the link which they denied, as having existed between them, was that of the dead youth, had in some way been suspected, and, more especially as they now unwittingly looked with the same eyes, breathed with the same breath, and were united themselves responsive to the same fluctuations of fear and joy.

The celerity with which that joy was followed by pain was a shock to us all. It had been a quiet body, offering but little assistance to the coroner in his task of proving that it fell to these men to act, the prostrate figure of Tuttle did so astonishing. In a half-hour they returned from the room into which they had adjourned, and the foreman gave warning that he was prepared to render a verdict.

Mr. Jeffry and Miss Tuttle both clenched their hands, and then Miss Tuttle pulled down her veil.

"We find," he said, in solemn formula, "that Veronica Moore Jeffry, who on the night of May eleventh was discovered by us dead on the floor of her own unoccupied house in Westwick Avenue, came to her death by means of a bullet, shot from a pistol connected with her wrist by a length of white satin ribbon.

"That the first conclusion of suicide is not supported by the facts:

"And that attempt should be made to identify the hand that fired this pistol."

It was as near an accusation of Miss Tuttle as was possible without pronouncing her name. A group passed through the assemblage, and Mr. Jeffry, bounding to his feet, showed an inclination to shout aloud in his violent indignation. But Miss Tuttle, turning back with a look that went with a commanding gesture and held him in his seat again.

It was both a majestic and an utterly incongruous movement on her part, giving to the close of these remarkable proceedings a dramatic climax that left the jury heating fed, I am bound to say, all tongues wagging till the room cleared.

CHAPTER XVI.

Had the control of affairs been mine at this moment I am quite certain that I should have had much difficult to deny these two the short interview for which they appeared so grave and which would have been to them such an undertaking as cannot but have been more than mine was in charge, and the district attorney, as distressed and grieved as he had ever fallen, was inexorable. Miss Tuttle had exacted this respect, with finality ness, even, but she was not allowed any communication with her betrothed save in the presence of witnesses. "Good afternoon" incident upon their separation. Also, I was forced to demand his lips to any such trite commonplace, and with a shake of the head he made it. But what in the nature of human woe could impose upon him? Jeffry is a machine—a reliable and useful machine, no doubt, yet for all it is still a simple contrivance of cogs and wheels; while I—well, I hope I am not considered more than that; or why was I a changed man toward her from the moment I saw her in the mortuary and did this accused woman's good-by to me? Surely I no longer believed in her guilt. I went about my business with tumult in my breast, and felt at having helped the coroner in the inquiry, and brought about what looked to me now like a cruel and unwarranted result.

That it should be given to Durbin to hold such surveillance over her as her doubtful position demanded added greatly to my discomfort. But I was enabled to keep my lips firmly shut on any expression of secret jealousy or displeasure; and this was fortunate, as otherwise I might have failed to obtain the chance of aiding her later on, in other and deeper matters.

Meanwhile, and before any of us had left this room, one fact had become apparent. Mr. Jeffry was not going to volunteer any fresh statement in face of the distinct disapproval of his sister-in-law. As his eye fell upon the district attorney, who had lingered near, possibly in the hope of getting something more from this depressed and almost irresponsible man, he made one remark, but it was an automatic one, calculated to produce but little effect in the discriminating ears of this experienced official.

"I do not believe that my wife was murdered." It was a dull voice. It was a wicked verdict. My wife killed herself. Wasn't the pistol found in her hand?"

Either from preoccupation or a dazed condition of mind, he seemed to forget that Miss Tuttle had owned to tying on this pistol and that nothing had been said went to prove that this was done before and not after the fatal shot was delivered in the Moore house library. I thought, I understood him and was certain that I sympathized with his condition; but in the ears of those less favorably disposed toward him, his statements had lost force and would be of little weight.

Meanwhile a fact which all had noted and counted on was communicated to my mind and caused me to ask a brother officer who was walking out behind the jury if the valet of Mr. Moore's absence from an inquiry concerning his late master's death to all members of this family.

The fellow looked at me with surprise.

"Old Dave has lost none of his peculiarities in walking into his former home. Tells me he is very nervy. Didn't you know that? He will not be nothing short of a dog at the end of his pilgrimage to that spot on the twenty-fourth of May. Quite as astonishing. In a half-hour they returned from the room into which they had adjourned, and the foreman gave warning that he was prepared to render a verdict.

Mr. Jeffry and Miss Tuttle both clenched their hands, and then Miss Tuttle pulled down her veil.

ing shouting: "Bully for you." Dave, Dave! Well come again next year, not for twenty-five but fifties."

"I will make it dollars if I only live so long," he muttered. And stepping near to the window he gave Lion I had put to him, he grandly remarked:

"I am going straight into town. Can I do anything for you?"

"Nothing. I thought you might like to know what awaits you there. The city is full of comments on the coroner's jury in the Jeffrey-Moore case has just brought in a verdict to the effect that suicide had been proved. Naturally, this is equivalent to one of murder."

"Ah!" he ejaculated, slightly taken aback for one so invariably impassive.

"And to whom is the guilt of this crime ascribed?" he demanded, after a moment's pause.

"That was mention of no name; but the opprobrium naturally falls on Miss Tuttle."

"Miss Tuttle?"

"Since Mr. Jeffry is proved to have been too far away at the time to have fired that shot, while she—"

"I am following you—"

"Was in the same house—at the door of the library in fact—and heard the pistol shot, and, if she did not discharge it herself—which some believe, really the only question at issue—was prevented by her own presence of mind from doing so."

"I see," was mention of no name; but the opprobrium naturally falls on Miss Tuttle."

"Miss Tuttle?"

"Since Mr. Jeffry is proved to have been too far away at the time to have fired that shot, while she—"

"I am following you—"

"Was in the same house—at the door of the library in fact—and heard the pistol shot, and, if she did not discharge it herself—which some believe, really the only question at issue—was prevented by her own presence of mind from doing so."

"Ah, probably."

"You would have been a cool one, eh?"

"And a welcome one, eh?"

I hardly thought he would have taken me up so literally. He seized out the fact. Nevertheless he seized on the opportunity. Evidently he thought he had gained and added, initially, more or rather without any display of feeling.

Miss Tuttle likes me even less than Jeffry does, I am sure. Indeed, she would have accepted, certainly would have believed, the suicide sentence in her rounds. But of one thing I was sure, and that was Jeffry's favor. To prove her innocent would once I considered the cause of, if not the guilty party to, the murderer's murder, now became my dream by night and my constant theme by day. Though I seemed to have no sympathizer in these efforts, I was being helped against her will by Jeffry openly in the city and secretly in the house.

"Fine turnout?" he interrogatively remarked.

I assented with all the surprise with all the wonder even—which his sublime egotism seemed to invite.

"Yes," he went on, "Cesar could raise in the time I allotted him. Why? I really forget. Suppose we shall see, we shall see."

His foot was on the carriage-step. He looked back once west. The sun was almost down but not, quite. "Have you any special interest in me?" he asked, lingering with what, under other circumstances, I should conscientiously till the last ray of direct sunlight had disappeared.

I had left Jeffry's alibi been less complete he could not have stood up against the suspicions which now ran riot. Such a mistake as the possibility of shifting the actual crime back to the shoulders of this most honest and trustworthy a man as Tallman, the coachman, would be the last to watch fixed the moment of her death as accurately as was supposed—and I rather hoped it was—I should be out in this regard—he could not by any possibility transit from Moore to Washington have reached Waverly Avenue in time to fire that shot. The minutes of the mortuary were closed at sundown; sundown took place that day at 4:56; one minute more added to the distance into town is considerable. Cesar could run a mile in three. So his name failed to be publicly broached in connection with the murder, and Miss Tuttle could not be forgotten, as she would have been had my name as his hand in the deed which Jeffry and Dennis believed to be done. But this I would not believe. I preferred to accept the statement that I had had a visitor at my front window all that evening, and watched with uninterrupted fidelity the door through which so many are said to have passed between sunset and midnight—something which I did not do, as I have plainly stated on oath—nor could I have been induced to see what went on in the black interior of the house by exterior light barely discernible at night across the street.

"Then you can not aid her?" I asked.

The Joy of Living

Life to the normal healthy, Canadian boy or girl should be a continual joy. It is not, however, a continuous thing wrong. There is lack of proper development, consequently the blood is thin, the nerves are weak, and the muscles soft and flabby, vitality low and the capacity for enjoying life at a low ebb. Pale girls, nervous girls, and constant danger of attack from Consumption, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, La Grippe and all kinds of Throat Troubles. WHO a light bound be heaped into the carriage. As he took his seat he politely remarked:

"I should be glad to, since, though not a Moore, she is near enough the family to affect its honor. But on having even seen her enter the house I was not testify in any way in regard to her. Horse, Caesar, and drive quickly. I do not thrive under these fogs of March."

And leaning back, with an inexpressible air of contentment—I call it so, still, his epaulets and the prospect of an indefinite enjoyment of the same, the last representative of the great Moore family was quietly driven away.

CHAPTER XVII.

I was far from being good company that night. I knew this without being told. My mind was busy. I was too full of regrets and plans, reasonings and counter reasonings. In my eyes Miss Tuttle had suddenly become innocent; consequently the victim. But a victim to what? To some exaggerated sense of duty? To love? To fear? To duty? That was the question, to answer which affluxed I would, in my present excitement, have been ready to sacrifice a month's pay.

I was powerless, not only by the adoration and sympathy which all my instincts led me to feel for a woman caught in such a deadly snare of circumstantial evidence, but by the conviction that Durbin, whose present sleek complacency was more offensive to me than the open hostility of a week ago, believed her to be a guilty woman, and that by my right I had my eye. This alone would have influenced me to keep silent, however, were we never ran along together and in a case where any division of opinion was possible, always found ourselves, consciously or unconsciously, in opposition. But I did not really dislike Durbin, who is a very fine fellow. I only thought him capable of any favor which rewarded it.

I know that I have some very nasty failings and I do not like to hide concerning them. My desire is to represent myself as I am, and I am certain that it was not entirely owing to disinterested motives that I no took my self-respect in Miss Tuttle's favor. To prove her innocent would once I considered the cause of, if not the guilty party to, the murderer's murder, now became my dream by night and my constant theme by day. Though I seemed to have no sympathizer in these efforts, I was being helped against her will by Jeffry openly in the city and secretly in the house.

THE BEST COW.

Some Varieties of the Bovine and Various Other of Profitable Qualities.

We have heard persons say that "a cow is a cow, and it is of no use to pay those fancy prices for something that folks say is a little extra." Some give a little more for one than others, but, then, may be they eat more than the others." This is true enough, but we always found that the cow that would eat the most and digest her food was the best cow, says the American Cultivator. She will there furnish the food into milk, butter or beef, and when we have this, she has been adapted to do we knew the most profitable way to farm her. We are soon convinced us of the folly and wastefulness of feeding all the cows in a herd the same rations, and showed the necessity of the feeding being done by one who knew something of the needs of each animal.

Considering the cattle at the barn is not boy's work, but one that needs all the experience and good judgment that the chairman has, and more than we think some of them have. But the difference in the cows was well shown by the records furnished to the Illinois Experiment Station, as published in a late bulletin. There were eight herds, numbering 144 cows, and the records were compiled for a year. While some herds gave a good profit for the year's work, others gave but little, and one herd was kept at a loss. In making these statements, by no means were the feeds paid for the cow's food while dry, and the allowance for the dry three weeks $8.25; one month $2.50. Strictly cash in advance.

period of the cow's life was not considered. The cows that yielded the most product gave 8,949 pounds of milk, and made 472 pounds of butter. The poorest cow produced 1,482 pounds of milk, 82 pounds of butter, and the average production for all the herds was 4,721 pounds of milk, 249 per cent. of fat, 173 pounds of butter-fat, and 208 pounds of butter. The most profitable cow gave a net profit of $57.22, and the poorest cow has kept at a loss of $17.35. The average net profit was $9.96 per cow. This we do not think that these were poor cows in other States as in Illinois, and probably of good ones, and the cow that will make 472 pounds of butter in a year and give a profit of $57.22, and the one that gives but little over 700 quarts of milk, and makes but 66 pounds of butter at a cost for food amounting $17.35 more than the butter will sell for, are certainly different in the same class. The first is worth a fancy price, for she gives a profit equal to the interest of $1,000 or $1,100 for the year. The other is about 34 cents a week out of his pocket during the year, and if he has some one to take her during the 6 per cent. to take her away, he would be better off, because he would not have to take care of her.

FAT ON A FOWL.

It Is Not So Good a Thing as Some Housekeepers Think.

"When I see men or women looking for nothing but fat on a fowl," said a marketman, "I don't envy them their dinner. There is a layer of fat underneath the skin when poultry is unduly fattened, and in the cooking this overfed tissue saturates the meat, and delicate stomachs have a hard task. That is why lots of people can't eat ducks and geese at all. These overfattened fowls are in reality more expensive and less easily digested, there being much less lean meat in proportion to the fat. Most of my customers are now willing to pay what a good turkey is worth, understanding the difference. What is the difference? Why, there are a few rules that must be observed. For at least six days before killing barnyard fowls must be cooped, not huddled, have a good, clean space and be well fed on corn for at least five days. Then for twenty-four hours before killing they should be fed on skimmed milk or soft boiled rice. The night before the killing the birds must have plenty of water, but no food, which leaves the crop empty, the intestines clean, the dark meat quite light, and gives a flavor as different as possible from the offensive flavor that is likely to impregnate the common fowl killed in the common way. The flesh of all animals is flavored by their food. This accounts for the delicious flavor of the canvasback and redhead ducks. Both eat of the wild celery at the water's edge, the former taking the roots, the latter the tops."

Another Interpretation.

Miss Budd—Didn't I overhear Mr. Shalter remark to you that I was "a pretty young lady?" Miss Chellus—Yes, and you really are pretty young, you know, but you'll outgrow that, of course.

The Patient's Excuse.

Physician—I told you to come three times a week. Why haven't you been here for five weeks? Patient—Because I haven't been feeling well enough.

The Way of It.

Green—You are the silliest girl I ever saw. I can't see how you ever got to be as intimate as you were. Does he owe you money? Brown—No indeed; but he wants to.

Getting Warmer.

In England Roman Catholic priests die at the rate of 18 per 1,000 per year; Protestant clergymen, 11 per 1,000; domestic servants, 8 per 1,000; lawyers, 16 per 1,000; coachmen, 26 per 1,000; soldiers die off at the rate of 5 per 1,000 under normal conditions, while on the battlefield, taken from a record of the past twenty years, death is only at the rate of 15 per 1,000 per year.

YULETIDE IN SERVIA.

The Poor Save For Months to Buy Their Christmas Pig.

In Servia they keep Christmas eve in a somewhat peculiar way. The father and the family go into the wood and cuts down a straight young oak, choosing the most perfect that he can find. He brings it in, saying, "Good evening and a happy Christmas," to which those present reply, "May God grant both to thee and thy children have riches and honor." Then they throw over the trunk grains of corn. Presently the young tree is planted near the coals, where it remains until Christmas morning, which brother salute by repeated firings of a pistol.

The national dish in Servia is pork. The poorest family in Servia will pinch themselves all through the year so as to have money enough to buy a pig at Christmas. Skewered to a long piece of wood, the pig is turned over a blazing fire until cooked, the greasy juice basting the process with increasing interest. After dinner stories are told and songs sung. The master, who is the person of an honored guest, is present to receive instead of to give presents, departs after the feast, decorated with a long ring of cakes around his neck and laden with such gifts as his friends can bestow.

A French Deputy's Pay.

A French deputy receives a salary of 9,000 francs ($1,800). He also receives free railway transportation and free luncheons at the bar of the Palais Bourbon. Every deputy on the average spends more time than he does in the Salle des Seances. Some are accused of having all their meals at the free lunch counter. A deputy even gets, at the restaurant, a special brand of cigars which is called "cigare de deputes." With these cigars he treats his influential constituents. In spite of all these privileges, there have been many complaints that, unless he has a large personal income, he only cannot live decently. Therefore many members of parliament when they are not well to do look around to provide for the indemnity of their pay by contributing to newspapers or pleading in the courts.—Century.

Look Higher.

Never cultivate accord or court rate folk except for artistic purposes. Meet them, if you must, but keep them where you can. You need expect nothing from them that they can conscientiously withhold, for they are after your money while keeping a strict and jealous watch upon their own. All you can get from them is material, never any spiritual, intellectual, wise, sane or moral or helpful messages.

Marriage in the Sea of Green.

In Kaso, one of the most southern islands of Greece, the parents upon both sides take upon themselves all the responsibilities of courtship and marriage. Courtship, as we understand it, is not in any way permitted to the betrothed couple. No meetings or walks or tete-a-tetes are allowed. Such a course would be deemed highly reprehensible, and all wooing, if there be any, must take place in the presence of the elders. But there is no great time for repining at these decrees of custom, for the marriage follows the offer as quickly as may be.

A Precaution.

A farmer wrote to his lawyer as follows: "Will you please tell me where you learned to write? I have a boy I wish to send to school, and I am afraid I may fall upon the same school that you went to."

"The" O'Gorman Mahon.

The last of the Irish duelists, O'Gorman Mahon, was indignant at the number of his colleagues in the Irish party who claimed the prefix and by way of ridiculing their pretensions to chieftainship assured the house there were only three personages properly entitled to it—the pope, the devil and the O'Gorman Mahon. The O'Conor Don, the McDermott, The O'Donoghue, The Mc-Gillycuddy of the Reeks, The O'Grady and The O'Sullivan are regarded as entitled to the distinction as heads of old Irish families, clans or septs. There are also some in Scotland, notably "The McNab," whose ancestor had a boat of his own at the time of the flood, being too proud to accept the hospitality of Noah.

Hot Water.

Cold blooded people, who have little thirst, will do well to make a business of drinking a certain amount of hot water every day throughout the winter season. It lessens the tendency to take cold, improves the circulation and benefits coughs and insomnia.

Before going to bed is a very good time for this practice, as it warms up and relaxes the system, thus preparing the way for a good night's sleep.

Many cases of indigestion, headache, neuralgia, cold hands and feet, can be cured in half an hour by drinking slowly one or two pints of water so hot that it almost burns the throat.—Medical Brief.

In the old days when England by the towns of Windsor, Hartford and Wethersfield in Connecticut (1762) may be found the following on tobacco and swearing:

"Forasmuch as it is observed that many abuses are crept in and committed by the frequent taking of tobacco, it is ordered by the authority of this court that no person under the age of twenty-one years nor any other that hath not already accustomed himself to the use thereof shall take any tobacco until he hath brought a certificate under the hands of some one who are approved for knowledge and skill in physicke that it may be useful to him and also that he hath received a license from the courts for the same.

"And for the regulating of those who either by their former taking it have, or else ignorantly through want of experience to them or upon due advice are persuaded to the use thereof, it is ordered that no man within this colony after the publication hereof shall take any tobacco publicquely in the streets, highways or any barnyards or upon training days, in any open places, under the penalty of sixpence for each offense against this order in any of the particulars thereof, to bee paid without abatteinge, upon conviction by the testimony of one witness—that is, without just exception—before any one magistrate.

"And the constables in the several towns are required to make presentment to each particular court next after as they do understand and can convict to be transgressors of this order."

HINTS FOR BRIDEGROOMS.

Plenty of Advice For Brides, but Not Much For the Men.

A thoughtful young man of Washington was heard to declare the other day the fact that, while there was no shortage of "don't" and "do" for the bride to-be, the bridegroom must shift for himself.

"There is absolutely nothing to guide a man but his own judgment, and it is in't fair," he said. "From the time a girl is old enough to detect sound she is understood to be preparing or having things done properly at a wedding, but the bridegroom or groom is only something necessary to complete the picture. Nothing short of inspiration can put that to a conformity, though a marriage ceremony gracefully.

"In order to impress the bride and spectators that he is entirely at home in it he appears with a sort of frozen grin on his face that you expect to melt at any moment and run down his collar. If he is too frightened to respond to the usual request of bridal party friends will whisper that 'it was plainly evident he was unwilling from the start.' Again, if he appears to be a hardstern voice another bunch in another direction of the church will fiddle together and express how glad they are that they are not marrying him, while the attitude of the usher is that of consigning away their life and all worth living for. And, for one, think it high time that somebody came to the rescue on how to behave, that we men may appear unembarrassed in being married without being ridiculous."

Ancient Jewelers' Association.

Birmingham jewelers have been known in the middle of the fifteenth century. When Charles II. brought with him to England the French fashion of wearing metallic ornaments Birmingham at once took the lead in supplying them, and the city then commenced a career of prosperity which has never save for brief periods ever been abated. Even Southey, who could scarcely find sufficiently censorious language to describe Birmingham, was forced at last to accord every other place in the world for wealth combined with genius, bracelets, buttons, buckles and snuffboxes. Thought, he said, "they were dearly purchased at the expense of health and morality."—London Chronicle.

Engineering Project.

The Engineering Record describes an irrigation project of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, by which it praises as a commendable piece of private enterprise. The railroad company is preparing to reclaim a tract of land east of Calgary, 3,000 miles long by 50 miles wide, west direction and 60 miles wide, intersected by the main line of the road. For the greater part of three years a large engineering corps has been working on preliminary surveys of the canals and the lands to be irrigated by them, as a result of which work the company's superintendent of irrigation expects that about 1,500,000 acres, about half of which lands are, can be irrigated at an ultimate cost of between four and five million dollars.

Psychological Milk.

A curious fact in the psychology of cows is communicated to the Lancet by the staff of the Technical College, at Chelmsford, England. Cow-attendant has taught these experts that the cow is a full of nervous sensibility and given to likes and dislikes. To a psychotic milker, who is in harmony with her, she will yield much more milk than to a brutal, stolid, or unsympathetic milker. For instance, one Chelmsford milky mother will give 20 pints of milk, while fifteen pints of milk, while a sagacious intelligent hand she afforded only fifteen. Our farmers do not give time enough to cow-psychology. The more psychology the more milk.—Everybody's Magazine.

An Agricultural truism.

THE THOUGHTS OF GOD.

Sir William Ramsay's High Ideal for the Students.

It is often said that in these days science is becoming materialistic. A message from a recent lecture by Sir Wm. Ramsay, the great chemist, on radium, shows that this is certainly not true of this distinguished investigator. Sir William in closing said: "I am not ashamed to say that experimenting with radium as a possible cure for cancer is my chief work on the human body. I am not an authority on that subject, but I am told that in certain cases of epithelioma—a very terrible disease—the effect of the rays of radium has been to produce a cure. People ask me whether cancer is curable. I suppose I am right in saying that it has not been cured, but I am told by great authorities that within the last few months by one of the professors at the Royal College of Surgeons. Putting aside the absolute use to human needs of radium, might I suggest that one of the most important uses is with regard to the objects around us? If we can explain them and their method of working, we shall have made great advances. We scientific men have faith in the laws of nature and the constancy of its action. We have hope that we shall live to discover much yet and gain a greater insight into thinking the thoughts of God. I have no sympathy with anything but the apostle names another important virtue, charity, and I think you will agree with me that charity is the exercise of faith and hope is in science, still more important. It is the exercise of charity."

Herbert Spencer's Bete Noir.

Details have been published of the will of the late Mr. Herbert Spencer. Revoking a former will, it is dated Jan. 19, 1900, and has attached a codicil dated the following April. The new document, says The Sussex Daily News, runs to 12 pages. It is equivalent in length to about three newspaper columns. The will contains the most precise and detailed directions for the disposal of the testator's property, his literary executors, and begins with elaborate instructions for the disposal of his remains:

In the codicil Mr. Spencer has set forth his objections to the metric system in the following provision:

"If, and at any time within 7 years after my death, a bill shall be introduced into Parliament for the compulsory adoption of the metric system of weights and measures, I desire that my executors shall publish 'Against the Metric System,' shall be printed from the stereotype plates which were cast in February, 1901, and are now in the custody of Messrs. Harrison & Sons, with such corrections as are indicated in a copy of the pamphlet which I have deposited in my safe, and that such reprinted pamphlet shall be distributed gratis, and at the expense of my estate, among members of both Houses of Parliament, and shall be put on sale by my publishers at a nominal price."

HOMES OF HEALING.

The History of Hospitals Begins With the First Century.

The temple at Epidaurus was founded by Antonius Flus at the end of the first century B. C. in honor of Esculapius, Homer's blameless physician. Beyond the sacred inclosure was a building open for all sorts of the sick and dying, which Strabo describes as a place renowned for the cure of all kinds of diseases, and full of tablets containing votive tablets descriptive of cures.

About 330 A. D. a hospital was founded by Valens and richly endowed by Basil, and was soon followed by others by Fabiola, a wealthy Roman widow, for the reception of the sick poor.

Basil is said by Sozomen to have presbyter, to have built a large hospital for lepers who were collected for the purpose. The Hotel Dieu in Paris, founded in the seventh century, and the famous 1080 St. Cantlemo, archbishop of Canterbury, were both connected with monastic establishments. Bartholomew's hospital, and St. Thomas', 1553, are the oldest hospitals in London and were both originally religious foundations.

Omens In Tea.

When the tea is made and the lid of the teapot is forgotten for a minute or two it is a sure sign that some one will drop in for the meal. Two spoons put across the bowl of the spoon at meal or a bachelor denote that he or she will be married within a year. Putting the spoon in your tea before you serve it will bring you love troubles. A tea stalk floating in a girl's teacup is a "beau." Stir your tea with a silver spoon and then hold the spoon upright in the center. If the "spoon" be attracted toward the spoon and cling to it a gentleman visitor may be expected some time that evening. If, however, the "beau" goes to the side of the cup the visitor will not come that day.

All In the Expression.

Hamfatte—When I asked Brown how he liked my Othello he said it was all in the expression.

Hamlette—Yes; he told me the same thing, only he expressed it differently.

Hamfatte—How's that?

Hamlette—Well, when I asked him how he liked it he said he certainly got all he wanted of it.

Her Experience.

Professor—In China criminals are often sentenced to be kept awake until insanity and death result. Now, how do you suppose they keep them from falling asleep? Little Girl (oldest in a small family)—I expect they give 'em a baby to take care of.

No Such Thing As Luck

In Successful Decorating

Successful decoration must be the outcome of study—of thought rather than of mere chance.

In the chance room there will surely be something wrong.

Possibly the color. Perchance Drawing — Likely both.

Whether Chamber, Drawing Room, Living Room, Library or Den, the room must be treated with thought of surroundings, of furniture of complexion, of lighting, of size.

The environment of a room with North or East exposure must not be blue, while either West or Southern exposure may stand those advantages.

How about Crimsons, Greens and Browns—who may these colors be sad—just ask our decorator, if he be worthy the name he and tell you.

We solicit your test of our ability on this or other decorative subjects.

THE W. W. CHOWN Company, Limited.

BADE GOOD-BYE TO REV. M. W. MACLEAN

OFFICERS OF FIFTEENTH TENDER HIM A PARTING PRESENTATION.

(For over 20 years Rev. M. W. Maclean has been the honored Chaplain of the Fifteenth Regiment and the officers of the corps last evening, in a tangible manner expressed their appreciation of his valued services by making him a presentation, prior to his leaving the city. The gathering took place at the regimental quarters, and was attended by the officers generally and the two retired Lieut.-Cols. S. S. Leslie and W. N. Ponton.

Col. Hallwell presided, and, after the company had partaken of the light refreshments provided, stated the object of the gathering, namely to say good-bye for the present to the Chaplain. He said that Rev. Mr. Maclean's leaving was a distinct loss to the regiment. He had been for many years the right arm of the Regiment, true to the core in times of adversity as well as in prosperity. His influence for good had been felt by all. Whatever good there was in the Regiment was due more to the Chaplain than any other officer. He was not what some would call a tin plate officer, but in every sense of the word was a true and high-toned officer. In finishing his remarks the commanding officer proposed the health of the Chaplain, which was enthusiastically received by the company, who sang "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

The Chaplain, in replying, made an excellent address, and spoke some timely advice. He said that for over 20 years he had been Chaplain and he felt it an honor to belong to the Regiment. He had been with them at home and abroad, and had always been proud of their showing. It was, in his estimation, one of the best Regiments in Ontario. One thing he could compliment them upon was that the Regiment was noted for sobriety, and this was especially the case when they had gone away from the city. The rank and file were a fine class of men and long may they continue to be so. There was a sadness in parting, but he hoped some day to return, and one of the first places he would visit would be the Regiment's quarters. He appreciated the kind words said by the Commanding Officer. He would pray that God would bless the Regiment and that it would be in the future prosper. One of the most pleasing recollections he would have in the future would be the many pleasant hours he had spent with the Fifteenth Regiment.

After addresses had been given by Colts. Leslie and Ponton, to both of whom referred in complimentary terms, the Chaplain was addressed regret at his departure. Col. Hallwell, on behalf of the officers, presented the Chaplain with a handsome military trunk. Upon the inside of the trunk was the following inscription:

"Presented to Rev. M. W. Maclean, by the officers of the 15th Argyll Light Infantry, as a token of their regard and esteem for him as Chaplain of the Regiment 22 years."

The Rev. gentleman made a suitable and feeling reply.

During the course of the evening brief addresses were also given by Mrs. Sutherland, Captain Morden, acting Adjutant, Quarter Master S. W. Ferguson, Captain Barrager, Surgeon Goldsmith, Captain Counsell and Lieut. Hunter, pay assistant.

Letters of regret at not being able to be present were read from Major Pope and Paymaster E. Donald.

The addresses were interspersed with suitable Harry songs by Lieut. J. Hayes, Messrs. V. Doyle and H. Hunter, and Miss Annie Carrington presided at the piano and gave three instrumental selections, one being that of Captain Barrager.

The gathering was brought to a close at a late hour by the singing of "Auld Lang Syne" and the National Anthem.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"MORE THAN QUEEN" TO-NIGHT.

Julia Arthur's magnificent production of Sardou Bernard's play "More Than Queen" will be the attraction at the Carman Opera House to-night. Charles Frederic Nerdlinger and Charles Henry Malcolm made the adaptation and translation, and that they did their work well is borne out by the long popularity enjoyed by the piece. Among the well known number, "More Than Queen" deals with certain episodes in the lives of Napoleon and Josephine, but these episodes are treated in an entirely new and original fashion. The stage has been somewhat enriched by presentments of the life and doings of the "Little Corporal," but Bergerat gave to the drama a vivid picture of the illustrious character which will live for many years. Mr. Wm. Humphrey will play the part of Napoleon, which he "created" when the piece was originally produced.

CATARRH IS CERTAINLY CURABLE.

In fact it is one of the most curable diseases if fragrant healing Catarrhozone is used, no matter how long you have suffered with catarrh, you can be perfectly cured by inhaling the antiseptic vapor of Catarrhozone, which strikes at the foundation of the trouble and establishes such a healthy condition in the system that catarrhal germs simply can't exist. "I suffered from catarrh of the nose and throat for years," writes S. H. Downie, of Flatinville. "My nostrils were always stuffed up and I had a most disagreeable, hacking cough. Catarrhozone cured me completely." Catarrhozone never fails. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25 cents.

DIED IN NEW MEXICO.

FORMER RESIDENT OF THIS CITY, WITH HER MOTHER, JOINS THE MAJORITY.

Mrs. Richard Allen died at Silver City, New Mexico, on Monday last, aged 35 years. The deceased, whose maiden name was Miss Maggie Belair, was for some time a resident of this city, and was widely known and much esteemed. She was a devout member of the Roman Catholic Church. A husband survives. A number of sisters and brothers also survive, among the sisters being Mrs. Wm. Patterson, of this city. The remains of the deceased also received word this morning that Mrs. M. Belair, the mother of Mrs. Allen, had died yesterday at the same place. She was a lady advanced in years. A large family survives.

Resolution of Condolence

At a recent meeting of Benjamin D. O. L., this city, the following resolution of condolence was passed:

Whereas, Our Brother Lodge No. 274 would take this, their first opportunity of placing on record their appreciation of the long and faithful services of our late Brother John Gibson with our lodge, and as a new true tie of fraternity couples of our beloved order and inculcated by us, and prospect the beauties of a genuine Christian life, We therefore bow to his bereaved widow and family our sincere condolence in this dispensation of Divine Providence.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

A Bit of Curran's Wit.

An Irishman loves a joke so well that he keeps the memory of a good one always green. In a recent flood reflections by an old member of the Irish parliament is an amusing illustration of Curran's wit.

A certain judge, Lord Norbury, was famous for the alacrity with which he condemned prisoners to death when he might have pronounced a more considered sentence. On one occasion, when he was dining in public with the foremost members of the Dublin bar he helped himself to some meat, at the same time asking:

"Is this hung beef?"

"Not yet," said Curran quickly. "Your lordship has not tried it."

Peculiar Highland Remedies.

A popular highland remedy for both consumption and general debility was what is known as sudh nan cabar (the juice of deers' horns). These were gathered in the hills when the animals cast them in the springtime. They were boiled for some hours and the juice thus obtained bottled after being strained. Candy sugar and whisky sometimes added to it afterwards. Crowbells pulverized and eaten on breadand-butter was used for consumption, asthma and whooping cough in the Hebrides.—Caledonian Medical Journal.

Rubbers Make Use of This Herb.

ONLY A SUGGESTION.

BUT IT HAS PROVEN OF INTEREST AND VALUE TO THOUSANDS.

Common sense would suggest that if one wishes to become fleshy they must plump it in only small doses, the food we eat and digest and fail to feed should be albuminous or fleshforming food, like meat, fish, cheese and cereals; in other words the kind of food that make flesh, not the foods which form the greater part of the daily bills of fare.

But the trouble is that while we eat, digest and generally too much for the stomach, from abuse and overwork, does not properly digest and assimilate it. Such is the reason so many people remain thin and unnaturally light. Fleshforming organs do not completely digest the food they hesitate and eggs and similar wholesome food.

There are thousands of such who are really confirmed dyspeptics although they may have no particular pain or inconvenience from their stomachs.

Of such persons would lay their prejudices aside and make a regular practice of taking, after each meal one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets the food would be actually and thoroughly digested, because these tablets contain the natural peptones and diastase which every weak stomach lacks, and in supplying this want the stomach is soon enabled to reach its natural tone and vigor.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets digest every form of flesh forming food, meat, eggs, bread and potatoes, and this is the reason why flesh is quickly build up, strengthen and invigorate this, dyspepsia men, women and children.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are the most delicate, and then with the added benefit as they contain no strong, irritating drugs, no cathartic or any harmful ingredient.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the most successful and most widely used patent medicine for stomach troubles because it is the most reasonable and scientific of modern medicines.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by every druggist in the United States and Canada as well as in Great Britain, at 50c for complete treatment.

Nothing further is required to cure any stomach trouble or to make thin, nervous, dyspeptic people, strong, plump and well.

PORT ARTUR BLOCKED

Fierce Bombardment of Russian Stronghold March 22.

One Japanese Battleship Hit By a Russian Shell—Town and Environs Shelled All Night and Until 11 a. m. March 22 With Much Damage—The Two Opposing Forces Closing on Each Other.

London, March 23.—A correspondent of The Times, at Tokio, under yesterday's date, cables that it is rumored that the Japanese have succeeded in blocking the entrance to Port Arthur.

According to The Standard's St. Petersburg correspondent, the Russian Government has just privately informed the powers that since the outbreak of war exactly 100,000 troops have been forwarded to the Far East by the Siberian Railway. The Board of Trade warns the masters of British ships that they must not resist, but stopped or searched by warships of either of the belligerents for contraband.

The Daily Telegraph's Seoul correspondent, under date of March 22, reports the rising of a mob of Koreans against Japanese soldiers at Sanchung, north of Gensan. The Japanese dispersed the mob, killing five and wounding several.

The Daily Chronicle publishes an interview given by Admiral Ito and Newchwang of bombardments of Port Arthur, on March 13 and 17, a number of Japanese warships having been being killed in the first, and two gunboats disabled, and fifty soldiers killed in the latter.

Battle at Port Arthur.

St. Petersburg, March 23.—The Emperor has received the following telegram from Admiral Alexieff:

"Lieut.-Gen. Stoessel reports that at midnight on March 21 Japanese torpedo boats were observed during our searchlights. Our guard ships and forts fired upon and hit several of them, the firing lasting for twenty minutes. At 6 o'clock in the morning the attack was renewed.

"At 6.30 o'clock in the morning four of the enemy's battleships, from the south, followed by the whole squadron, approached within eight torpedo boats. Our squadron left the roadstead to meet the enemy.

"At 9 o'clock the enemy's battleships opened fire on the roadstead, which they took up a position between Liaotishan and Golubinaia Bay (Pigeon Bay), while the cruisers formed up in two sections to the south and southeast of Port Arthur.

"At 9.20 o'clock the battleship Retvizan opened fire over the crest of the hills on the first of the enemy's battleships, which replied by firing on the Retvizan. Subsequently the fleet, formed up in line in the outer roadstead.

"About 1 o'clock in the morning the cannonade slackened and the Japanese fleet, remaining, drew off slowly to the southeast, and at 12.30 the firing ceased.

"During the bombardment five sailors were killed and nine were wounded. One soldier on the shore was bruised."

Admiral Makaroff's Report.

Another telegram from Viceroy Alexieff to the Emperor gives Vice-Admiral Makaroff's report, as follows:

At midnight of March 21 two of the enemy's torpedo boats approached the roadstead and were discovered by the searchlights on the batteries and fired upon by the forts and by the battleship Poltava and Otvajny. They were obliged to retire.

"A second attack was made at 4 o'clock the same morning by seven torpedo boats, which also were repulsed.

"At daybreak three detachments of the enemy's fleet, consisting of six battleships, four armored cruisers, six second and third class cruisers and eight torpedo boats, were approached from all sides. At 7 o'clock the squadron commenced to leave the outer harbor. The cruisers leading with the Askold flying my flag, at the distance of 30 cables, battleships following.

"The enemy's battleships approached Liaotishin and fired shells from their twelve-inch guns at the fortifications and forts and the environs of the town.

"Our shells, fired at a range of eighty cables, were well placed.

"At 9 o'clock a Japanese battleship was observed to be badly disabled.

"We lost no men during the bombardment, which ceased at 11 o'clock in the morning. It was resumed, and after passing along the outer roadstead, drew off without attacking our fleet.

Two Forces Closing.

St. Petersburg, March 23.—The following telegram has been received from Viceroy Alexieff, dated Mukden, March 22:

"General Mistchenkow reports that on March 17 our scouts approached Anju and observed the enemy's detachment of the Chongcheng River, opposite Anju, reinforcing the left flank of the enemy. Up to that date the enemy had not appeared at Longyen (15 miles northeast of Anju).

"It is supposed that there is one Japanese division at Anju, and that the remainder of the First Army Corps is at Pingyang.

"In consequence of the report that two squadrons of the enemy had arrived at Fakchon (16 miles northwest of Anju), two hundred of our cavalry were despatched for the purpose of preventing the enemy from crossing the Fakchon River. Our cavalry found three Japanese squadrons on the left bank of the river, but they withdrew towards Anju on the arrival of our detachment, without fighting.

"The Japanese squadrons number 19 each.

"On the night of March 19 two despatch riders encountered a Japanese patrol between Fakchon (about 50 miles north by west of Pingyang and Chongju, about 30 miles east of Katan). The patrol opened fire, but our despatch riders escaped unhurt.

"According to a report three thousand of the enemy's cavalry occupied Yongyen, Kai-ya-Tolsi, where material for pontoon bridges has been placed in readiness 40th and south of Anju."

GUILTY OF MANSLAUGHTER.

Crime Committed July 1 Last and Now to Be Punished.

Valleyfield, Que., March 23.—Yesterday afternoon the charge of manslaughter was entered against the prisoner in the McCaig murder case. The trial has occupied the greater part of seven days and created great interest in the surrounding districts. Over forty witnesses were examined, counting all the way from Winnipeg.

On the first of July last at Huntingdon, Kilgour, the victim of the murder, was met by his companion, Gilmour, and another friend, one named Laberge. All three were indicted during the liquor spree. Gilmour met McCaig, and he and Kilgour stopped. Kilgour took off his coat and gave it to Mrs. McCaig, leaving him a heavy blow over the left eye. Gilmour then drew a gun, a revolver and fired, the shot hitting Kilgour's watch and glancing off, staggered back and McCaig fired again, causing the fatal wound.

Gilmour then left the scene of the road and left in the care of Miss Isabelle Calder, a trained nurse, who had witnessed the shooting from the window where she was sewing. McCaig immediately made his escape, but was found at Trout River in a stable by the Dolan Hotel, which is situated on the boundary between Canada and the United States. He was brought by force from the American to the Canadian side, where he was arrested and put on him. They took him back to Huntingdon, thence to Valleyfield, to await his trial on a charge of murder.

PROVOCATION NOT SUFFICIENT.

Coroner's Jury Brings in Verdict on Death of John Mein.

Montreal, March 23.—The death of John Mein was closed yesterday. After hearing all the evidence the jury brought in a verdict that death was caused by a shot from a revolver in the hands of Charles Donati, and in the opinion of the jury there was not sufficient provocation for Donati to use of firearms.

Mrs. Donati and her sister gave evidence, and according to their testimony the men were very abusive in their usual manner in the store and at no time were they afraid of them. They did not see Mein strike the women when they went into the store. They said the shooting was done in justification for the shooting.

Dr. McCutcheon and Dr. Campbell also gave evidence that Mein was shot while on the street.

Fell 40 Feet, Walked Home.

Glace Bay, March 23.—Colonel J. McDonald, while somewhat intoxicated, walked over the edge of the Marqui towers Monday night, and had a fall of 40 feet and lay unconscious on the beach for several hours. When he regained consciousness he walked home. He is injured internally and was removed to St. Joseph's Hospital.

A SPRING MESSAGE.

TO ALL WHO ARE WEAK, EASILY TIRED AND OUT OF SORTS.

Spring should be the most joyous season of the year. It is the harbinger of sunshine, and birds and flowers. It makes us more cheerful and out-of-door life. But unfortunately there are thousands who cannot enter into the spirit of the season. Close confinement during the long winter months has left them weak, dispirited and oppressed; the appetite is fickle; the blood is clogged with impurities; the eyes lack the lustre of health; weariness and inaptitude have taken the place of vigorous energy. What is needed at this season of such general ill-health rest-making, blood-making tonic—something that will send new, rich, red blood coursing through the veins, bring brightness to the eye, a healthy appetite and a clear skin, free from pimples and eruptions.

In all the world there is nothing can do this so effectively and so thoroughly as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Every dose creates new blood, strengthens the nerves and thus builds the whole body. Here is a case in point: Mrs. Alfred Lee, of John Burks, of Elmsdale, P. E. I., who says:—"I was left an almost hopeless wreck after the grip of Spanmonda, my nerves were almost destroyed and I thought under the care of an excellent doctor I found myself growing worse. I was in a low state of health, had no appetite, was tired all the time and had no ambition. I was advised to try Dr. Williams Pink Pills and I have reason to be thankful that I took this advice, for under this treatment my system has been built up and I am again well and strong."

Mrs. Lee is not the only one using Williams' Pink Pills a trial and see how speedily they will restore you to health and strength; but you must get the genuine with the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" on the wrapper around each box. Sold by medicine dealers or sent by mail at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

AUDITOR STRUCK HARD

At Government's Free Hand Carrying Out Contracts.

Auditor-General Makes An Interesting Statement in His Annual Report to the House—Saves Canada Several Hundred Thousand Dollars in His Fight For the Treasury in the Dock Contract—The Militia Bill.

Ottawa, March 23.—The Auditor-General's reports brought down in the House yesterday, contain considerable correspondence tending to illustrate the invariable rule of the government in the interpretation of contracts. According to the report on the 1896 Mc. Haggart made a contract with M. J. Davis, whereby Mr. Davis became lessee of the water power on Shesks Island dam and the surplus power on the Cornwall Canal for a rental of $1000. The terms of the lease provided that he should supply lights for the canal at 50c per light per night, and also power at 10c per horsepower for the operation of the canal.

This agreement contained certain provisions for protection against paying for lights and power not required. A new agreement was made in 1900 which the auditor-general states was made "WITHOUT PURPOSE, EXCEPT TO THROW AWAY THE SAFEGUARD WHICH HAD BEEN PROVIDED IN THE INTEREST OF CARE AND FORESIGHT" in the first agreement. The Auditor-General has pointed out that while the Soulanges Canal, with large lighting and power plant, was government owned plant, was costing $8 a year, the Dock Company was costing $21,575.

Mr. Campbell, in the case of the first agreement, refused to pay the Dock Company's demand, supporting his contention by A. B. Aylesworth, K.C., but on Nov. 23, 1900, the treasury board over-ruled the auditor's contention, but on March 1, 1901, reversed this over-ruling, and on Aug. 13, 1903, a new agreement was made eliminating the safeguards previously discarded.

Of this the auditor-general says: "From this final contract, the third, the agent of the public interest is left out made, presuming that the requirements of the government for the Soulanges Canal remain as they are now, will be $100,000 less than they would be if there have been if the second contract had remained unchanged."

Mr. McDougall notes that the savings from this to this date have been $52,000.

The Militia Bill.

The Militia Bill was discussed in the House with an absence of acrimony that altogether augurs the true dependence of the house on this important measure. Closed gatherings and they will discharge their fury before the debate on the militia bill has run its course. Contrary to first expectations the militia bill will not have a smooth passage thru the house. Henri Bourassa, M.P., for Labelle and the French-Canadian members of the house. He has declared all kinds of appeals to them not to support the militia bill, and he has been partially successful. Several French-Canadian journals have assured Sir Wilfrid Laurier that they will support the government in the measure. Their open and expressed opposition, however, means that Bourassa has already accomplished.

And Bourassa is still at work. He is pointing out in his columns that all the changes in the militia act mean an increased expenditure of nearly half a million dollars a year, that the principle purpose of the measure is to the governor-general, and that the changes effected by the new bill mean nothing less than a step towards militarism. But fearful indeed that Sir Wilfrid Laurier has so vividly pictured during the past five years.

QUEBEC AND COLONIZATION.

Legislature Just Opened Will Make It Feature of Session.

Quebec, March 23.—The Provincial Legislature opened yesterday afternoon with the usual ceremonies. The speech from the throne congratulated the members on the continued general prosperity of the province, and on the remarkable progress effected on the development of its resources during the past year.

The negotiations with the Dominion Government as to the subsidies hopeful.

The importance of colonization work, "which seems to be the chief factor in our progress," and whose success will assuredly decide the destiny of this province in the consideration" will be regarded as a special committee appointed.

The importance of the readjustment of provincial subsidies, as provided last session, is being seriously considered by the Federal Government.

Among the bills to come is a measure concerning the revision of statutes, which will be the most important respecting accidents incident to labor.

There is again a surplus to announce.

N.W.T. Corps.

Regina, March 23.—The Territorial Department of Agriculture issued their final report on crop of 1903, yesterday. The total area of wheat was 16,111,569 bushels or only 600,000 bushels less than was estimated in last bulletin issued on Sept. 1, which is outstanding proof of unfavorable weather conditions, which afterwards prevailed. On the other hand the yield is better than estimated by 800,000 bushels, and barley, by 600,000 bushels.

There is no real creating without hard work.—Brahms.

It's pretty tough when a man can't even get credit for his good intentions.

Sudden drops of temperature are impossible in the home heated by hot water. Stove fires die out, hot air furnaces heat unevenly, and the hot air switches off to other parts of the house leaving the remaining rooms cold and drafty. But with the heating system of the in connection with Oxford Radiators an even, steady circulation of hot water is kept up throughout the house. Each radiator is diffusing the same temperature of heat in sufficient quantities for the size of the room.

The illustration below shows that the distance from the fire to the first surface is less than to the heater made, and the water has a shorter distance to travel, thus a more equal temperature is maintained in the water of the several sections.

Write for our booklets, they are of interest to everyone with a home to heat.

A FURIOUS ENGAGEMENT

Japanese Fleet Attack Port Arthur on March 18.

Destroyed One Russian Battleship Outside the Harbor—Japanese Had Several Casualties, While Condition of the Fleet is Kept Secret—Japs Previous Chinese Cruisers—Russian Vladivostock Squadron Detailed to Overtake Japan's New Chile Ships.

Tokio, March 21.—A special despatch from Mojl says the Japanese fleet attacked Port Arthur, March 18, bombarded the city and its defences and fought a furious engagement with the Russian fleet outside the harbor, destroying one Russian battleship. Seven Japanese casualties are reported. There is no information concerning the Japanese fleet's condition.

One Jap Killed.

Seoul, March 24.—A brush between the opposing forces has occurred at the outposts north of Anju. One Japanese was killed.

Japs Previous Chinese Cruisers.

Paris, March 24.—A despatch from Shanghai to The Temps says:

"The four Chinese cruisers which have just left here bound northward, were provisioned from Japanese sources.

"The Koreans in Takchen and Anju are in a state of terror and are fleeing to the mountains.

"The Japanese forces in Northern Coera are being decimated by sickness."

Work Cut Out For Him.

Paris, March 24.—The Echo de Paris correspondent at St. Petersburg says it is rumored in naval circles there that Captain Reitzenstein's Vladivostock squadron has been ordered to overtake at a certain point in the Pacific the battleship and two cruisers bought from Chile by Japan, and to return with them to Vladivostock.

Squadron Still There.

St. Petersburg, March 24.—According to private advices from Vladivostock the Russian squadron is still there.

Chinese Throwing Up Earthworks.

St. Petersburg, March 24.—The correspondent of The Novi-Krai of Port Arthur, writes that he saw crowds of Chinese coolies throwing up earthworks on the frowning, impregnable heights at Kinchou (north of Port Dalny).

Germany Comes In.

London, March 24.—The Daily Mail's Che Foo correspondent comments on a report that U. S. Consul Fowler, at Che Foo, has received word of native anti-jap riots at Chongangchow, where the Germans were massacred in 1898, as giving Germany a pretext to safeguard her interests in the Province of Shantung.

The Times this morning publishes an opinion of a correspondent that Japan will land her main army at Newchwang, which will seize Haicheng, 15 miles eastward of the railroad, and as additional base, and that without seriously attacking either Port Arthur or Vladivostock, the war will be fought out on the plains of Central Manchuria.

The Veil Not Lifted.

In the meantime the veil has not lifted, and not a word has yet issued, either officially from Japan or unofficially from any other source, concerning the last bombardment of Port Arthur. The rumored naval battle of March 18 is also totally unconfirmed.

Arrested For Forgery.

Toronto, March 24.—J. Philip Maguire, ex-manager of the Mutual Reserve Assurance Company, and the man who swore out the information against J. A. Robb, who appeared before the seances for embezzling of the company's funds, is himself now behind the bars on a charge of forgery. He was arrested by Detective Black last night on a warrant sworn out by Deputy Chief Stewart. It is alleged that Maguire forged the names of G. H. Poulton, 280 Yonge street, and Hechah Tandy, the musician, to two notes on which he raised money at the Imperial Bank.

Feared Arrest and Killed Himself.

Winnipeg, March 24. — Antoine Welsh, living a few miles west of the city of St. Charles, shot himself dead yesterday morning. He had been threatened with arrest, and after lighting a fire took down the weapon and ended his life.

Hunters are shooting the ducks on the Canadian side of the Detroit River, despite the closed season.

BAD FOR BELLANGER.

Jail Governor Swears That He Made a Confession.

Montreal, March 24.—It looks as if the fate of Bellanger, the alleged murderer of Antonio Fagnia at St. Eustache, is sealed. Detective McCaskill swears that the prisoner had confessed to the crime, and yesterday the Crown sprung a real sensation in the court. Governor Mileau of the St. Scholastique Jail swore that the prisoner had confessed to him the whole story of the murder. Bellanger told him he had gone to Montreal, bought a gun from Mr. Lafleur, Notre Dame street, and shot his brother-in-law in the face. "We were alone," he added, "when I fired, and he must have been dead before he fell to the ground. I then went to the house and had a sleep. In the evening I went to a neighbor's house to pass the evening with my family, but I returned home, took the body and brought it to the barn. Mr. Mileau added that the murderer told him he had hid the gun in the new and had also his arrest asked one of his brothers to remove the weapon.

SHOT IN LONDON.

Gilbert Mackenzie Injured Immediately After Buying a Revolver.

London, March 24.—Gilbert M. Mackenzie, a commercial man from Toronto, was shot yesterday morning in this city. It is supposed that the affair was accidental. Mackenzie went into Brock's gun store and purchased a 22-calibre revolver. He left the store and, placing it in the left breast pocket of his overcoat, turned and walked away. The clerks in the store immediately heard a revolver report and heard the man gasp. The revolver, which was not fitted with double action, had exploded in his pocket, he said. The ambulance was called and he was removed to the City Hospital, where it was found that the wound was not dangerous. The ball had gone into the left breast and had taken a downward course, glancing off one of the ribs. Bert Mackenzie, a son of the injured man, who resides in Toronto, was notified.

BLOWN TO ATOMS.

Railway Construction Foreman, Richard Kay, Killed Instantly by Dynamite.

Keewatin, Ont., March 24.—A fatal accident occurred at Foley Bros. and Lawson's railway construction camp, about three miles west of Keewatin, resulting in the death of an old man, and injuries to two others. While the foreman, Richard Kelly, was drilling out a miss hole, he accidentally struck the cap or exploder, causing the dynamite to explode, literally blowing him into atoms. A fragment of rock also struck a teamster named Philip Mercier, who was about 30 feet distant from Kelly, injuring him slightly about the head. A laborer named A. Turner was also struck by a small piece of rock falling on his great toe.

TOLD IN A FEW LINES.

An exploding locomotive boiler near Buffalo killed two men.

Gordon Ferris' bakery at Harrow was destroyed by fire. Insurance, $700.

Charles Dick, successor to Mark Hanna, was introduced to the Senate on Wednesday.

Professor George Brownell, formerly of Syracuse University, is dead, at Middletown, N.Y., by his own hand.

Macario Sakey, so-called president of the Filipino republic, and 15 followers have been killed in a fight with constabulary.

The French anarchists have contributed regularly for the future outrages, at Liege, Belgium, as touching expulsion of fellow-anarchists.

Rhodes Papers Held Up.

New York, March 24.—The customs officials have been held up the examination papers at St. Oafeld, for the United States and Canadian candidates for the Cecil Rhodes scholarships. It is presumed this has been done under the provisions of the tariff act, and that the authorities hold the papers should have been printed in the United States.

Brother Turns Cannibal.

Brockville, March 24.—Wm. Cranston and Victor Sinclair, half brothers, who came here recently from Prescott to work in a foundry, got into an altercation on their route Tuesday night and Sinclair was brutally beaten and is now in the hospital. Part of his lower lip was bitten off and the finger nearly severed. Cranston is in jail.

British States Attacked.

Berlin, March 24.—Governor von Puttkamer of the Cameroon cables that the revolt of the natives has spread to Cross River (one of the points marking the boundary of German territory in West Africa), and been extended to the British territory in Nigeria, and that the British customs stations at Obokum was attacked on March 10. The governor adds that Col. Moeller is at Cross River and has the situation in hand.

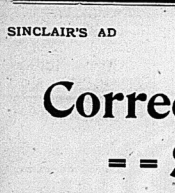
Correct Costume Styles



The question of Correct Costume Style is one that confronts every purchaser of a Ladies' Spring Costume. Months ago we had to consider Spring Costume Styles and we decided then, that the long Skirted Coat had had its day and something new must take its place. Accordingly we placed our orders for the smart short Bolero Jacket and Shirt Waist Suits as are now shown in our Ladies' Ready-to-Wear Department, and now we find the greatest authority in America, the National Cloak and Suit Co., of New York, in their New Spring Catalogue show Ninety-Five Styles of Ladies' Costumes, Ninety-Three of which are Bolero Jackets and Shirt Waist Suits and Two only, no doubt intended for those who follow a previous season's styles, are shown in the long Skirted Coat as worn last season. Our New Spring Costumes are open for your inspection.

PRICES $11.50 to $27.50.

Ladies' Jap. Silk Waists

PUNISHING BRIBERY.

Two years in the Central Prison is the sentence imposed upon Michael J. O'Neil by Judge Winchester, of Toronto, as a punishment for having accepted a bribe "to fix" a coroner's jury, empanelled to enquire into the death of a man who was killed by a C.P.R. train on the Esplanade, Toronto.

The Judge, in passing judgment, is reported as telling O'Neil, "that his case was one of the worst he had ever dealt with. It was very strange to him how a man who once held the honorable position of Councillor of the County of King could lower himself so much as to entertain as to not only accept a bribe, but to ask for one. If there were fewer people who asked for bribes there would be fewer people willing to give them. One of the reasons why there was so much lynch law on the other side was because the people had lost all confidence in the jury, system and took the law into their own hands. The penalty for your offence is only two years," added the judge, "and if I could sentence you to a longer term I would do so."

Every right thinking man in Canada will pronounce this a righteous judgment, but what of the briber? Is he to be allowed to escape a like punishment? Is not the man who bribed or attempted to bribe another to "fix a jury" in a case where human life was sacrificed, not as guilty as he who accepted the bribe? Most people will say yes.

In not this demoralized state of affairs, after all, the outcome of the laxity with which the crime of bribery has been punished in the past?

PARCEL DELIVERY

Our CAKE and BREAD business has increased so rapidly that we have found it necessary to make arrangements with the Parcel Express for delivering the goods. The delivery starts to-day.

Any Cakes or Bread bought from us now will be delivered free to any part of the city.

J. ARTHUR MARSH

The most flagrant cases have been exposed in the courts of the land, and yet no one has been punished. On the contrary, bribers have been rewarded by the Governments of the Dominion and Ontario. This being the case, might not O'Neil have come to the conclusion that bribery, even to "fix a jury," was not a very venial sin, certainly no worse than bribery to secure the return of a member of Parliament, stuff ballot-boxes, switch or burn ballots, or to commit with impunity various other crimes of a like character. Such men, like Judge Riddell, was O'Neil's mental thoughts, reasoning therefrom that if caught, he would be secure by the intervention of Government officials from any punishment.

The Government may received other rascals of a like type; will the pardoning power be extended to this one?

TIMELY TOPICS.

Easter is coming right along, and we'll soon hear the glad anthems ringing. A week ago to-morrow will be Good Friday, which is supposed to officially usher in the house-cleaning season, and thenceforward for a few months the life of the average housewife is filled with gladness and that of the average man with madness.

Chase out the pesky microbe
Likewise the sad-eyed man
There's peace for neither one of them

In the gentle house-wife's plan
Scrubbed each floor and wall
Goodness! We are lucky then
To be alive at all.

This being spring, and the garden lands almost ready to go to seed-ness, it may be well to again mention the antidote for burdocks which we gave last year, and which worked so successfully. Simple as can be. All you have to do is to locate your burdock and put some salt on its tail—beg pardon, root, and it goes away and never bothers you more. Sure thing.

The Corean Emperor's name is Hi Li, but at present he finds it convenient to Li Lo.

Hearst, the New York newspaper man, is suggiring new papers in all directions. How much do you think we would give for the Port Hope Guide?

Spring fever is prevalent just now. It takes all the spring out of a man and enables a boy for anything but playing marbles.

"Enquirer" wants to know why we did not report the meeting of the celebrated "Bulldog by-law" last Monday night. Because it was not passed, gentle sir. The City Solicitor had it in readiness for introduction, but the Chairman of the Executive passed it back to him, remarking that he declined to introduce it. Perhaps the Council is waiting for the dog days before they pass the by-law in question.

Up in western Ontario they say that all the talk in Easter hats have been delayed by the snow blockade. Here in Belleville the ladies' trains came through on time.

In Hamilton they have a literal club which for short is called the L.L.L. club. Yesterday the intelligent type-setting machine just lit up Eli, gish, and typed out the i.t.s.m. knew what it was doing.

Robins and bluebirds can now be seen on our streets. But the snow shovels is sold storage. Gentle spring is here.

Rev. Canon Welsh, of Toronto, insinuated that "The Maple Leaf" was forever," and Mr. Alex Muir, the author, feels like walking right up to the Canon's mouth and handing him some hot talk. "The Maple Leaf" he says, "contains as decent a prayer as is sometimes heard in cathedrals." It does really seem as that the Rev. gentleman went out of his way to slur Mr. Muir's song. "The Maple Leaf" may not be a great poem, yet as a patriotic composition it certainly does not rank very high, but Canadian children love to sing it; Canadian soldiers and women feel their blood tingle as they hear it; Canadian soldiers at the front in South Africa sang it and "remained pent" to its strains, and it moved them as no other song could. "The Maple Leaf" may be doggerel, but it fills the bill, and until Canon Welch can write us a better national song it would be wisdom on his part to leave it alone.

Weather prophets now declare that the worst of summer will be the hottest on record. If the latter happens ain't quite full they should be filled up at once.

Rather a good story is told us by a city official, a friend of his from the country, he says, visited him the other day, and asked his advice as to investing in stock of the Marconi Wireless Telegraph System, he having received circulars from the promoters of that concern. The city official rather discouraged the idea of his friend's investment, saying that he thought there were better chances closer at hand. The gentleman from the country, however, was not to be put off. "The Marconi system is all right," he said, "why, look at all those wireless messages The Intelligencer has been getting from Mr. Wm. Johnson lately. The system must be all right, or it couldn't carry messages like that." And the city official was so flabbergasted that he nearly bought a block of Marconi stock himself, b'gosh.

The latest report in political circles is that the Premier will dissolve the Legislature and go to the country on the Temperance Bill. The last resort of a politician, Irishman, that the days have gone by when the Hon. G. W. could pull the wool over people's eyes. He has lost the confidence of liquor men and temperance men alike.

The Czar's protests against Japan's methods don't seem to have much weight with the powers. What the Czar needs is a good friend on the executive, like Peterboro had in the O.F.A.

The gas still continues very poor. If it doesn't soon improve the gas works people may have to hire George Dulmage to put on a thin undershirt and crawl through the mains.

GAVE SAMARIA A PAIR TRIAL AND PROVED IT A SUCCESS—MAN HAD BEEN DRINKING 30 YEARS—NOW CAN-NOT BEAR THE SMELL OF LIQUOR.

Pearmerville, Ont.,

Dear Sirs,—I gave your Samaria Prescription a fair trial and it has proved a success. I wish you to send me another treatment for another patient, who is a heavy drunkard, for the last case, the patient took the remedy himself. I hope to be able to send you his name soon, as he intends giving it as a testimonial. He had been drinking for the last thirty years, and now he cannot even bear the smell of liquor.

Send this new treatment in my name, as it is for some friends.

Yours truly,

Although the Pacific covers more than half the surface of the globe and has an area estimated roughly at 90,000,000 square miles, yet its coast line, even including that of the Indian ocean, is but 47,000 miles, or about 8,000 miles less than that of the Atlantic. The shores of the Atlantic are very deeply indented by large seas, of which the Baltic and Mediterranean are the most remarkable. Besides these, the greatest inland seas and gulfs in the Atlantic are the gulf of Mexico, Caribbean sea, Hudson bay and the bay of Biscay. If we take from the Pacific the Red sea, Arabian sea and bay of Bengal, which are part of the Indian ocean, we leave it with a remarkably straight coast line, with the exception of a few deep indentations on the coast of Asia.

It is owing to the comparative paucity of land and water and consequent ease of communication between one country and another that the most civilized nations of the world, with few exceptions, have lived and now live on the shores of the north Atlantic and its lateral seas.

Bob Toombs' Way.

General Robert Toombs was as impulsive as he was courageous. Once, in the midst of a hot political campaign, a stump orator said something about the generals Lee and Robert B. Lee for insubordination, frightfully distorting the incident. Toombs wrote one of the hottest letters of his life and was about to seal it when a friend entered his office and, seeing him much agitated, inquired the cause. The letter was handed to him to read, and when he had finished it he remarked, "You don't intend to send that to him?" "I do," said Toombs. "Then wait till tomorrow and think it over, general." "Never, sir! I have known him to be a liar, a blackguard and a thief all his life, but never before had cause to tell him so. The opportunity is now offered, and I wouldn't miss it for the senatorship. Wait till tomorrow? Think it over? That is to give him every the chance of a lifetime. Strike while the iron is hot, sir! Bob Toombs is the iron! Bob Toombs is hot! Toombs will strike!"

Have an Aim in Life.

Have you no aim in life? Then get one. Study what it shall be, and think, and think deeply. Pray that you may have an understanding of your work in the world, that you may see your beckoning star and that a knowledge may come to you of how to build a highway to it. The materials and tools for the building of this highway lie right at hand. They are not to your liking perhaps—you may call them trouble and bad luck—but just shut your teeth together, shut your eyes, too, if necessary, and hold your breath. Then get a good grip on the situation, and then work with it. And the wonders that will grow out of doing little things well and the understanding of many things that will come to you will make you "stand amazed" indeed.

TRYING HIM OUT

By C. B. LEWIS.

Copyright, 1903, by P. O. Newspaper Union.

He had finished with West Point and been assigned to the Twenty-second. Young Warner, who was only a boy yet, with fair ideas of "soldiering" as a girl's. The captain and first lieutenant of Company A were old West Pointers and should have given the boy a warm welcome and stuck by him until he could stand alone, but instead of that they looked at him askance. The captain himself had a son who had failed to pass at the Point, and this had rankled and embittered him, and his lieutenant had taken up his cause.

In the days some whilom boy from the Point was assigned to a regiment and he went he arrived one day to find himself face to face with a hostile Indian force the next. He was given a show, however. His captain or lieutenant kept an eye on him in his first fight and coached him through it and helped him to keep his nerve and lose no honor. Sometimes the boy needed no encouragement; sometimes he would have lost his head and made a spectacle of himself but for the moral support of the veteran. It is always an open question as to how a soldier, be he officer or private, will conduct himself when he faces death for the first time on a battlefield.

Four days after Warner's arrival the command took the field against the hostiles. The boy was not yet familiar with the faces of his brother officers, and he knew nothing of Indian warfare except what he had read. He depended on his senses to see him through. They had doomed him, however. They had not plotted and planned, but they looked into each other's eyes and nodded their heads. The boy would be "tried out" within a few days, but he would have to stand or fall alone. He was full of enthusiasm as the command rode forward, having no doubt of himself and being eager for his baptism. A soldier is not a soldier until he has heard the bullets whistle about his ears. It is not years of service, but wounds, that give him respect and dignity.

The hostiles had gathered in force on the banks of the Kaw, and one afternoon the cavalry came riding across the barren plains to open a fight which lasted for three hours. To accomplish results aimed at, the command had to be split up and companies and squadrons sent here and there to fight on their own hook.

The Colt had been under the eye of every man in Company A since the first shot was fired, and it was admitted that he had kept his nerve as well as could be expected. The privates spoke in grades of fifty to each other. The captain and lieutenant looked at each other and waited. They had not long to wait. A company was sent far out on the right flank to move up and open a hot fire, and then there was a smile on the captain's face. He ordered that boy to push forward with fifteen men against the hundred warriors concealed in the willows was "trying him out," but it was also murder. A whole company could not have carried the position. His face paled for an instant, but then the color came back, and he shut his teeth hard and led the way.

"Confound him! Does he want us wiped out to a man?" growled an old sergeant as he looked back over his shoulder at the captain. But the Colt hurried the little band forward as in work, and five minutes later it was hotly engaged.

Little by little Company A was moved to the right, and by and by it was no longer in support of its skirmish line. The time came when it was ride shot away and when the Indians took advantage of it to flank the ten men still left alive in the dips and hollows along that front. There was calculation on the part of the Indian lieutenant on the part of the Indians. The Colt had been given no orders except to advance and attack. He found the enemy ten to one, but he would not fall back. He realized that his little force must be wiped out, but he encouraged the man to creep nearer. The time came when he was within pistol range, and he called to be cut off, but there was no backward movement. If recalled, he would retreat; if not, he would die on the firing line.

The fight came. Fifty Italian warriors with dark faces and fiendish yells rose up and dashed forward in a body. The boy did not lose his nerve altogether, but he was the only one of the seven or eight living men who was not captured and dragged back into the Indian lines for torture. It was with something like fright in his eyes and his face as white as a dead man's that he rejoined his company.

"While temporarily under the command of Second Lieutenant Warner fifteen men were killed or captured. The officer himself escaped by flight."

Such was the wording of the captain's report and of the dutch send broadcast for publication, and the Colt boy found himself ostracized. Some of his brother officers nodded stiffly to him, while others turned their backs. The boy felt that he had been put in a false position for a purpose, but he could prove nothing nor advance any satisfactory explanations. He had obeyed orders, but the act of obedience had ruined his career. There was no court of inquiry, no charges, no court martial. He was simply ostracized by the officers and looked at askance by the privates. There were two remedies, resignation and suicide. It seemed to him that to send in his resignation after a month's service and with a campaign still on smacked of cowardice, and he was no coward. As to the other remedy—well.

The Twenty-second had not rested thirty days after its fight on the Kaw before White Bird had gathered his warriors and come swooping up the valley again. The regiment must take the field again. One morning as the men were rushing to and fro while making their preparations the Colt boy rode over to the fort alone, and only a sentry or two saw him go. He rode straight down the valley at a mad gallop for seven miles and then dismounted under the trees surrounding a spring. There was but the other cavalry left, and he was going to accept it. He had galloped away from all human ken to be alone with his last thoughts and to die by his own hand.

"You see, it was this way," said one of three or four pioneers who gathered at the fort that afternoon with momentous news. "We got word that White Bird was in the valley burnin' and killin' and we set out to bring him in' them off for two hours, and they came in gettin' ready for a rush when that boy officer of yours came chargin' down like a thunderbolt. He had only his revolver and saber, and after he had emptied his revolver he used his steel. Say, now, but he must have wanted to be killed. He rode among the redskins, shootin' and slashin' and cheerin', and he got up such a panic among 'em that we had a chance to make a sweat. It was no use to think of helpin' him out, for they were sixty to five. Every one of his bullets brought down a buck, and he must have slashed half a dozen more, but we had got out of hearin' when we heard the reds yellin' and knowed that the boy had gone down. Yes, he was only a kid of a boy, but I'm tellin' you, kernel, that he had a heart of a lion and that we are ready to sell our claims to build him a monument fifty feet high."

THE RUSE CAME.

Where Silas "Headedded."

A too ready offering of information has often placed the informer in an embarrassing position, like that of the small boy who heard that the stepladder was missing. "Why, mamma," he said, "it's in the dun cow't." "Oh, yes, I remember," said his mother, and then, looking sternly at him, "But how did you find it out?"

A similar experience befell Silas H. of a small town in Maine. A student of history, following the route of Arnold's Quebec expedition, was asking for suggestions as to its probable course above the ponds of Dead river. The villagers disagreed on the matter.

"I tell ye," said Silas when the debate waxed warm, "Arnold went right up Crosby pond and over the shoulder of Mount Loulee. Why, I found canteens and bullets and bayonets at his old camp when I was up there in sixty-three."

The historian was delighted. "Is that so?" he exclaimed. "What were you doing up there in sixty-three?"

A tittter went round the circle of villagers as the well read questioner, and Silas, much embarrassed, sidled away.

"Ye see, mister," volunteered one of his neighbors, "sixty-three was the year of the draft. Silas always was kinder to dratts, and when he felt that one comin', as ye might say, he—kedaddled."

It Was Only Oil.

A naval officer was talking the other day of the inferiority of European to American railroads.

"The stuffy little European carriages are lighted with electricity now," he said, "but I remember when they were only lighted with oil. I have cause to remember this.

"One night in Germany during a violent storm I was riding toward Berlin in a first class carriage when a leak sprung. Drop after drop, warm and dirty, fell upon my hat and coat.

"I waited till a guard came through. It was a long wait. One is always a long time waiting for guards on European roads.

"'Look here, guard,' I said at last, 'the rain is coming through the lamp hole and trickling down my clothes.'

"The guard made an investigation. Then he said reassuringly:

"'Oh, that is not rain! It's only oil. The lamp leaks a little, but the roof is quite sound, I assure you.'

"Then the whistle blew, and he rushed away."—New York Tribune.

Heat Conservation

A hot oven and a cool kitchen is what every housewife is looking for this summer. It is absolutely impossible with a coal range, and almost as impossible with the ordinary gas range.

Oxford Gas Range

makes a hot oven and a cool kitchen a practical certainty. The oven is lined with asbestos—this keeps the heat in and leaves the kitchen cool. It also heats the oven more quickly to a higher degree and with less gas than any other range. The illustration shows that immediately outside an oven hot enough to cook a roast it is comfortably cool.

We would like to show you this and many other improvements peculiar to the Oxford Gas Range. Won't you call at one of our agencies? We can prove to you that this range does away with kitchen drudgery. If you can't call, write for our leaflet—it will interest every housewife.

A Pioneer Gone.

On Friday, March 18th, George Campion, Sr., of North Marmora, departed this life after a short period of sickness from a complication of diseases. The old pioneer went to Marmora, then known as Beaver Creek Settlement, about 55 years ago, with his axe, musket and potash kettle. Fashing the forest with this outfit he succeeded in hewing out a home for his beloved companion, then "sweet sixteen." He had many encounters with "old Brule" in those early days, and killed many bears and deer. In politics Mr. Campion was a staunch Conservative. In religion a Methodist and fraternally a loyal Orangeman. He had a host of friends, the result of his great sociability and straightforward life. Some few months ago his companion in life died, which caused him to mourn, but he bore it manfully, resigned to the blessed hope of meeting her on the other shore. The late Mr. Campion was 83 years of age, and leaves one daughter and four sons to mourn his loss.

MAN'S MOST CRITICAL AGE.

Very often the vital resources are small at forty-two, but if not then, between fifty-seven and sixty-two years of age there is a strange slowing down and loss of vitality. It is important that this transient period of decay should be checked; strength must be imparted to the tired brain, the weakened nerves must be fortified. The wise man will use Ferrozone, whose potency is particularly applicable to these critical periods. Ferrozone quickens the whole being, imparts vigor and power, pushes back the onset of senility in a very ma-nifest way. It's because Ferrozone gives strength, vitality and vigor that it is useful to old men. Try it. Price 50c.

HAROLD.

We are sorry to part with Miss Coy, our popular P.M., and her mother. Mr. Robert Scott has moved in our midst and has taken possession of Harold store and P. O. We extend a hearty welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Scott.

Mr. John Gay, cheese inspector, has taken possession of the Hogle homestead, where he will reside in future.

Mrs. J. M. Reid, of West Huntingdon, is spending a few weeks with friends here.

Mrs. John A. Potts, who has been seriously ill for the past two weeks, is not much better.

Born on March 16th to Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Reid, a little son and heir.

CATARRH IS CERTAINLY CURABLE.

In fact it is one of the most curable diseases if fragrant healing Catarrhozone is used. No matter how long you have suffered with catarrh, you will be quickly cured by inhaling the antiseptic vapor of Catarrhozone, which strikes at the foundation of the trouble and establishes a healthy condition in the system that catarrhal germs simply can't exist. "I suffered from catarrh of the nose and throat for years," writes S. H. Dowak, of Pinterville. "My nostrils were always stuffed up and had a most disagreeable hacking cough. Catarrhozone cured me completely." Catarrhozone never fails. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25 cents.

CHATTERTON.

Mrs. Brock, of Belleville, is visiting at the home of Mr. J. Bloor.

Mrs. Palmer, who has been sick so long, is improving. Her many friends will be pleased to see her out again.

Mr. M. Gordineer is moving back on the old homestead near Chatterton.

ST. OLA.

The friends of Rev. W. J. M. Cragg and his amiable wife, of this place, gave them a surprise party on the night of March 18. About 100 were present. Luncheon was served by the ladies, at the conclusion of which Rev. Mr. Cragg was presented with an address and a purse containing nearly $100. The recipient, though taken by surprise, made a reply which greatly impressed all present.

It's So Easy

It's easy enough for a salesman to have you slip into a suit, take you before a mirror, pat you on the back and say, "Did you ever see anything fit you so perfectly? Look at the way that collar hugs the neck; how well the shoulders set, etc."

PERHAPS:

But how about the wear of the fit? Depends upon the tailoring. What is to hold that collar in place or to keep those shoulders in shape? So don't go altogether by appearance; judge by what you know of the reputation of the store.

Ever since we have been in the clothing business, we have stood, we shall continue to stand back of every piece of clothing we sell, to the end.

If, when the seaon is over, you think you haven't had your money's worth of wear, come back and let us settle with you.

This is a safe store to tie to for clothes.

Test us on your spring suit.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The city of Montreal will, according to the Star, spend the nice little sum of $752,219 on its payments this year.

The total loss of life in the Boer war was 20,721. A small total for a big war. The expense to Great Britain was out of all proportion to the number killed, but no one is grumbling much about that.

The heir-presumptive to the Japanese throne rejoices in the name of Miechi. There will probably be Patrick's day processions in Japan when little Prince Mickey becomes Mikado.

A successor to Lord Minto will be appointed next fall. Send in your applications early.

How would you like to be the water wagon man?

"Well," says a property owner, "the Council may have saved in their appointment of an assessor, but he'll have to work seven days a week in order to make a worse assessment than we had last year."

An open-hearted fellow says he thinks the corner of Front street and Victoria Ave. would be an ideal place for a Y.M.C.A. building. He says he'll make the Association a present of the suggestion, if they can induce somebody to give 'em the site.

A wireless message from Mr. Wm. Johnson asks if anything is being done about the Old Boys' Reunion. Not a thing; not a thing. It's as dead as the agitation to repair and beautify the old dump.

Definitely Settled.

London, March 24.—(C.A.P.)—The French draft of the proposed convention between Britain and France was resolved by M. Paul Cambon, the Republic's Ambassador in London, on Saturday, and he at once submitted it to Lord Lansdowne. The Newfoundland question is definitely settled on the terms previously cabled.

Out of Work, Kills Himself.

Winnipeg, March 24.—James Shouldice, aged about 50 years, committed suicide this morning at the C. P. R. depot, Brandon, by throwing himself in front of a shunting engine. He had been here about a month and had applied to the police to be put in jail, as he could get no work. His wife lives in Quebec.

Toronto Bylaw Carried.

Toronto, March 24.—The million dollar bylaw to provide for the issue of debentures to improve the city's system of waterworks was carried yesterday by a majority of 937 in a total vote of 1,789.

No Agreement re. Morocco.

London, March 24.—Foreign Secretary Lansdowne, in a letter replying to an inquiry from merchants, says that no agreement has yet been concluded with France concerning Morocco, and that none was ever contemplated by which Morocco would be ceded to France.

Coyotie Will Hang.

L'Original, March 24.—At Prescott County Spring Assizes yesterday afternoon, Clement Coyotie was found guilty of murdering Daniel Colligan and Thomas Colligan of Alfred township, in January last, and was sentenced to be hanged April 28.

Parliament Rises Early.

"He said he could not help kissing you," whispered the first congressman's daughter. "He said when he sat beside you in the conservatory and looked into your eyes he was moved by an irresistible impulse and simply had to kiss you."

"Did he?" smiled the second congressman's daughter, who was "listening with some interest to the apology thus being made for the boldness of the handsome cousin of the other girl.

A Newfoundland puppy nearly all white was chased by a big dog in Bruce's and terribly frightened. He had a violent epileptic fit, and in a few hours he was completely changed, black markings have appeared all over his coat, which have become permanent.

THE BROKEN VIOLIN.

An Incident of the Childhood of the Master Genius.

Ole Bull, the great violinist, was born with a genius for music. To him the rapping of hobnails, the wind and rain and waterfalls, the music of birds and bees—all these were the voices of nature, and he tried to reproduce them on his violin.

It is said that the musician's first violin was given him by an uncle when he was but four years old, and his delight at the present knew no bounds.

"My father wanted me to be a minister," he said in telling the story many years after, "and I thought I must do as he wished. But when I was eight years old he bought me a new violin and arranged to have me study under a teacher, 'for,' he said, 'a minister ought to know a little about music.' That night I could not sleep. I rose in the night to get a peep at the precious violin. It was so red, and the pretty pearl screws did smile at me so! I plucked the strings just a little with my fingers, and it smiled at me more and more. I took up the bow and looked at it. It said to me it would be pleased to have me try it across the strings. So I did try it just a very little, and it did play so softly. I forgot that it was midnight and everybody asleep, and so next minute I felt my father's whip across my shoulders. My little red violin dropped on the floor and was broken. I did weep very much for it, but it did no good. They did have a doctor to it the next day but it never recovered its health."

Impeachments.

In 1797 Senator William Blount of Tennessee was impeached for treason in negotiating personally with Great Britain and was acquitted. On March 3, 1803, Judge John Pickering of the federal court in New Hampshire was found guilty on the trial of an impeachment of drunkenness and profanity on the bench and was removed. On March 12, 1804, William Chase, associate justice of the supreme court, was impeached. He was acquitted on March 1, 1805. Meantime, on Dec. 12, 1804, Judge James H. Peck of the federal court of Missouri was acquitted by the senate after impeachment by the house. On May 6, 1862, Judge West H. Humphrey of the federal court of Tennessee was removed for treason. In 1868 Andrew Johnson, president of the United States, was impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors and acquitted. In March, 1876, the former secretary of war, General W. W. Belknap, was impeached for bribery in making appointments. He was acquitted on Aug. 1, 1876. His was the last impeachment.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

Bathe inflamed eyes with warm water, not cold.

Alcohol added to the ice water in which cold compresses are dipped will make these much more effacious.

If used persistently enough, salt will cure nasal catarrh. A weak brine should be made and sniffed up the nose, allowing it to run down the throat.

For burns or scalds nothing is more soothing than the white of an egg, which may be poured over the wound. It is more soothing as a varnish for a burn than collodion.

When your feet become swollen after your long walks, bathe them in water in which charcoal has been boiled. Strain the water through a cloth before putting the feet into it.

The Camel Raid.

Camels in Somaliland are kept in great herds sometimes numbering 30,000. Such numbers involve wide areas for grazing and consequent distances from the few places where water may be found. The ponies used by the Somali can also manage without drink for three or four days and when employed for herding have, like their masters, only camels' milk to quench their thirst. These big herds offer, of course, a tremendous temptation to the raider, as many as 10,000 camels being taken at a time, and the excitement of driving off such a haul at full gallop for forty or fifty miles, with the exasperated owner possibly hard in pursuit and the chances of the raider finding his own camp has fallen a prey to some other tribal diversion, appeals irresistibly to the excitable Somali.

Getting Even in Misery.

Two cots stood side by side in the Emergency hospital. On one was the form of a man, a great big, strong looking fellow. On the other was the figure of a boy, a little fellow not more than ten years of age. The head of each was swathed in bandages, and while the man bore his suffering in silence the boy cried and moaned and sobbed.

"What's the matter, sonny?" asked the man as the boy cried aloud.

"I fell off a roof," was the answer the lad returned between his sobs.

"Hurrah for you!" returned the man. "I fell down a ship's hatch. Let's shake."

An hour later the nurse came into the ward and walked over to the cots. Both the patients were sound asleep and in the hairy fist of the sailor rested the tiny hand of his little companion in misery.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No matter of its kind, it will give such satisfaction.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Diarrhoea, Dysentery, Summer complaint, Sick Stomach or Cholera Morbus, and have to use great precautions to avoid the attack. Change of water, cooking, and great fruit, is sure to bring on these troubles. In such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. It gives prompt relief if taken in time when the symptoms are noticed, so further trouble won't experienced.

A long portage makes a weary journey.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles, there is one preparation of medicine can compare with Hickie's Cod-Liver Oil and Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It relieves all irritation, heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome cough, and by promoting expectoration, removes the cause. Many cases of Asthma are cured which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that dreadful tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Hickie's Cod-Liver Oil and Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation, and hoarseness in the throat and bronchial tubes, and gives purity to the vocal cores, rendering the voice clear and melodious. Don't wait until you are nearly dead before you seek means to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, but when promises a bottle of "Hickie's Anti-Consumptive Syrup" to cure, and never a child has taken cold, has a cough or whooping cough, if it is used according to directions.

Don't experiment with what one wants is as difficult as getting it. Will positively cure sick headache and, if taken according to directions, Little Liver Pills. This is not talk, but truth. Try it. Sold by the best druggists in 25 cents each.

AUTHOR OF

had been late; did I know it? A hasty glance from observers past the time set for it. And why? Because Miss Wells' veil was not ready. She had chosen to array herself in the house and had come early enough for the purpose; but she would not accept any assistance, not even that of her maid, and of course she kept every one waiting. "Oh, there was no more excuse for it than for any party I know, morning than the bride!" Let other people remark upon the high look in her face, or easily account for the anxious misery of the bridegroom; she, the speaker, could tell things about the bride which would go to show that she was not all right even before that ominous death's-head reared itself into view at her marriage festival. Why, the fact that she came downstairs and met unmoved the shock of that terrible quiet was enough. Had there not been so much else to talk about, a well-disposed world would talk about this. But the big event had so effectually swallowed up little facts that, only herself, and possibly two other ladies present, was prepared to retain any memory of the matter.

"What ladies?" I asked.

"Oh, you know better than I do, ladies. Two of the very best sort, I know they noticed it, because I heard them talking about it. I were all standing in the upper hall and were the bride's own private carriage leading to the room where the bride was dressing. The door opened and the bed gone around of what had been discovered in the library, and we were all intently watching for the appearance of the bride, who, we had been told, would not be ready for the point in which her great-grandmother had appeared in the same window for old point and I was determined to stand where I could see her come out, even if I had to wait all the ceremony itself. But it would have been a genuine relief to me, in the close hall if the ladies behind me had not kept up a constant chatter which, I of course, pretended not to hear. I remember it, every word, for it was my own impatience for half an hour. What was it? Oh, it was the bridegroom's appearance, which, by the way, I had the privilege of starting at a full hour before the bride. The boy who brought it had not been admitted into Miss Moore's room, and not knowing where else to go with it, was 'lingering before the door,' with the great streamers falling from his hands, and the lilies making the whole place heavy with a sickening perfume. From what I could gather the ladies say, he had been standing there an hour, and the time was long, for I had time to time to produced in me an odd feeling which these ladies found me second to share.

"It's so shame!' I heard one of them cry, 'Veronica Moore has no excuse for such thoughtlessness. It is no hour since the bride to have been shut up in her rooms alone. She won't even see her maid. She prefers to dress alone, she says. Peculiar in a bride, isn't it? But one thing is certain, she will not be on the veil without help. She will have to be helped, and by me!' At which the other volunteered that the bridegroom had been seen and that didn't envy Francis Jeffrey. 'What? not his fifty thousand a year to lighten her misfortune?' returned the companion with a shrug which conveyed contempt for her, so closely were we packed together. I have a brother who caught a bear with his own hands, and all Washington knows it, but the bear was a gentleman in comparison with such circumstances.' Indeed she has, and all Washington knows it, but the bridegroom was not a gentleman, for they had not yet exhausted the main topic that night to prevent now and then a fifty thousand a year to lighten her misfortune, or

WHEN SHAKESPEARE ERRED

By OTHO B. SENGA

Copyright, 1903, by J. C. McClure.

"That's one time when Shakespeare was in error. He didn't know what he was talking about."

The young man's tone was that of one resenting a personal affront.

His mother smiled indulgentially. "Was that when he said, 'What's in a name?'"

"Of course," with aggrieved emphasis, "I don't want to find fault with you, mother. You're the best mother ever a fellow had, but I'd give my next year's salary, even with the expected increase, if you had named me something else—John or Tom or any other name that is pronounceable."

"I don't like the name of Nebuzaradon myself, but you know, son, you were named for your father's uncle, and he was seventy years old then and immensely wealthy."

"Yes, and he is ninety-four years old now and still immensely wealthy."

"HAPPY, I HAVE A DREADFUL CONFESSION TO MAKE."

I am forced to sign myself 'N. Nye' from the butt of all sorts of ridiculous jokes on account of my name. I will not write out that name, Nebuzaradon Nye, and of course I don't want business men to call me 'Don,' as you do, the only thing I can respond upon—I don't marry a girl with an ordinary name, Mary or Elizabeth or Ann."

His mother laughed teasingly.

"It will be just your fate to fall in love with a girl named Clytemnestra."

Don groaned dismally.

"I wouldn't go within ten miles of her, and if I'm a lonely bachelor all my life you will know it is because no woman will marry me on account of my horrible name. I'm changing the subject. The people who have bought the Parker place are fixing up the grounds beautifully. I noticed as I came by."

"Yes," called there today. Mrs. Holmes told me that her daughter had charge of all that. She is just home from college and is a very charming girl. I'd like you to go with me to call on them. They are likely to prove a very desirable acquisition to the neighborhood."

"I hope the girl's name isn't Clytemnestra," growled Don.

"Really, Don, dear, I didn't question the girl's name, but her mother called her Happy."

"Happy, Happy," he repeated—"that is a very pretty name. Happy Holmes —that is a particularly pleasing combination. I have no objection to becoming on a girl with so attractive a name."

During the long, bright summer Don and his new neighbor were together almost constantly. Happy's name was admirably appropriate. The sunshine in her heart seemed to shed its bright rays on all around her. She had a sweet, frank nature and made no concealment of her pleasure in Don's society. The hitherto unimpressionable Don was soon deeply in love.

"I'm thankful her name isn't Clytemnestra. How mother would enjoy teasing me! There couldn't be a nicer name than Happy, and a more lovely girl doesn't exist!"

Don's detestation of his own name was deep and profound genius. He had a nervous dread that almost amounted to horror whenever he thought of the possible dislike that Happy might have for it.

"If it weren't for that infernal name I'd brace up and ask her to marry me. But what girl would care to have Mrs. Nebuzaradon Nye on her visiting cards? Ever if I used the name Don that would be almost as absurd."

One day he cautiously sounded Happy on the subject of names. "Have you no name other than Happy?" he asked.

"My middle name is Ness," she replied. "I was named by my father's aunt, who is very wealthy, and promised to make me her heiress if I were given her name."

"You should be thankful, your aunt had so pretty a name," he remarked seriously.

Don's eyes were fixed on a brown lock that curled against Happy's white neck, and he failed to notice the pained look that crept over her round cheek.

"Haven't you a middle name?" she asked presently.

"No," Don answered shortly, and abruptly changed the subject.

The name haunted him. "Happy Ness Nye!" he repeated. "Happy Ness Nye! If my name were John or George happiness might be nigh me perhaps."

When a kind reply came for a gift so small a thing as an undesirable name could be certain. Don finally conquered his timidity and actually asked her. However he thought of himself as 'Nebuzaradon' and was insanely happy over the result.

"Don, dear," said Happy, a few days later in the amusement of their first agreement, "do you know what first attracted me to you?"

"My good looks, I suppose," answered Don confidently.

"Nothing of the kind, you vain creature. It was your name."

"My name!" groaned Don despairingly.

"Yes; it is so short and easy and has such a pleasant, debonair sound. I said it over and over again—Don, Don, Don Nye. Yes; I liked your name decidedly, and from that it was not at all a difficult matter to like you."

"Happy, I have a dreadful confession to make. Don isn't really Don. That is only the final syllable of the name. When we are married I'll have to write my name on the records Nebuzaradon Nye."

Happy was silent.

"Don't seem so very dreadful to you, Happy? I am sorry, but I cannot help it. And you don't mind how I have suffered all my life with that abominable name."

"Yes, I do, dear Don," cried Happy, laughing hysterically, "and the fates have surely brought us together, for my name is Nebuzaradon Nye."

That evening Don questioned his mother. "Could you know what Happy's name really is?"

"Yes, I did, but I knew you wouldn't even go to call if you knew that I liked her so well. Happy is just as lovely as if her name were Mary Ann. Besides, Don," with a chuckle-like laugh, "you are both Scripture names."

"Yes," Don said, "great as the wedding cards," exclaimed Don—"Kerenhappuch Ness Holmes and Nebuzaradon Nye! Don't you like it as well?"

"Then you are willing to admit that Shakespeare was right!"

"I admit nothing. He didn't know; he simply stumbled on to the truth. He couldn't know, for he had never seen Happy."

Saved $2,000 on a $1,000 Salary.

Three commercial tourists were swapping yarns around the table at a downtown hotel dining room, and the fun lived to excesses.

"Business has always been liberal in the matter," said the first drummer, "but they got taken in badly once. I represented a man for a long time—part of the state and took on a young fellow from away down east, who put up an elaborate bluff and signed a contract with them for $1,000 and $5 a day expenses. He wouldn't take two dollars for a nickel apiece, but he saved $2,000 that year and started in business for himself and is now one of our competitors."

"Our people don't care what a man's expenses are so long as he sells the goods," said salesman No. 2, "but once I got awfully badly left on a single deal. Last year, about this time, I got in from a short trip through Ohio and Kentucky. It was my regular run, and I did fairly well. When I handed in my expense account, the junior partner said to me, 'See here, old man, I made that trip myself two years ago for $25 less than it cost you, and I charged up a fifty dollar overcoat.'"—Philadelphia Press.

Japanese Wives.

The position of the Japanese wife is not that of equality with her husband. He is the liege lord, to be obeyed by her in the most servile manner. He exacts from her the little attentions that an American woman expects and usually gets from her husband. A frown is so much as a murmur of complaint from his spouse, who must always receive him with a smile and appear as if never have her mind and eyes on his comfort, her eyes and comes he be pleases. When he fares forth socially he does not take her with him; when she entertains in his own house—a rare thing, by the way—madame seldom presents herself unless in some menial capacity. And, indeed, the thing as conjugal love must exist in Japan, it usually escapes the notice of the foreign sojourner, the people considering it vulgar to exhibit emotion of any kind in public. The wife as a social unit being completely submerged, it follows that others of her sex must take her place socially. Hence the office the geisha girls play an important role.—Jesse Trench in Smart Set.

Unsocial Seats on Horses.

The strangest sequence of the average sized team of horses and the strain on the horses to draw a heavy load over stones is the cut of a deep rut, hole or over many other avoidable obstacles are often greater than to draw the same load on smooth ground for the horses.

It would be a small estimate to say a careless driver strains his team in 1,000,000 twenty times a day.

If the driver prevents straining his horses twenty-times each day he will save them 1,000 yards of unnecessary pulling and in the 300 working days of the year 300,000 yards will be saved in 1,000,000 years, nearly 1,000 miles.

With proper judgment and carefulness the driving at the end of the five years will have, in place of a team of weak, overworked, lousy horses, a team of healthy and strong ones.

From a business point of view, will it not pay any horse owner, driver or teamster to be careful and considerate and to avoid all unnecessary strains on horses?—Our Dumb Animals.

The Story of a Discovery.

How many valuable inventions have been the result of pure accident, while in other cases men have puzzled their brains with study for a lifetime and brought forth nothing!

It happened one night that a big starch factory on the banks of the Lehigh, near Bethlehem, took fire, and great puddles of starch and water were left outside.

Some calico printers who had been out all night and were quite tipsy came along toward morning, and one of them stumbled into one of the puddles. He found it so sticky that all his clothes stuck to him, and that he had to stay in bed next morning till his wife took and cleaned them out.

The man knew from his trade that the starch and water had formed a very powerful and valuable gum. He went back to the place of the fire and investigated, and the result was the discovery of the adhesive gum now used in sticking postage stamps and which has made many rich. But temperance societies need not know it.—Boston Globe.

A Vivid Imagination.

A furniture dealer tells a little story that shows how some people are constituted. A lady ordered an elegant easy chair of a peculiar kind. It was made and sent to her house. She examined it carefully and critically, finally remarking that it suited her exactly in other respects—it was too soft. She sent the chair back to be made a little harder. A week later found it in the shop and put aside. Nothing was done to it. After a lapse of about a week the chair was sent out again. The lady again examined it and how found it too hard. She was very sure that when she had so much to get an article for her own comfort she wanted it just right, so she sent it back to the shop for another change. The chair was again put aside for a week or ten days and sent out for the third time, without any alteration. This time it was just right. It took the chair, paid for it and was sorry it had not suited her at first. The poor woman never knew that the chair had not been changed a particle.

Deceptions of Wild Birds.

Falcons, like many other species can compress their features and look very slim if they think it necessary to do so. As to the owls, they can bump up into any position they think most desirable. It is useless to look for absolute self preserving traits in any of the family kept in zoological collections, for the birds are accustomed to the large numbers of people passing and repassing their cages, and they soon find out they treat the whole matter with perfect indifference. They know that at a certain time their food will be brought them and that they are otherwise perfectly safe. Then the raptores of the wild state have been known to plumage like the bloom on a bunch of grapes which is not often seen when in captivity.

An Elephant Story.

An elephant train was on its way from Lucknow to Seetapore, and one elephant, becoming lame, knelt down and refused to go on. The elephant next in the column stopped of its own accord and was driven on ever turned back and began without instructions to remove some part of the load, the instances of aid rendered by birds to others in distress may also be found, showing that the instinct of sympathy exists and takes form in action when the cause of the sufferings are such that the fellow bird can understand and see its way to remedy.—London Spectator.

Novel Funeral Instructions.

Curious instructions as to the manner of her burying were left behind by an old lady at Bridport, England. At her funeral, she directed, should be attended by six of the best horsed coaches Bridport could produce, and another direction was that after the interment the funeral party should repair to the best Tory tavern in Oldham, there to be served with the best repast the house would afford, which was to be supplied by a Tory landlord and served by Tory waiters.

Brought Him Back to Earth.

He—What name shall I invent for them, dearest—shall it be Cupid, that in a single word can express all my love, all my heart, all my soul, all my passion, all— She (exceedingly uncomfortable)—Well, John, what's the matter with Jane? Isn't she pretty? I always been good enough for me, and I thought it ought to be good enough for you.

Covered the Case.

Old Practitioner—Well, how did you succeed with your first diagnosis? Did you follow my advice? Young Doctor—I think I did, sir. I told the patient that he was suffering from a combination of liver, stomach, heart, lung and brain trouble. O. P.—Good! No chance of a mistake there.

Willing Acquiescence.

"You must not expect to give up my girlhood's ways all at once," said the happy bride.

"Oh, I won't," he replied. "I hope you'll keep right on taking an allowance from your father just as if nothing had happened."

An Ex-Convict.

Jolkieg—I once heard a man say that he would rather be an ex-convict than anything else he could think of. Polkey —The idea! How eccentric! Jolkieg—Not at all. The man was in the penitentiary for life.

A Misnomer.

Cobwigger—Look here! Did you break that rubber plant? Peddler—That ain't no rubber plant. I pulled at it till all the leaves came out, and it didn't stretch a bit.—Judge.

No Such Thing As Luck

In Successful Decorating

Successful decoration must be the outcome of study—of thought rather than of mere chance.

In the chance room there will surely be something wrong.

Possibly the color. Perchance Drawing — Likely both.

Whether Chamber, Drawing Room, Living Room, Library or Den, the room must be treated with thought of surroundings, of furniture of complexion, of lighting, of size.

The environment of a room with North or East exposure must not be blue, while either West or Southern exposure may use blue to advantage

How about Crimsons, Greens and Browns—when may these colors be used—just ask your decorator, if he is worthy the name he has an tell you.

We solicit your test of our ability on this or other decorative subjects,

INTELLIGENCER JOB OFFICE

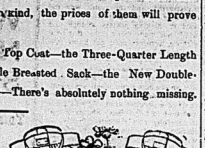
FOR CHEAP AND ARTISTIC WORK.

The Store For Quality

This store excels not only in quality, but variety as well—never has it been able to show what it does to-day, and notwithstanding the fact that the clothes that wear the Quick & Robertson label are the uncommon kind, the prices of them will prove the greatest surprise of all.

The Rain Coat—the Top Coat—the Three-Quarter Length Overcoat—the New Single Breasted Sack—the New Double-Breasted Sack, are all here—There's absolutely nothing missing.

Easter Clothes



Naturally we are very proud of our Boys' Clothing Department. The showing we make for Easter is extraordinary—it is unusual, not only in wideness of variety and exclusiveness of style, but in lowness of prices—quality as it always has been is paramount

Suits for young men receive particular attention—our showing is so entirely different—the garments equal in style, individuality, and material the output of the foremost tailors, and our prices are less than HALF.

The Finest Haberdashery for Men and Boys.

This department is a complete store in itself—exclusiveness is just as possible, if not a little more so here than it is in smaller establishments.

We have it and our Up-to-Date methods of merchandising enables us to assure it to all without extra charge—our prices are regulated by quality only, and WE WILL SAVE YOU MONEY.

An Unusual Showing of Spring Hats.

This department can be depended upon, not only for quality and fairness of prices, but as a place where the newest creations will be shown as soon as they are issued.

In its exhibition of the spring styles will be found the Christys', Barrington and Raven blocks in soft and stiff hats at $1, $1.50, $2.00, and $2.50.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

MORE THAN QUEEN'S LAST NIGHT

There was a very good attendance at the Carman opera house last night, when the costume play, "More than Queen," was presented by a capable company. The play deals with an episode in the life of the First Consul and his wife, Josephine, the same having been admirably treated by the author, Emile Bergerat. Mr. William Humphrey, as Napoleon, and Miss Anne Sutherland, as the lonely and wronged Josephine, were excellent in their respective parts, while the support was quite up to the mark. The scenery and costumes were splendid. It was a theatrical event of more than ordinary excellence for this city.

THE GOVERNOR'S SON.

The Son Colson's everlasting musical comedy success, "The Governor's Son," by George M. Cohan, and under the direction of Mr. Fred Niblo, will be presented and enlivened by a strong cast, superb costumes, brilliant musical numbers and everything that goes to make up a gilt-edge production, at the Carman opera house on Tuesday, March 29. It has been a case of "standing room only" everywhere. The chorus of singing beauties, carefully selected, in voice and action, is one of the best features. Other songs and numbers are introduced, and many of the old songs are retained. The special company is equipped to present the play in any of the best ever organized. It includes thirty-six clever people and a talented chorus of singing beauties." The production is artistic, the performance clever and know their little book. You get the "goods" and your theatrical appetite is satisfied.

Disturbed the Hornerites.

The leader of the Hornerite meetings, which are being held in the Masonic building, reports to the police that the meeting last evening was much disturbed by a party who came in under the influence of liquor. The party will have to answer to his conduct before the Magistrate.

EVERYONE WITH SORE THROAT

Should know how quickly Nerviline relieves. We recommend Nerviline very highly for sore throat." writes Mr. R. McKenzie, of St. George. "I once had a very sore throat and my chest was full of cold and soreness. Every cough hurt me. I cured myself quickly by rubbing my chest and throat vigorously with Nerviline and using it also as a gargle. I believe Nerviline to be the best general remedy for emergency sickness that one can get. We have used it for twenty years in our house." Price 25c.

Sports and Pastimes

SPORTING NOTE AND COMMENT.

The question of a lacrosse team for the city this summer, is being quietly discussed, and there seems a likelihood that we will have one provided a suitable, manager can be found.

The trouble with a Belleville lacrosse team seems to be that it requires its manager to be at the same time its "angel," inasmuch as he is called upon to cough up the money necessary for out-of-town trips, etc., and take chances on getting it back from the home gate receipts. Whether or he breaks even or not depends largely on circumstances.

The above, we have been told, is the way things have been run in Belleville in the past. It is not a good way, and a better would not be hard to find. The proper course is to form a club, composed of non-playing as well as playing members, and the annual membership fee, it seems reasonable to suppose, would be found amply sufficient, together with the gate receipts, to cover expenses.

There should be such a club in this city, which, for its size, is as good a sporting centre as any in Ontario. In days gone by sport flourished here; Belleville baseball and lacrosse teams more than held their own with the best teams of other places. Why not again?

In nearly every other place in Ontario the lacrosse players and lovers are getting together. In this city, with local material on every corner, everybody seems to be waiting for something to turn up. A little healthy sport is necessary, to the well-being of every properly constituted young man—and young woman, for the lie old verse about Satan and idle hands. It seems to be up to somebody to get busy and drive up a little of his valuable time to get the ball started rolling. Again we ask, who will be sufficiently enough to do it, for the good of the rising generation and the honor of the town?

A MONEY SAVING HINDE.

The Oak Hall expects (as soon as weather permits) to do the largest spring business they have ever done, for fortune to have, and the money saving prices on our new spring clothing are such that will tempt many to spend your money with us. Suits that you cannot get to pay $2.50 and $3 for are here for $5.00, higher grades in proportion. Buy your Easter suit at the Oak Hall.

A Skating Rink Suit.

Mr. J. Gilmour, clerk in the local branch of the Merchants' Bank, has issued a writ through his solicitors, Messrs. Porter & Carnew, against Richard Gilmour, claiming $500 for damages for injuries alleged to have been received on the 7th inst. by sharing the ice on the occasion of the recent skating tournament in Brockville and Belleville. He was acting as goal umpire and, it is alleged, struck his knee against a water tap.

An Easter Hat.

Daniel J. Sully, on the day of his confession to the Board of Trade, lunched at the Chicago Club. He wore a new derby hat, for he had been pretty severely mauled by the police in the course of his arrest and subsequent handcuffing. He wore the same hat you had on this morning, and a carpenter said to Mr. Sully, with a smile:

"No," the broker admitted, and he went on:

"Now I'll tell you of appropriate and inappropriate clothing about a hat and about Easter.

"Two women shook hands warmly after church on an Easter Sunday morning, and while they conversed about the sermon they conversed myself with their bright eyes.

"'How charming you look, Easter hat,' said the first woman.

"'Oh, do you think so?' said the other.

"'Yes, indeed. It looks almost as well as it did last year.'"

Mal de Mer.

Seth Low, who is in Rome, narrated recently to an American a good deal of the experience of sea travel in rough winter weather.

"When you cross the ocean in December," he said, "you don't go. Low, you are apt to be awakened in the middle of the night by the plaintive voice of the steward outside the door, moaning:

"'Mr. Low, mammam, my dinner won't stay swallowed.'"

MAY DO.

Will be a good month to go in St. Louis World's Fair, the great $50,000,000 Exposition. The Grand Trunk will be the route, and from Belleville will sell 15 day tickets for $22 00; thirty days for $29 35. Do not forget such rare offer, and address Detroit and Chicago and intermediate Canadian stations.

The truthfulness of what a man says doesn't always depend on the amount of noise he makes in saying it.

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

NEWS FROM OTHER LANDS.

(Communicated.)

It is a splendid fact that the precincts of the Washington Capitol have been purified of the sale of liquor. There is now not a single bar in the building, while a few years ago several to one were devoted to the purpose. The remaining one or last year has only recently been removed.

From an Irish journal we quote the following: "Judge Bentzel, in sentencing a prisoner at the Quarter Sessions, said: This fine young man and brave soldier I have to send to a felon's cell for a brutal crime, committed through the influence of drink. He was sent because the drink met him wherever he turned his face. This temptation was with the full approval of the Government and Parliament, and the unanimous approval of the Church of Christ. Every crime in my present list is from drink."

The people of Germany have lately taken up the alcohol question with an energy excelled by no other people in the world. The Imperial Health Office at Berlin is scattering temperance literature against the use of alcohol as a beverage. Count Douglas, brother-in-law of the Emperor, is one of the first temperance workers in the country.

Lights in the universities are also helping in the movement.

Read to-day what the Montreal Tele: Supply Co. says. H. F. Marshall says: "We have been using Lesaire Phenix for some months. At first we thought it too expensive, but after we have experimented on it until we found a wonderful saving in it on our washing is costing us much less than before, and the work is more satisfactory; we can recommend it to any laundryman that wants to increase his business by turning out good work." Always experiment and see how little you can use. 23-25

Case Was Settled.

In the case of Jeremiah Vanzuman, of Frankford, who was charged before Magistrate Deroche with assaulting Alexander Patterson with retaining some chattels the property of Mrs. Mary Harper, a settlement was reached after some evidence had been taken. His worship has now returned the property, and a note which the woman held against Patterson, for $20. The settlement was satisfactory to both parties.

Special Salvation Services.

Two colored young ladies, the Misses Jones, whose home is in Syracuse, N.Y., have for the past three evenings been conducting special song services in the Salvation Army barracks. They are both beautiful singers, their voices blending in sweet harmony. The barracks last evening was well filled with attendants, who were pleased and no doubt profited.

FRUIT GROWERS' MEETINGS

On Friday, the 1st of April, 1904, the Belleville District Fruit Growers' Association will hold a forenoon and afternoon meeting at the nursery and orchard of Mr. F. W. Gurley, Dundas St., Belleville, at 2.30 p.m., when Mr. J. J. Harbor, a western fruit grower, and Mr. F. E. Gurley, from the Fruit Division, Ottawa, will give practical demonstrations and information in pruning, spraying and other branches of orchard work. On the evening of the 1st of April, commencing at 8 o'clock, these gentlemen will address a public meeting in the City Hall, Belleville, and will answer any questions on fruit matters. The public are cordially invited to both meetings, which are free to everyone.

LATEST WAR NEWS.

THE INTELLIGENCER'S AFTERNOON DESPATCHES ARE TWELVE HOURS IN ADVANCE OF THE TORONTO MORNING PAPERS.

Russian Cruiser, not Torpedo-Boat, Blown UP at Port Arthur on March 16—Diplomats Believe That China Will Enter the Lists Against Russia at First Opportunity.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Berlin, March 24.—The Schlesische Zeitung announces that it was not a Russian torpedo boat destroyer that was blown up by a floating torpedo in the harbor of Port Arthur on March 16, but the armoured cruiser Bayarni. Most of the entire crew of 700, according to the Zeitung were killed.

London, March 24. — Pessimistic talk is rife among leading diplomats, and in news despatches from all capitals of the continent there is expressed fear regarding the impending tension which is developing between China and Russia.

Reports in Berlin and Paris produce the belief in spite of China's protestations of neutrality the Government of China is awaiting an opportunity to wage hostilities.

Horrendous exchanges are said to have taken place between the Russians and the French Governments, on what action the French would pursue in the event of Chinese intervention.

TERRACE COLLAPSED ON GREAT ST. JAMES ST.

BAD LONG BEEN UNTENANTED—BELONGED TO DAVOE ESTATE.

Situated on Great St. James street is a rough-cast containing seven dwellings for families, but owing to its dilapidated condition, the place had not been tenanted for some time. Last evening the residents of that locality were startled by hearing a loud noise, the cause of which was soon determined. The greater portion of the terrace had collapsed, filling the street with debris. Mr. E. Rutter lives in a house adjoining the property and some damage was occasioned to his house by the collapse. It is thought that a large accumulation of wet snow on the roof caused the trouble. The property belonged to the late Mr. Wm. Davoe. Had any pedestrian or vehicle been passing at the time the result would have in all probability, been serious.

ESCHOL SELLERS.

The Original of the Hero of Mark Twain's "Gilded Age."

The real name of the hero of "The Gilded Age" was Escbol Sellers, and he was an inventor and an active promoter very well known in the early days of the new west. His father was one of the first locomotive builders in the United States, working at Philadelphia. Escbol Sellers and Charles Dudley Warner occupied adjoining houses some years ago when "The Gilded Age" was written. Sellers at that time was developing a coal field near Shawneetown, Ill., which was then and is still known as Sellers' Landing. He was also interesting himself in reverse-forward largely used in making paper out of Indian weed pulp. He was also experimenting with a steam locomotive conceived the idea that he was a typical visionary dreamer. He therefore suggested the name of Escbol Sellers for the hero of "The Gilded Age." and Mark Twain was delighted, believing it to be fictitious. One of the first copies of the book happened to be sent to Escbol Sellers, who went at once to Hartford and explained the publishers. A compromise was effected by which the publishers paid Sellers $5,000 for damages and cut all the Escbol Sellers memorial from the book and substituting that of Mulberry. Escbol Sellers died at a very advanced age, and his latest home was Missionary ridge, near Chattanooga.

DOING ONE'S BEST.

It Is a Good Character Forming Habit, If to Catch.

This habit of always doing one's best enters into the very marrow of one's character, and affects one's bearing, one's self possession. The man who does everything to a finish has a feeling of confidence in himself that easily throws off his balance. He has nothing to fear, and he can look the world in the face without the least consciousness that he has not put shoddy into anything he has had "nothing to do with shams and that he has always done his level best. The sense of efficiency, of thoroughness in one's craft, of being equal to any emergency, the consciousness of possessing the ability to do anything one undertakes, or else soul satisfaction which a light hearted, slipshod worker never knows.

When a man feels throbbing within him the power to do what he undertakes as well as it can possibly be done, and all his faculties say "Amen" to what he is doing and the undivided approval to his efforts—this is happiness, this is success. Contentment is the power that sparks the faculties to their fullest development. It is the sense of satisfaction in one's physical forces, and this very growth, the consciousness of an expanding personality and of a broadening horizon gives an added satisfaction beyond the power of words to describe. It is a realization of nobility, the divinity of the mind.—Success.

Stop Understood.

Mr. Misfit—It's no use trying to explain things to some people. They don't understand scientific terms. No, there isn't, Mrs. Misfit—Oh, yes, I can, Charles! Everybody knows that. Here blames his father and mother for, and everything else he blames the wife and children for!

Foreshadowed.

He—If I were suddenly to lose all my money would you marry me just the same? She—Not quite the same, dear. We should have to invite a few hundred more to bring us presents.

A Hard Hint.

Customer—What sort of a chicken do you call this? Waiter—That, sir, is, I believe, a Plymouth Rock. Customer—Ah! I'm glad it has some historic interest. I thought it was just an ordinary cobblestone.

You will never get on the sunny side by waiting for the world to turn round.

RAILWAY AMENDMENTS

Member For East York Introduces Changes to the Act.

Waste Independent Telephones to Have Access to Stations, to Bring Express Companies Under the Act and in Uniform Passenger Rate of Two Cents for Mile—Cigarette Bill Meets With Pretty Hostile Criticism.

Ottawa, March 24.—Yesterday afternoon Mr. W. F. Maclean introduced his amendment to the Railway Act and it was read a first time.

In his amendment Mr. Maclean seeks to place independent telephone companies in a position to enter railway stations without paying damages involved for a violation of contract rights. These are the words of the clause:

"And such compensation shall be limited to the direct and the immediate local damages actually suffered by reason of such construction and operation and maintained by the railway company at such station and premises and not from any cause, matter or business extending beyond the same."

Other Amendments Suggested.

Mr. Maclean also embodied as amendments to the Railway Act three other important modifications of the measure passed at the last session of Parliament. He proposes to bring the express companies of Canada under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission, to insert a clause granting a uniform rate of two cents a mile and to deprive the chairman of the Railway Commission of the power now vested on him of deciding independently of the other two commissioners all cases involving points of law.

Steamboat Inspection Act.

Leighton McCarthy introduced a bill to amend the steamboat inspection act. The object of the amendment is to increase the standard of engines, so that American engineers on American tug boats which come over here will have to qualify before filling positions, to the exclusion of duly certified Canadian engineers.

The amendment will apply to engineers employed on dredges.

The Alleged Cigarette Evil.

A score of members of the Woods Christian Temperance Union sat in the Speaker's Gallery and listened to the debate on a motion proposed by Mr. Maclaren of Brockington, favoring a "bill to prohibit the importation and sale of cigarettes." E. D. Ader, combating the charge that cigarette smoking is a fruitful cause of indigestion, politely intimated to the ladies that more indigestion is caused by bad cooking than by the cigarette. He advised them to devote their energy to the home and to the school, through which more good could be accomplished than by efforts to obtain legislation, and somewhat similar views were expressed by the Prime Minister, who did not forget to remind the ladies that the anti-tobacco ing is a highly important requisite in feminine accomplishments.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated that the resolution went altogether too far. It had yet to be shown that cigarette smoking is injurious to growing people, and to pass legislation that would reach where there is no evil would not be advisable. He unceremoniously threw the weapon of the cigarette evil on the legislators, to whose sphere he said the question belonged.

R. L. Borden, while not at all unsympathetic with the movement for the suppression of the cigarette evil, did not think that the legislation proposed would strike at the root of the evil.

By a remarkable coincidence, the hour for the day's private intimation arrived just as the House exhausted its supply of eloquence. Members fled from the scene and the great joy of recording their vote in a division, on Mr. Maclaren's resolution gave to the foot of the list of public bills and resolutions. It may be reversed this session, but the chances are against it.

Cash Bits at Midland.

The evening session of the House was devoted to a recital of the facts surrounding the recent purchase of a site in the town of Midland for a block occupied by the Government, and in connection with which it had previously come out that Mr. McCarthy of North Simcoe or his firm received a handsome retainer, while George Lloyd, Liberal candidate in East Simcoe at the last election, had also been in on the deal to the extent of $400.

The member for North Simcoe declared the charge to be "as false as the honorable gentleman is namow as small," and further intimated to Mr. Bennett as the "conduit pipe through which the garbage of political scandal mongers is conveyed to the public." Mr. McCarthy declared that the property was sold by the municipality and not by the Government.

Bennett's Sharp Reply.

Mr. Bennett sharply replied, declaring that the member for North Simcoe had been retained by parties in Midland, in Collingwood, in Parry Sound and elsewhere, because he had a pull with the Government to get for private as opposed to public interests. Parliament was sinking to a low depth when members acting as solicitors went scouring around the department charging exorbitant fees for their services which ought, in justice to their constituents, be rendered freely.

Mr. Cowan of South Essex followed with a hot criticism of the member for East Simcoe, and in justification of the cause of Leighton McCarthy.

For Easter Holidays.

Ottawa, March 24.—Parliament will adjourn on Wednesday, 30th March, until Tuesday, April 5th, for the Easter holidays.

AN ELUSIVE MAJORITY

Ontario Government's Lease of Life at the Speaker's Mercy.

Explanation re. Mr. Conmee's Land Grant in Port Arthur—Mr. Sinclair Censures Bowman Not Ready to Answer Questions Concerning Algoma Central—Matters Left of Loan Companies—Motion for Private Bills on Friday Next.

Toronto, March 24.—It may be found that a third member of the Government is personally interested in the legislation now before the House, to guarantee a loan of $2,000,000 to the collapsed Sault Ste. Marie industries. Mr. Dunlop promises to ask a question couched in the following terms: Is the member for South Bruce, H. E. Cross, a creditor of the allied companies of Sault Ste. Marie, or any of them, to whom the Government proposes to guarantee a loan of $2,000,000? If the question is answered in the affirmative, the entire Government majority will, in all probability, prevail, of course, the Speaker rules that the independence of Parliament act prevents the three interested members from voting or taking part in the discussion when the bill comes up for its second reading.

Mr. Conmee's Grant.

In reply to Mr. Smyth (Algoma), Hon. Mr. Davis said the Government, by Order-in-Council, granted 100 feet of land fronting on Algoma and Cameron streets, Port Arthur, to the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of the Diocese of Peterboro for hospital purposes. The church and Mr. Conmee paid $600.

In reply to Mr. Whitney, the Minister of Education said the fee received from candidates writing on departmental examinations amounted to $14,441, and the total cost to the Department $30,000, thus making a deficiency of $15,561.60. The services of the examiners, with incidental expenses, cost $19,014.

Live Stock at St. Louis.

Mr. Dryden told Mr. Whitney that it was not the intention of the Government to appropriate any sum to-wards defraying the expenses of Ontario exhibitors of live stock at St. Louis, as the Dominion Government did so.

Mr. Whitney the Attorney-General said H. J. E. Sissons, appointed master of titles for the Sturgeon River district, was a barrister, and he assumed that he is practicing. The duties of the office under the act does not prevent a master of titles from practicing as a barrister.

Cosmos and Bowman.

Mr. Whitney also desired to know the exact nature of the securities held by the Cosmos and Bowman in the Soo enterprises, and was informed that the Government had no further information on the subject beyond the explanation already given.

Mr. Hanna had an enquiry addressed to Mr. Conmee if he and Mr. Bowman began an action to enforce a mechanics' lien for upwards of $60,000 against the Sault Ste. Marie, Algoma Central, and for a judgment for $100,000 against, etc. Both members had not seen the question and would read to give an answer.

Hon. Mr. Stratton informed Mr. Gamey that the Government had no information on Saturday Night or its scripture articles on provincial incorporations. The incorporation articles were paid for at $150 each.

Assets of Loan Companies.

In answer to a question by Mr. Gamey, Hon. Mr. Wilson said: The Department of Assurance examines the assets of the loan companies, obtaining licenses each year. The practice requires a personal visit to the examination of the assets of loan companies. So far as is known, there is no loan company at present carrying as assets large blocks of stock of any Soo Railway company.

Third Readings.

The following bills were read a third time: To amend the act respecting religious institutions (Gibson); respecting the Presbyterian church in Canada (Davis); to consolidate the floating debt of the City of Woodstock and authorize it to consolidate a portion of the debt of the township of Scarboro (Foster); to confirm by-law No. 699 of the Township of Cornwall (McCart); respecting the Kingston Electric Railway (Fenwe); respecting the construction of local improvements within the Town of North Toronto (St. John).

Settlers' Privileges.

Mr. Mahaffy moved: That in the opinion of this House, settlers in the districts of Nipissing, Algoma, Sections of the Province should be allowed in addition to their present privileges, and without the use of scrip, to take, hire and cut for their own use and benefit, timber for the immediate use of themselves, or their families, for food only, and not for the purposes of sale or traffic, during the months of September and October in each year. That no fee should be charged to settlers for permits.

The Attorney-General said every step that was taken should be in the direction of increased restrictions, looking to the protection of game. If the resolution were passed, it would result in the wholesale slaughter of deer.

Mr. Reed supported the resolution, which was withdrawn, after some discussion.

Another Cosmos-Bowman Return.

Mr. Whitney moved for a return giving the nature and description of the securities held by Messrs. Cosmos and Bowman, members of the House, referred to by the Attorney-General in his answer to a question, as appears by the votes and proceedings of the Ontario Assembly, March 16, 1904. He was also granted an order for a return of any investigation made by the late J. J. Hawkhurst, on an investigation made by him into alleged timber limits in Rainy River South, in 1901.

Pettypiece's Railway Taxation Bill.

The Premier asked Mr. Pettypiece to allow his Railway Taxation Bill to stand.

Mr. Whitney said the matter was important, and the manner in which it was dealt with last year was open to criticism. He promised Mr. Pettypiece every assistance in pushing the second reading of the bill, in the hope that its good features might be retained.

Mr. Pettypiece was disappointed, he said, but the Premier had asked him to allow it to stand, and he had acceded on the understanding that it would be considered on Monday. He intended to press the bill as far as the House would allow him.

Toll-Decking Bill.

Dr. Routledge's bill to prohibit the decking of horses was moved to its second reading. It was enumerated by the committee by leaving it to Toronto and Hamilton to pass a law. Later Dr. Routledge asked leave to withdraw the bill.

Barbers' Improving Shops.

Mr. Joynt moved the second reading of his bill to amend the Public Health Act, improving the conditions governing barber shops, but Hon. Mr. Stratton showed that a regulation adopted by the Provincial Board of Health fully covered the case. Mr. Joynt withdrew his bill.

In moving the second reading of his Marriage Act amendment, Dr. Rosamond explained that the object of a measure to compel the publication of banns of marriage of persons residing outside the province in two insertions of a paper in which the marriage is to be performed.

Hon. Mr. Stratton suggested sending the bill to the Legal Committee, which was done.

Coroners' Inquests.

Dr. Reaume moved the second reading of a bill declaring that in case of a death arising from accident the expenses of a coroner's inquest shall be borne by the municipality in which the accident takes place. The bill went to the Legal Committee.

Get Sodden Increases.

Toronto, March 24.—Some of the high-salaried officials of the Lake Superior Consolidated Company received sudden increases in their salaries for the months of August and September. The Government decided to pay the Soo salaries early in October, but it was not decided yet just when the company decided to give these officials a raise.

Messrs. Ellis, Fleming and Hamilton, solicitors, were not on the pay roll for 1903, but for the last few months in which the Government paid the salaries.

President Shields' account was overdrawn to the extent of about $800.

These were the surprising facts information that came out in the Public Accounts Committee yesterday morning when the Soo payments were under scrutiny. The information was elicited from C. P. Worthington, auditor of the allied companies.

CHINA IS DISSATISFIED.

Resolution U.S. Must Present Immigration Conditions Unchanged.

Washington, March 24.—The State Department has received formal notice from the Chinese Government denouncing the Chinese exclusion treaty, and the present convention will expire Dec. 27.

Such has been done by China in spite of United States assurances that any succeeding convention will be considerably more exacting and exclusive.

Under its terms, six months before the expiration of a period of 10 years from Dec. 27, 1894, if either power be dissatisfied with the treaty it is required to denounce it.

Suicide.

In Canadian Vessels.

Ottawa, March 24.—On the 15th of March last Customs officials at the seaports in British Columbia were advised by the Department that former regulations permitting United States vessels to carry goods of Canadian origin from ports in British Columbia to Dawson by St. Michaels, duty free, were not renewed. This means that goods of Canadian origin to be admitted free of duty into Alaska must be carried in Canadian bottoms or in such vessels as are permitted to participate in the coasting trade of Canada. It is said that there is now no difficulty in getting Canadian vessels to carry the trade.

Crushed by a Beam.

Norwich, March 24.—While moving a barn on Monday four men were crushed by a falling beam. Joseph McVickers received injuries in the head that will likely prove fatal. William Hill was injured in the back and hip, and is also in a critical state as can be expected. John Hill and Steven Cullen were slightly injured slightly, or at least not seriously.

Editor Gets 2 Months.

Montreal, March 24. — Edouard Charbert, publisher of the defunct French Sunday paper, Des Debats, was sentenced to three months in prison yesterday after conviction of having libelled Rev. Father Adam. Charbert was recently given a good security for his good conduct for twelve months.

SUNLIGHT SOAP IS RECOMMENDED BY THOSE WHO KNOW.

"Housekeeper" wishes to know the best soap for washing floors and white things in general. To such we would say, we understand no other question. Housekeeper, for I can say unhesitatingly that the very greatest satisfaction has been the out-come of the use of Sunlight Soap in this respect. It makes and keeps all cottons and linens as a beautiful white color, with a remarkably small amount of labor. Follow the directions on the wrapper.—Domestic Science Teacher, The Leather Gazette.

PORT ARTHUR BOTTLED

Seven Merchant Steamers Sunk at Harbor's Mouth.

Three Hundred Japanese Officers and Blue-jackets Volunteered For the Dangerous Duty—Admiral Togo Reports the Result of the Fifth Bombardment of Port Arthur on March 23

—Drew Out Russian Vessels.

London, March 25.—The Daily Telegraph publishes a despatch from its Tokio correspondent, under yesterday's date, which says:

"On the night of March 22 the Japanese fleet renewed the attempt to bottle up Port Arthur. Sixteen warships escorted seven merchant steamers to the mouth of the harbor, and, under cover of the bombardment, the steamers run in and were sunk in desired positions. Three hundred Japanese officers and bluejackets volunteered for this duty. An official report is expected this evening."

Drew Out Russian Vessels.

Tokio, March 25.—Vice-Admiral Togo's report of the fifth attack on Port Arthur, which was made on March 23, reached Tokio last night, and is as follows:

"The combined fleet acted according to the plan arranged. Two flotillas of destroyers were outside Port Arthur, as instructed, from the night of the 21st until the morning of the 23rd. Although during this time our destroyers were under the fire of the enemy, they sustained no damage. The main fleet arrived off Port Arthur at 8 o'clock on the morning of the 22nd. It despatched a part of the fleet in the direction of Pigeon Bay, and ordered the battleships Fuji and Yashima to make an indirect bombardment against the inner side of the port. During the bombardment the enemy's ships gradually came out of the harbor, and at the time when the indirect bombardment stopped, which was about 2 o'clock, the number of Russian ships was five battleships, four cruisers and several destroyers. We believed the enemy was trying by making a movement of their fleet, to draw us near the forts. The enemy's ships shelled us indirectly, and many of their shells fell near the battleship Fuji, but our ships sustained no damage. About 3 o'clock our vessels withdrew off the port."

To Drop Dynamite.

New York, March 25.—Commissioned, he says, by the Japanese Government to experiment with war balloons and airships, and if possible to develop his plans of dropping dynamite on warships, Santos Dumont, the Brazilian aeronaut, is on the Kronprinz Wilhelm of the North German Lloyd Line, speeding eastward upon his secret mission for the Mikado, says The American. Prior to leaving this city on Monday, Santos Dumont confided his purpose to friends, and said he intended to proceed directly to Japan. He will take one of his airships stored in Paris.

Japs Will Lead in China.

St. Petersburg, March 25.—Although slow to believe that Japan deliberately contemplates a violation of her pledge to restrict neutral Chinese territory, the reports received at the Ministry of War are so specific that they compel consideration. The presence of disguised Japanese soldiers acting as spies along the Shanhaikwan road has been established, and Russian agents report there is every indication of an intended landing on the west coast of the Gulf of Liaotung.

PASSED TO THE BEYOND

Sir Edwin Arnold, Author of the Light of Asia, Dead.

Continued His Literary Labors Until Almost the Day of His Death—Suffered From Partial Paralysis During Recent Years—For Thirty Years Member of London Daily Telegraph Staff—Honors Conferred Upon Him.

London, March 25.—Sir Edwin Arnold, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., poet, orientalist and journalist, died here yesterday morning in his 72nd year. Although suffering of late years from partial paralysis, his condition did not become critical until last week, when he gradually lost strength. He had a serious relapse early yesterday morning, from which he did not rally, and passed peacefully away at 10.30 o'clock.

Sir Edwin Arnold was born at Gravesend on June 10, 1832, and was the second son of Robert Coles Arnold, J.P., of Hurstcourt, Framfield, Sussex. Educated first at King's school, Rochester, and King's College, London, he passed to University College, Oxford, where he graduated with honors in 1854. In the previous year he won the Newdigate prize for the best English verse on "The Feast of Belshazzar," thus following in the footsteps of another great poet of Oxford, Dean Milman ago—Alfred, Lord Tennyson. Upon this graduation he became master of King Edward's school, Birmingham, but in 1856 proceeded to India as principal of the Government Deccan College at Poona, Bombay, where he remained till 1861. It was this appointment which turned his attention to the oriental literature and philosophy, and particularly to the life and teaching of the great Indian prophet, Buddha. The results of these studies bore fruit in his translation of the Buddhist creed, and in his Indian poems—particularly "The Light of Asia," a study of the life of Buddha, which has enjoyed a large measure of popular favor, and of which over one hundred editions have appeared.

In 1861 Arnold returned to England and became a member of the staff of The London Daily Telegraph, with which he remained associated for upwards of thirty years, his editorial contributions alone totalling 8,000 columns. It was his custom to flavor any dull purveyance style of writing that provoked so much mild fun and caused parody at the hands of his contemporary writers and became widely known as "Telegraphese." But his articles met the public taste and were quite a feature of the great daily whose pride it was to boast of "the largest circulation in the City of London," till younger and more lively aspirants pushed it from its throne.

It was in 1879 he issued "The Light of Asia," perhaps his best, certainly his most widely-read book. Among the rewards it brought him was one from the King of Siam, one of the heads of the Buddhist faith, who appointed Sir Edwin an officer of the Order of the White Elephant and grand commander of the Crown of Siam. Other of his works dealing with his Sanscrit studies are "The Indian Song of Songs," "Sadi in the Garden," "The Song Celestial" and "The Light of the World."

In later life he visited Japan and became an enthusiastic admirer of the land of the Chrysanthemum, and his earnest advocacy no doubt tended to create the sympathetic attitude adopted by the British people towards the Britons of the East. In due course he was made a member of the Order of the Rising Sun of Japan, and further cemented the bond by marrying, in 1897, as his troisieme noces, Miss Tama Kurokawa of Sendia, Japan. Sir Edwin was married first in 1854 to Katharine Elizabeth, daughter of the Rev. Thos. Biddulph. She died in 1864 and his second wife, Fannie, daughter of the Hev. W. H. Channing of Boston, Mass., died in 1889. Sir Edwin was a many-sided man, as in his recreations, describing himself as sportsman, yachtsman, traveler and cyclist. The late Queen Victoria, on the occasion of her proclamation as Empress of India, named him a companion of the Order of the Star of India, and in 1888 created him a Knight Commander of the Indian Empire.

Sir Edwin continued his literary labors until almost the day of his death, his last article being one connected with the Russo-Japanese war. Carrying his oriental ideas with him to the last, his body will be cremated in accordance with his own wishes.

To Make Good His Charges.

Brantford, March 25.—The Police Commissioners resumed business yesterday afternoon in the case against P. C. Allan, who is charged with making malicious statements concerning the police management, in the Irena Cole murder. Allan said: "I am guilty of the offence, but I can bring witnesses to prove my statements, but would like counsel at the same time." After considerable discussion, it was decided that Allan be given a chance to make charges of perjury against Chief Vaughan and Sergt. Wallace before the board to-day, and that he be allowed counsel. Allan has been suspended indefinitely.

NEW FISHING REGULATIONS.

It is announced that, as a result of a visit to Ottawa by Mr. Tunstead, the Ontario Fishery Commissioner, new regulations will be promulgated governing fishing in the waters of Ontario. It is stated that "in future no black bass under twelve inches in length can be taken, and the number to be taken in one day by a fisherman may not exceed eight. Formerly the minimum length was ten inches and the maximum number twelve." This is a very good regulation, if practicable. Anglers cannot well prevent a six or ten inch bass from taking the fly, and unless they be compelled under a penalty to return all such fish immediately to the water, the regulation is useless.

What is imperatively demanded as an effective protection to the bass and other fishing in the Bay of Quinte is a stop put to net fishing, which destroys the supply, by taking all kinds of fish, when proceeding to their spawning ground. All other regulations will avail little if this wholesale mode of killing fish be not stopped.

The report also says a change is also made in the close season. In the past the season extended from April 15th to June 15th, but it was found that tons of fish were slaughtered through the ice, either by spearing or by other means, so the close season will now extend from January 1st to June 30th. Fishermen will note that it will be illegal to take black bass until July 1st.

The winter close season is also to be changed, providing for the protection of maskinonge and yellow pickerel or pike.

The new regulation is to prohibit absolutely the sale of bass, maskinonge and brook trout, either by whites or Indians, and the Ontario Council permitting anglers to take fish out of the province will be cancelled.

The penalty for infraction of the new regulations will be a minimum fine of $10, instead of $5 as in the past, and Dominion authority will be conferred on all Provincial fishery overseers.

These new regulations are in the right direction. The question is do they go far enough? Certainly not, so far as they affect the Bay of Quinte. Nothing short of an absolute shutting down upon net fishing will accomplish the desired end of preserving a valuable fishing resort.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Who stole the snow last night?

March has certainly not lived up to its reputation this year, but nobody is complaining.

"A Small Property Owner" writes: "I have heard so many contradictory reports about this year's assessment that I hardly know which to believe. Some say the assessment this year is three mills higher than last year. Please state the facts of the case, and also tell me how much more I will have to pay this year, on an assessment of $1300, than I did last year."

• • •

It is really wonderful, the amount of misinformation one can pick up around Belleville. It was clearly stated in the Intelligencer that the tax rate this year was three-tenths of a mill higher than last year, which means an increase of 30 cents on every thousand dollars of assessment. The tax rate last year was 23 mills; this year it is 23 3-10 mills. The Toronto papers, we notice, have stated that Belleville's tax rate is 23 3-10 mills. This was probably framed in the first instance by a telegraphic error. It is regrettable, however, and will not enhance Belleville's reputation as a cheap place to live in. Our correspondent asks: "How much more will I have to pay this year than last, on an assessment of $1300? Since reading our explanation above he can easily figure it out for himself—thirty-nine cents more, a total of $30 29.

Talking of taxes, there is a point in this connection which it would be well for our City Fathers to take into consideration. The main reason we understand, why Belleville will the time for payment of taxes was that the city might be able to use its own collected tax money to run its municipal affairs, and not have to borrow from the bank and pay 5 per cent. interest. It is hoped to get the taxes nearly in by the summer, and, in order to induce people to pay, the city offers a discount of 2 per cent. for six weeks, 1 per cent. for another six weeks, and par for the next six weeks. This looks like a fair offer, but right here it effectually comes to grief. Large taxpayers, we are told, openly state that they will not draw money from the bank where it draws 3 1-2 per cent. interest to pay taxes and save a discount of 2 per cent. or 1 per cent., so the bulk of the taxes are not likely to be paid till the first of September, anyhow, and the city may be compelled to borrow from the bank as of yore. The aforesaid large taxpayers, it seems to us, forget that by securing a discount of 2 per cent on their tax payments they are getting interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum on their money, but they don't seem to care for that, and openly avow their intention of not paying until September. 1st.

Therefore, the question arises: Would it not be well for the city to increase the rate of discount given for prompt payment? Of course we know that our financial gems should have civic patriotism enough to pay their taxes when due, and thus help along civic affairs, but as very little interest is evidently where money is concerned. It seems to us that the city is up against two propositions, either to increase the rate of discount for prompt payment, so as to meet the rate of interest given by the banks, or else to continue borrowing from the bank for current expenses, and paying the same old 5 per cent. Of the two courses, it seems to us that preference should be given to the former, for a certain amount would be saved, anyhow, and the benefit, whatever it was, would fall to many, and not to one institution. In connection it may be asked, Private corporations give 5 per cent. discount for cash, why should the city not give 3 1-2 or 4?

This gas business is positively getting to be a serious matter. Day after day goes by and there is no perceptible improvement in the situation. Things cannot go on this way much longer. People who use illuminating gas can find a temporary substitute, but people who use fuel gas for manufacturing purposes can find no substitute at all. The question arises: Have the gas works people diagnosed the case correctly?

• • •

Since the above was in type we learn from the Gas Chairman, Ald. Sinclair, that the trouble has probably been located at a place on Pinnacle street where a trench was filled in in a defective manner some time ago. The employees of the gas works are now arranging to put in a supplementary pipe, which, in conjunction with the main, will, it is believed, give a supply large enough for all necessary purposes. By to-morrow it is believed that things will be working to the satisfaction of everybody.

Address on Missions.

A goodly number of Christ Church congregation were present at the weekly Lenten service held last evening in Alberta Hall. After the singing of hymns and prayers, Lt.-Col. Hallwell, of Stirling, gave an interesting address on the subject of Diocesan Missions. The speaker handled the subject well, demonstrating that he had given considerable thought to this portion of the Church's work. The Rector, Rev. W. B. Heeney, presided.

READ IT THROUGH.
"Twould Spoil This Story to Tell It in the Headlines.

To use an eighteenth century phrase, this is an "era tale," it having happened in a small Virginia town in the wake of 1900, it is a story very much of the present. Up to a few months ago Mrs. John E. Harmon, of Mills Station, Va., had no personal knowledge of the rare curative properties of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. "Last January," she says, "my baby took a dreadful cold and at one time I feared she would have pneumonia, but one of my neighbors told me how this remedy had cured her little boy and I began giving it to my baby at once and it soon cured her. I heartily endorse the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for I believe it saved my baby's life." It cannot recommend it too highly or say too much in its favor. I hope all who read this will try it and be convinced as I was." For sale by all druggists.

Surprise Party.

A man's home is his castle; he can therefore surrender it when and to whom he chooses. It was in a very grateful manner that Mr. and Mrs. Simeon Ashley surrendered their home to a band of invaders, armed with baskets filled with good things, on Tuesday evening, March 15th. Mr. Ashley has purchased a farm on the fourth concession of Sidney and moved his family there, and this invasion was intended as a welcome to the neighborhood. Nearly everybody was there, and all gave the newcomers the glad hand of fellowship and the evening passing in an enjoyable manner. Messrs Percival, Oliver and Marvin acted as spokesmen for the party, and in very neat speeches welcomed Mr. and Mrs. Ashley.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Notes from the Jail.

There are at present confined in the jail ten males and three females. Of the former three are to undergo sentences in the Central Prison.

Of the inmates three are confined therein owing to weak intellects, all being men.

One of the inmates, "Jumbo" is a big burly fellow, but is unfortunately somewhat childish. He is, however, a general favorite with the prisoners.

CATARRH IS CERTAINLY CURABLE.

In fact it is one of the most curable diseases if fragrant healing Catarrhozone is used. No matter how long you have suffered with catarrh, you can be perfectly cured by inhaling the antiseptic vapor of Catarrhozone, which strikes at the foundation of the trouble and establishes such a healthy condition in the system that catarrhal germs simply can't exist. "I suffered from catarrh of the nose and throat for years," writes S. H. Downie, of Plattsville, "My nostrils were always stuffed up and I had a most disagreeable, hacking cough. Catarrhozone cured me completely." Catarrhozone never fails. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25 cents.

POTASH MINES.

They Are All in Prussia and Supply the Entire World.

The potash which is dug from the royal Prussian mines, located at Strassfurt, ninety miles from Berlin, is the sole source of the world's supply. Before the mines were discovered the best substitute which could be found for the product was wood ash, such as the southern plantations used in the old days for making lye soap. The Prussian mines are twenty-seven in number and were devoted to the production of salt before rock salt was discovered.

When the new variety of salt was given to the world the Prussian mines were temporarily abandoned, and in a few years a search for rock salt was instituted. The salt was found, but in a badly adulterated condition, and an analysis of the adulterant revealed the fact that it was the most valuable part of the mineral. The potash was at once turned to use as commercial fertilizer.

The mines are controlled by a syndicate. They employ 21,000 men and yield 1,200 car loads a day of potash. Of the entire output 75 per cent is used for agricultural purposes, while the remainder is used for chemical purposes. It is largely utilized in the cranide process of extracting gold from the ore.

MILITARY STORIES.

A Soldier Who Was Punished and a Bugler Who Was Excused.

From one of the French naval ports comes an interesting story of an incident which recently occurred there. A general holding a high command made his appearance suddenly at the barracks of an infantry regiment, which, in obedience to his orders, was promptly drawn up in the yard. Then he explained the reason in a brief address. He said that as he was walking in the town attired in mufti on the previous day a man belonging to the corps, who was the worse for liquor, accosted him rudely and asked him to stand him a drink. "Let him step out of the ranks," he concluded. Immediately a bugler emerged and, saluting, said, "It is I, mon general."

The incident is characteristic, and apropos of it we are reminded of such an adventure which befell a certain French marshal and grandson of Napoleon. He was exasperated at some injustice that had been done him pointed his pistol at the marshal and pulled the trigger, but it did not go off. Without moving a muscle the veteran cried, "Four days in the cells for keeping your arms in a bad state!"

The bugler's honesty can scarcely have failed to be an extenuation of his offense in the eyes of the general.

COINS OF THE PAST.

Gold Pieces That Were Once Common, but Are Now Rarely Seen.

Recent mention of the disappearance of the $2.50 gold piece from circulation and the premium this coin commands as a curio has set many to rummaging in old pocketbooks and bottoms of cash boxes and drawers in search of odd or out of date coins. Some have found a $2.50 piece, but not many. The $3 piece, once quite common, but always a sort of curiosity, is oftener found, and many have specimens of the little gold coins representing 25 cents and 50 cents which were not minted by the government and probably have not so much gold in them as they represent. They used to pass as coin, but were never in general circulation, being so easily lost that they soon became scarce. One of the handsomest coin relics seen is a $10 gold piece bearing the mint stamp of 1799. It is larger than the present $10 piece. The owner has it hung in a bend and wears it as a charm on his watch chain. The owner says he refused an offer of $150 for this relic. The old octagonal $50 pieces were quite common in California in early days, when gold dust was largely used as a circulating medium. They were made of pure gold, and, while they had not the elegant finish of the gold coins minted by the government in these days, many still remember them as the handsomest coins they ever saw. Many people now would consider them handsome on account of the $50 in them.

THE WORD "HUSSAR."

It Is Hungarian and Originally Meant a Freebooter.

Hussar is a Hungarian word meaning originally a freebooter or free lance. These men, strong, active, hardy, accustomed to capture and tame herds of wild horses, were brought into military service by Corvinus, the boy king, in 1462 and became the finest body of light cavalry in the world. The suggested derivation from the Magyar—huszt, twenty, and ar, pay (one horseman raised by twenty families)—is only a fanciful one. The name spread into all armies, and hussars of all nations are distinguished by uniforms of brilliant colors and elaborate ornament. Two characteristics from the dolman and the busby, with its scarlet cloth attachment, a survival of the narrow Magyar bag, which fell over the left shoulder as a protection against sword cuts.

The word dragoon was first used of a regiment of mounted infantry, so called from the dragons or short muskets with which they were armed. The head of a dragon, wrought on the muzzle of the muskets, seemed to spit fire and at one time was depicted on their standard.

After all, water in the gas pipes isn't so bad as gas in the water pipes.

Don't forget the public meeting in the City Hall to-night. Be on hand and hear what the promoters have to say.

A wireless message from Mr. Wm. Johnson says the pilgrims arrived at Athens this morning. He walked up Mars Hill, and for choice give him Taylor's Hill every time. He was much struck, after hearing the people of Athens talk, with the resemblance between their language and that of some singers in Belleville. The Athens people talk in Greek and some of the local vocalists sing in the same sweet old tongue. Curious, isn't it?

The Grit members of the Legislature are said to be in open mutiny. That $2,000,000 Gas guarantee is too much for even the average Grit member's stomach.

With mutiny on one side and the Temperance Bill on the other, Ross seems to be, to use an expressive and rather irreverent phrase, "Between Hades and high water."

Certain ungallant members of the Commons, the Premier among them, told the ladies of the W.C.T.U. deputation that bad cooking caused more indigestion than cigarettes did. It was a cheap and nasty way to get rid of a band of devoted women.

The Trent Valley Canal.

Peterboro, March 25.—The Boards of Trades and Municipalities of Peterboro, Orillia, Midland, Port Hope, Trenton, Lindsay, Belleville and Campbellford had representatives present at the meeting here of the Transportation Commission yesterday. In addition were many independent promoters of the Trent Valley Canal venture, business men, manufacturers from different towns, ship owners, mill owners and others, who control the industrial life of Central Ontario. A ton of data was submitted. The speeches of the various delegates were confined necessarily to the briefest outline of the subject. Little contentious matter developed. Delegates as a whole seemed to think the securing of a verdict that the canal was a commercial possibility to be constructed as rapidly as money could accomplish it was the first object.

Dr. Parkin Talks.

New York, March 25.—Yesterday Dr. Parkin said there were ninety-six scholarships to be distributed in America and Canada. The preliminary examinations would be held on April 13 simultaneously in all the States and provinces.

Toronto, March 25.—Toronto University will present nine candidates for the Rhodes scholarships of 1904. Their names are: E. H. Oliver, B. A., E. H. Paterson, B. A., and H. G. Wallace, B. A. (graduates); G. P. Bryce, P. McGeachen and E. W. Wallace (fourth year); J. F. Boland, R. C. Reade and B. A. Uppshall (third year).

Fatally Injured.

Buffalo, March 25.—William Hyde, 42 years old, who lived at Hamilton, Ont., died at the Emergency Hospital early yesterday morning from injuries received in being run over by a Lake Shore passenger train four months ago.

Five Years For Theft.

Berlin, March 25.—Judge Chisholm yesterday sentenced John Thomer to five years in Kingston Penitentiary on each of four charges of forgery, to run concurrently. Several petitions for leniency were presented.

Flour Mills Shut Down.

Minneapolis, March 25.—Eighteen Minneapolis flour mills shut down yesterday owing to the bad condition of trade.

SURGEONS RESORT TO THE KNIFE

WHEN A SIMPLE HOME REMEDY CURES.

Why do physicians always advise an operation for the cure of hemorrhoids or piles? Are they unanimously instructed by the diets of operating surgeons, to be slowly assert and maintain that all other treatments are merely palliatives, and that the knife affords the only cure of merit?

There could be no greater fallacy, as the records of countless cases of piles are permanently cured by the use of Pyramid Pile Cure, which is in suppository form, is applied directly to the source of the complaint, and removes the cause, which an operation does not.

"I have been a sufferer from piles for over forty years, and after trying everything I could hear or read of, without benefit or relief, I came to the conclusion to give Pyramid Pile Cure a trial, and I can truly say it has given me entire satisfaction; it is a wonderful remedy. The bleeding has entirely ceased, the protruding has stopped, there is no longer any itching, and I feel no swelling of the parts; in fact I feel like a new man."

"I had to wear a truss for several years to keep the bowel up, but I have now discarded it, after using six boxes of Pyramid Pile Cure. I think after forty years of suffering, the six boxes was a small amount to make such an agreeable change, as I was unable to do any work that required stooping in the last eight years. I recommend Pyramid Pile Cure to every one with whom I come in contact, as I consider it beyond price." (Signed) W. Ivy, Confederate Soldiers' Home, Richmond, Va.

We vouch for the truth and accuracy of the above testimonial, and urge all sufferers to purchase a fifty cent box of this famous remedy at the nearest drug store, and give it a trial to-night. Accept no substitute and remember there is no remedy "just as good" as The Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich., publish a little book on the causes and cure of piles, and will gladly send it free to any address. Distinguished Presidents.

London, March 25.—The Duke of Devonshire was unanimously re-elected president at the meeting of the Liberal-Union Club, and a resolution that "in the opinion of this meeting the club should maintain its position of neutrality, as a club, on the local question until after the next general election" was rejected by a vote of 72 to 40.

Rules to Be Revised.

Ottawa, March 25.—As a result of the conference of the Dominion Marine Association representatives and the Department of Marine and Fisheries, the Canadian navigation rules will be revised and the changes adopted by an Order-in-Council. Both Hon. Mr. Prefontaine and Col. Gourdeau, Deputy Minister, expressed anxiety to have the rules uniform on both sides of the Great Lakes.

Only a Shaft Broken.

Victoria, B. C., March 25.—The Dominion Government steamer Quadra returned last night from Quatsino Sound, bringing the passengers of the steamer Queen City, which is anchored there with her shaft broken. The Queen City will be towed to Victoria for repairs. The Quadra saw no signs of the missing Seattle ship Lamorna, now supposed to have foundered with all hands, about thirty in number.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. Every purchaser of it is pleased with such satisfaction.

Some persons have particular aversion to Cascarets, even for temporary disturbances, and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking, and gravitation to the pill box. Only 10c. Cascarets. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. F. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. Only 25c. Try it. Cascarets taken in water when the symptoms are noticed, may further trouble Mrs. Fly experienced.

A long partying makes a weary constance.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles, there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. It never fails to afford instant and permanent relief. It removes all soreness, and heals the diseased parts. It is most effective in the most troublesome cough, and by promoting expectoration, relieves the throat of phlegm, and all the tubes which cause difficulty in breathing, thereby affording rest. For whooping cough it has proved invaluable. Price 25 cents.

Mrs. Brad slanger of Ingersoll will find Hickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup a wonderful relief. It will speedily and effectually allays all irritation, and hushiness in the throat, bronchial tubes, and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering articulation clear and distinct. Dr. Hickle's cures all diseases of the throat, lungs and chest

It's pretty tough when a man can't even get credit for his good intentions.

MESSENGER CANIENSIS

By Barry Pain

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

It was close and stuffy. No breath of air stirred the glass, and the mullein stalks beside the railway were drooped flat to earth. Even the drone of the locusts seemed faint and dispirited, and the occasional cry of a blue jay in the woods was far more in the nature of a protest than anything else.

On the top rider of the rickety rail fence beside the road sat Mr. Thomas Hector Gray, smoking very methodically, as he did all things, an ancient briar pipe. A huge pine shaded his perch, but for all that Mr. Gray was perspiring and evidently ill at ease. Every few minutes he looked at his watch, and every time he did this he grunted disgustedly and uttered an explosive under his breath.

When an hour had passed—a long, dragging hour—during which he had alternately fanned himself with his hat and waged unequal combat with the mosquitoes, which despite the smoke had declared hostilities, Gray put on his hat with a determined air and slid down from the fence. As he did so he saw a cloud of dust moving along the roadway in his direction. Then out of the dust cloud emerged a yellow dog, trotting along heavily, with his tongue lolling from his mouth.

At the sight of the man the dog gave vent to a series of joyful barks. He came the remaining distance in long bounds, and when he reached the man he stood before him, his tail in violent motion.

"Billy," said Gray, stopping to pat the panting beast—"good old Billy! What—what now? He broke off suddenly in surprise, for tied to the dog's collar was a violet envelope of small dimensions, and the superscription on it was his own name. Gray snatched the envelope and tore it open.

"Dear old Tommy," he read.

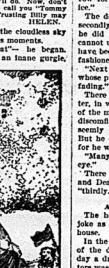
"Humph!" he interpolated. "I know these 'dear old Tommys'—trouble." He again turned to the note.

I can't read Chaucer beneath the big oak tree this afternoon without you. I'm going out automobiling with Mr. Bennison. Excuse bad writing, but he is waiting for me now. I shall show Billy your girl clubs here and tell him to find you, which I'm sure he'll do. Now, don't be angry and make me call you "Grumpy Green Eyes" again. Trusting Billy may find you soon,

HELEN.

Mr. Gray surveyed the cloudless sky for several tumultuous moments.

"Now, wouldn't that"— he began. The sentence died in an inane gurgle.



MISS DENNISON SAW A STRANGE OUTFIT MOTORING ACROSS THE COUNTRY.

while Gray's face grew wrathfully red, and great beads of perspiration stood on his forehead. Then he tore a leaf from his notebook, hastily scrawled a few words and tied it to Billy's collar, where the other note had stopped.

He arose and, followed by the dog, took the dusty road. When Billy came to the fork, Gray pointed down the left hand road and said sternly: "Home, Billy. Home, sir." After he had watched the dog trot off dejectedly down the dust he himself went slowly up the other road.

Late that evening Billy scrambled into the hammock where his master lay. She saw the note and in the dim light from the window beside her read these words:

My Dear Helen—I trust you'll have a pleasant afternoon. I expect it will be much preferable to Chaucer beneath the pine. Billy reached me after I had waited several hours for you. The time passed very pleasantly, thanks to the villainous heat and swarms of famine stricken mosquitoes. Being the soul of discretion, I shall be delighted any afternoon in the future to go through the operation again for the sake of the reward of a similar note, telling me you are at home and the latest arrival in town.

THOMAS H. C. GRAY.

The next afternoon, as Gray was knocking a ball about the links, Billy arrived panting up with the same envelope attached to his collar. In it were found some sumac bushes Gray had the contents:

Your latest outburst duly received per Billy, Mr. Tommy Green Eyes. Pray, don't subject yourself to heat and mosquitoes on my account.

HELEN.

The note Billy carried back read as follows:

Thanks. I had no intention of doing so.

T. M. G.

Then for a week there was silence between them, Gray in his sager carefully avoided Miss Dennison cottage in his walks along the shore. Every afternoon, however, he sat on the piazza of the casino for a few hours Dennison and Hammond driven by in an automobile, which very probably accounts for Mr. Thomas Hector Gray's pronounced to knock about the bay in his catboat, carrying full sail in a double reef breeze.

Early one evening Gray was crossing the lawn of the casino when he heard a whizzing sound and Billy flying in the road. He turned back to find Billy and a tricycle built terrier hard at his heels. Judicious kicking managed to get them apart; then his heart came into his throat, for attached to Billy's collar was a bit of violet envelope. Gray snatched it eagerly. It had been sadly mutilated in the fray, but a few words in one corner of the paper were still legible. "I must just flying to make you jealous," he read, and in another place he made out, "I'm lonesome for you, you foolish"—

* * * * * * *

Miss Helen Dennison, sitting on the broad veranda of the cottage, saw a strange outfit trotting sedately across the lawn. It was Billy, a wreath of red leaves about his neck and tied to his tail a small silk flag, which fluttered bravely in the breeze. Pinned on the oak wreath was an envelope addressed to herself:

My Dear Helen—she read and laughed softly—I received but the merest fragments of your note, which I tried wild conclusions with a bull terrier with disastrous results. Nevertheless I am emboldened to give me considerable enlightenment. Trusting I appear to you in favor—you—if he doesn't get into other difficulties on his way—and remain your poor attempt to express my state of mind. We'll better make it the end of it and be our honeymoon in the Berkshires.

T. H. C. G.

And Mr. Thomas Morley Gray, who strode up the gravel walk at that moment, beheld Billy struggling from the embrace of a young woman, who blushed furiously as she saw him standing there.

The Dean's Delicacy.

Dr. Pigou, the dean of Bristol, had been pointing out the openings in church work as a career for young men and lay women of devoted lives. In getting down to specific cases, as he always does in a sermon, he said: "Next Sunday, will you think of the instruments fitted to the opportunity. Naturally our thoughts turn to widows who are left penniless. Many a widow has taken aside from the world by sorrow for a life of devotion to his service."

The dean paused. He was thinking especially of unmarried women, for he did not say unmarried women he cannot understand. He thinks he may have been surprised at seeing the old fashioned word spinster, so he said:

"Next we think of those women whose prospect of marriage are slowly fading."

There was an instant roar of laughter, in which the archbishop and some of the married lay women joined. The discomfited dean deprecated the unseemly merriment as best he could. But he did not mend matters greatly, for he went on:

"Many of whom I have in my mind's eye."

There was another burst of laughter, and Dean Pigou went hurriedly on to "thirdly."

A Question of "Terve."

The hotel barber shop has its little joke as well as any other part of the house.

In the tonsorial establishment of one of the downtown hostelries the other day a drummer who knew all the doctors was being operated upon. Near by a sweet scented barber was all set up in business, with plate mirrors, mahogany furniture and the like, and was making a great splash for business.

"How's the new barber shop getting on next door?" asked the drummer of one of the barbers.

"Oh, so-so," was the reply. "However, we manage to keep at work," he added, just to show that though there may be "butters in" competition is the line of trade.

"I suppose you do get a few still who don't see the other place," remarked the drummer.

By this time the barber was sarcastic.

"Yes, indeed," he said. "They wander-fer here occasionally—a few like themself, you know—and I suppose after they get in they don't have nerve enough to get out."

"Not at all," said the drummer. "I think it's nerve that keeps them in."

But this was on the house.—Detroit Free Press.

Wears Her Hair Short Now.

As she stepped barebacked into the elegant boudoir, built and furnished by all the men in the car admired her wealth of chestnut hair. It towered in graceful confusion over her high classic head in fashion, above her rosy little cheeks. But it glistened unnaturally. There was a smell of brilliantine, benzine or something like that. One of those men who cannot go around without a cigar blazing as fiercely as the one that William Tillotte used in the famous dark scene of "Sherlock Holmes" got in at the eighth floor and crowded his way around the girl. Somehow or other the cigar and the hair came together and at once got busy. The pompadour flamed. Then the girl ran down to a pig wheel. One man put his hat on it, the conductor mashed the cap, and the shrieking girl was hustled into the hall with a badly damaged silk tile surmounting her neat weak blouse. The fire was out in five seconds, without the assistance of hand grenades. The man with the cigar said he was sorry and asked if there was anything he could do.

"Sorry?" shouted the girl. "Do! What can you do? You fool!"—New York Press.

A Promising Camp.

One of the most promising districts in British Columbia is that lying about the thriving city of Kamloops, B.C. The unlimited resources of the Pacific Province are shown here in all variety; farming lands, where thousands of cattle live and grow fat on the nutritious bunch grass; fruit lands in the valleys, farm lands on the rolling prairies and mining lands on the mountains with good transportation facilities; an enterprising community and a glorious climate will make the Kamloops district.

A large amount of progress has been made in all lines, but the riches is not wrested from nature's treasure vaults in gold and silver and copper alone, but coal mentation. As a mining camp the district has now been boomed by the unscrupulous promoter but development has gone on quietly until to-day it is proved beyond a doubt that in all the rich sections of the great Dominion, Kamloops is second to none. The Cherry Creek Copper King mines, whose advertisement appears in another column, have secured one of the most promising properties in the camp, which has secured on very favorable terms. John Gardner, M.E., in his annual report on the camp, says:—

"The ore bodies claims, which is well known, possess some promising and extensive showings on the intersections of the lode. And that the following extract from the Company's Geologist's report describes these, and I believe is a conservative description. He says:

"The veins on the 'O.K.' which have been opened up by surface work and a shaft 25 feet in depth at the 80-foot level is a true fissure, about 90 feet in width at the shaft. The strike of the lead is northeast and southwest to the dip to the southeast of about 60 degrees. The ore bodies are lenticular, occurring throughout the vein system. From these lenses a high-grade pyritic copper ore assaying from 10 per cent. to 10 per cent. copper and from 5 to $8 in gold is taken. A sampling of the fissure where exposed in the shaft gave an average of 12.60 per cent. copper and $6.75 in gold.

"A parallel vein on the Prince Charles has been opened up by a small shaft and a good body of medium grade pyritic ore uncovered. The extent of this body is apparently small, but it is proved by further development. Average—he says at this body give 20 per cent. copper and $6.75 in gold.

"The company embraces some of the most responsible and successful business men of the Interior, and in getting forth its plans with the care and foresight not always desired to the investing and untiring enterprises."

A perusal of their advertisement will show the plan for securing the shareholders.

The Store For ••Quality••

This store excels not only in quality, but variety as well—never has it been able to show what it does to-day, and notwithstanding the fact that the clothes that wear the Quick & Robertson label are the uncommon kind, the prices of them will prove the greatest surprise of all.

The Rain Coat—the Top Coat—the Three-Quarter Length Overcoat—the New Single Breasted Sack—the New Double-Breasted Sack, are all here—There's absolutely nothing missing.

Easter Clothes

Naturally we are very proud of our Boys' Clothing Department. The showing we make for Easter is extraordinary—it is unusual, not only in wideness of variety and exclusiveness of style, but in lowness of prices—quality, as it always has been is paramount.

Suits for young men receive particular attention—our showing is so entirely different—the garments equal in style, individuality, and material the output of the foremost tailors, and our prices are less than HALF.

The Finest Haberdashery for Men and Boys.

This department is a complete store in itself—exclusiveness is just as possible. If not a little more so here than it is in smaller establishments.

We have it and our Up-to-Date methods of merchandising enables us to assure it to all without extra charge—our prices are regulated by quality only, and WE WILL SAVE YOU MONEY.

An Unusual Showing of Spring Hats.

This department can be depended upon, not only for quality and fairness of prices, but as a place where the newest creations will be shown as soon as they are issued.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.
A BRIGHT MUSICAL COMEDY.
The Four Cohan's everlasting musical comedy success, "The Governor's Son," by George M. Cohan, and under the direction of Mr Fred Niblo, will be seen at the opera house on Tuesday, March 29, with a special cast, which could hardly be bettered. The chorus of bewitching, singing beauties are prize winners. The girls are also great dancers and certainly cut an important part. Among the new musical numbers are "Yankee Doodle Doings," and "The Soldiers of the Stage," who fight for your kind applause. "Then I'd be satisfied with life," and "I love you all," sung and danced around by "The Dancing Darlings," four young ladies of the chorus who were selected by Mrs. Pemberton Jones to distribute favors at her collition in Newport some weeks ago. The old songs are only old until you hear them again and then they freshen like a watered rose. The original production will be given. The cast, which includes thirty-six people, has among its members some of the brightest lights on the musical stage.

EVERYONE WITH SORE THROAT
Should know how quickly Nerviline cures. "I can recommend Nerviline very highly for sore throat," writes Mr. J. R. McKenzie, of St. George. "I once had a very sore throat and my chest was full of cold and soreness. Every cough hurt me. I believe Nerviline to be the best general remedy for emergent sickness that one can get. We have used it for twenty years in our house." Price 25c.

WHY NOT CLEAN OUR MAIN THOROUGHFARE.

FRONT STREET MERCHANTS ARE EXPRESSING THEMSELVES FORCIBLY ON THE ABOVE QUESTION.

Why don't the Public Works Department get busy and clean the dirt and filth off Front street? is the question which is agitating the minds of many of our merchants just now. The condition of things, they say, is disgraceful. This matter was mentioned in The Intelligencer some ten days ago, but the gentle hint then given was not taken. Since then matters have grown worse. If the dirt were cleaned off the street the law would assume so much quicker, and the cost would be small compared to the inspection and mud cards. The crossings at present are a disgrace to any civilized community, being slippery and covered with filth two inches thick. If a party fell on one of them he would be a sight! The corporation sweeper should, without delay, be put at work on Front street from the upper bridge to the market.

TERRIBLE TORNADO IN CHICAGO, ILL.

SIX PEOPLE KILLED, SCORES INJURED AND MILLIONS OF DOLLARS WORTH OF PROPERTY DESTROYED.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Chicago, Ill., March 25.—Six people are believed to have lost their lives and scores of others injured in the severe tornado which swept over Chicago and the country surrounding early last night.

The property loss is estimated this morning at near $2,000,000. Telegraph and telephone wires are down in all directions.

The tornado struck this city from the northwest.

TRENT CANAL ENQUIRY.

BELLEVILLE MEN GIVE REASONS FOR THEIR DESIRING ITS COMPLETION.

Belleville's delegates to the session of the Transportation Commission at Ottawa are Mayor Clowes, Aid. Painter and Mr. Thomas Ritchie. Elsewhere in this issue will be found a brief report of yesterday's proceedings.

The Globe thus reports some utterances of certain of the Belleville delegates:

Mayor W. W. Clown, of Belleville, said that city wanted the canal because of the power that would be developed, and because of better freight rates that would be secured between Belleville and Montreal.

Thomas Ritchie, of Belleville, said the chief interest in the canal so far outweighed any local interest, though he had been surprised to hear how great the local interest was.

Mr. Bertram asked why the completion of the canal had been delayed so long, it having been begun 24 years ago.

Mr. Ritchie said the Chairman had better ask the politicians.

Mr. Bertram said he was in earnest. He and his colleagues would make a report based largely on business reasons, and their business reasons were matters at stake. Apparently the people all along the route of the canal favored its completion. What he put stress on was the part of the country as a whole.

CANADA NOT AFFECTED.

Speculation is rife as to the probable outcome of the war between Russia and Japan, and particularly as to the attitude of the powers toward the desire of Russia to send her Black Sea fleet through the Dardanelles. To understand the reason for the Dardanelles difficulty it is necessary to go back to 1833, when Turkey made a defensive alliance with Russia, which gave to the latter practical control of the Dardanelles straits. It was in consequence of this that the other powers insisted on the principle of the closure of the Dardanelles, which was sanctioned by the Treaty of Paris in 1856. Although able to maintain a fair degree of power politics, Canada is not affected. Canadians are continuing to enjoy their Dardanelles Turkish cigarettes.

Dull Belleville Boy Dead.

Capt. S. Vandervoort, of this city, this morning received a telegram announcing the death of his boy Walter, Mr. Wm. F. Vandervoort, who resided at Seattle, Wash. He passed away yesterday afternoon. Mr. Vandervoort, who was 54 years of age, was at one time a resident of this city and was well known. At the time of his death he held a position on the Navy Yards at Seattle. He had been for some years a resident of the Western States.

MAN'S MOST CRITICAL AGE.

Very often the vital resources are small at forty-two, but if not then, between fifty-five and sixty-two years of age there is a strange slowing down and loss of vitality. It is important that this critical period of decay should be checked; frequently when it is not the old, tired brain, the weakened nerves must be fed. For the vigor man will use Ferrozone, whose potency is particularly applicable to these critical periods. Ferrozone makes the whole being, imparts vigor and power, pushes back the onset of senility in a manner almost way. It's because Ferrozone gives strength, vitality and vigor that it is useful to old men. 50c. per. Price 50c.

A Thurlow Fire.

Between 8 and 9 o'clock this morning a frame dwelling situated on the front of Thurlow, about six miles east of the city, was discovered by fire. The tenant was Mr. Lee Williams, who lost the greater portion of his household effects. The building was owned by Mr. Henry Brown. The fire caught about the chimney. As to insurance, if any, we were unable to ascertain.

COLDS ARE DANGEROUS.

How often you hear it remarked: "It's only a cold," and a few days later learn that the man is on his back with pneumonia. Th s is of such common occurrence that a cold, however slight, should not be disregarded. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy counteracts any tendency toward pneumonia. It always cures and is pleasant to take. For sale by all druggist.

Lesire Phenix washing powder has no equal for cleaning clothes of all kinds; dispenses entirely with washing crystals, soap, chloride of lime, and similar harsh chemicals that burn both clothes and hands. It does the washing, boiling, rinsing and bluing in half the time, than by any known method. It is cheaper than the commonest soap. It gives a perfect whiteness to the clothes, causing all stains, no matter of what nature, to disappear, and above all will not injure the linen of the finest fabric. 25-2t

BURNING THE YULE LOG.

The Custom One of Ancient Origin. The Yule Candle.

The custom of burning a large log at the Christmas season in the Yule log is very ancient in its origin. All through the middle ages every farmhouse of importance in England burned its Yule log upon the hearth, the log being dragged in with much ceremony.

At Yuletide when the great log found its place upon the hearth feasting and mirth went round.

The word "Yule", itself seems to be derived from the Anglo-Saxon "Geol," meaning December. Earlier still the Scandinavian feasts in honor of the most flourishing state among the Norsemen, who commemorated the fiery sun wheel with a huge feast in honor of Odin, or Odhinn, the god of storms, and other deified beings on the earth. The Yule log, with its cheery blaze, comes to us across the centuries as a din memory of the feast in the celebrate the setting out of the sun on his northward journey toward the light and warmth of spring.

A large candle known as the Yule candle was also used to light the Christmas festivities. It was a bad omen if the candle burned out before the evening was at an end.

Never is time more precious than when some member of the family is attacked by colic, dysentery or any bowel trouble. The doctor is distant, but if Perry Davis' Painkiller is near all danger is soon ended.

THE WORD "MOB."

How it Worked Its Way Into the English Language.

The word "mob" is an abbreviation. It is nothing but a fragment of the full Latin original "mobile vulgus"—"the fickle common people." First the "common vulgus" was dropped. Nobody, in using into common use, was in a few years set down to "vulgus." By 'twirl it was abbreviated to his dying day as a peculiarly odious kind of slang. Addison sympathized with the feeling. In No. 135 of the Spectator "mob" is put down by him as one of the ridiculous words which he feared will in time be looked upon as part of the speech. There must have been then a host of minor defenders of the purity of our tongue who bewailed its increasing use and pointed to that fact as evidence of the growing degeneracy of the language. But the assailed form stoutly held its ground and outlived its censurers. Addison's fears have been realized. The abbreviation has thoroughly established itself. Accordingly a word which itself predecessors stigmatized as a corruption of the vilest kind is now used unhesitatingly by the most precise of modern jurists. The reason of its popularity is obvious. It came to supply a very genuine want. There is no other single word that conveys definitely the idea of a particular sort of riotous assemblage.—Harper's.

BY HOOK OR BY CROOK.

An Ancient Phrase That Has Many Phases of Meaning.

The phrase "by hook or by crook" may simply refer to an ancient custom which allowed persons to collect for fuel dry wood in the forests of kings such as they could break off and remove with "cart, hook and crook."

Others derive its significance "by foul means or by fair" to the contrasted uses of the footpad's hook or the bishop's crook.

Others remind us of the expression in very early days "by hook or by crook"—that is, by bending the knees and cringing low.

Another plausible explanation is that after the great fire of London disputes as to ownership of land were settled by the surveyors with their hooks and Hook and Crook.

Quite different is the view taken by those who tell us that when Bromyard sailed for Ireland he instructed his men to meet their orders by Hook, a promontory northwest of Waterford, or by Crook, a harbor on the south coast.

In any case, the phrase is very old, and it was used by Bacon (1500), and by Chaucer nearly 600 years ago.—Pearson's.

LUNAR SCENERY.

Its Appearance Proves the Moon's Life Has Ceased Long Ago.

It is by indirect methods of observation that scientists learn of the absence of atmosphere on the moon. There are various arguments that can be adduced, but the most conclusive is that obtained on the occurrence of what is called the occultation of a star. It sometimes happens that the moon comes directly between the earth and a star, and the temporary extinction of the latter is then observed. We can observe the movement when it takes place, and the suddenness of the extinction is a fact extremely remarkable. If the moon had a copious atmosphere, the gradual interposition of this would produce a gradual extinction of the star and not the sudden phenomenon actually observed.

This absence of air and water from the moon explains the peculiar and weird ruggedness of the lunar scenery. We know that on the earth the action of the wind and of rain, of frost and of snow is constantly tending to wear down our mountains and reduce their hard outlines, but no such agents are at work upon the moon.

GUARD HOME HEALTH

Mankind is beset by a myriad of enemies that endanger life and health.

These enemies are the invisible organisms called germs. More and more is becoming apparent the necessity of keeping the home guarded against this danger. The vaporizer of defence is disinfectants. Disinfectants should be used often and freely at this time of the year. If in doubt as to what to use we can advise you.

HIS TEMPERANCE BILL

Premier Ross Cannot Yet Say When He Will Introduce It.

Question By Major Clark Enlivens Legislative Session Devoted Almost Wholly to the Taxation Bill—Mr. Whitney Delivers An Appreciation of the Premier "As the Most Unique Personality in Civilized World."

Toronto, March 25.—Major Hugh Clark of Centre Bruce enlivened the last moments of a dull session of the Legislature last night by subjecting the following query before the cabinet ministers: "As a follower of his on this particular question, I want to ask the Premier when he intends to introduce his Temperance Bill?"

Amid great laughter Mr. Ross replied: "I will be delighted to inform my followers at the earliest possible moment."

It is a source of gratification to me," spoke up Mr. Whitney, "to notice that as the years go on and our physical powers grow less, the Premier remains ever the same. My honorable friend will go down in history as the most unique personage in the civilized world. Able to get up here year after year and repeat amid jeers and laughter this long-continued, never-ending comedy connected with his treatment of a Temperance Bill."

Taxation Proposals.

Almost the whole of the afternoon was spent in consideration of the Taxation Bill. When the clause referring to rate of interest to be charged on arrears of taxes, which is fixed at 10 per cent. was reached, Mr. Whitney, Mr. St. John and others thought it should be 6 per cent., but Mr. Hanna's numerical hand up by members on both sides, insisted on 10 per cent., and the protracted debate the clause was left over.

A clause was added that assessments made under the old law will still be binding under the new as it comes in force Jan. 1, 1905. The clause to exempt ratepayers like Toronto, where it will not be possible under the new system to assess, to pare this year the assessment for 1905, in cities like Toronto the act will not come into force until 1906.

Business Tax a Snag.

During the afternoon session the committee went to the end of the bill, without encountering any trouble, and then turned back to some clauses on which there is much difference of opinion. The business assessment was the first snag. Mr. Lechner did not see the necessity of the clause taxing liquor shops, as the Premier had assured the temperance people that this class of business was going to be wiped out. The House indulged in a broad and amiable smile at the Premier's expense at this remark.

Mr. Rickard moved an amendment that coal, wood and lumber be put on a 25 per cent. basis. This would be a little more than these merchants are paying now.

Opposed to a Change.

Mr. Hoyle said the committee was unanimous on this, for the reason that the premises occupied by coal merchants were comparatively expensive.

T. H. Preston said several of the Special Committee thought the tax should be on 100 per cent. basis.

The Attorney-General said lumber should not be classed with coal and wood. There might be ground for complaint so far as coal and wood dealers are concerned.

Mr. Whitney said he had not heard any dissatisfaction with the bill. He did not know that it was perfect by any means, but if they began to make changes, there was no telling where they would stop.

Col. Matheson declared the business tax was a makeshift, and he had some letters showing the hardships that would have to be borne by some classes of business under the act.

Mr. McKay would not vote to change the clause until he was convinced that the 50 per cent. basis would be satisfactory to the coal dealers of Toronto. It might be advisable to make it apply to cities over 50,000.

If there was to be an exception in the case of dealers in Toronto, why not for printers and publishers? said Mr. Preston. As they appeared to be considerable difference of opinion on the question the clause was left for further consideration.

Adjourn Over Easter.

The Premier suggested that the House rise on Thursday next and take holidays over Good Friday and Easter Monday. Consideration of the question was, however, left over until next week.

Hon. Mr. Ross again moved that Government business shall take precedence over all other business on and after Friday.

Mr. Whitney did not see the need for it, and the resolution was changed to Wednesday next, and passed in this form.

Hon. Mr. Harcourt introduced a bill respecting Boards of Education in certain cities. The bill will enable councils in cities under 100,000 to unite their Boards as in the case of City of Toronto, but it will not be compulsory.

Hon. Mr. Gibson introduced a bill to amend the Division Court Act.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Stratton, a select committee, composed of Messrs. Henry, Carscallen, John Smith, Graham, Kribs, Caldwell, Barr and Dickenson, was appointed to consider the bill relating to stationery engineers.

The following bills were read a third time: Respecting the Separate Schools of the Town of Sturgeon Falls; enabling and directing the Royal College of Dental Surgeons to admit J. H. Gorman as a student in his final year.

Conservatives Were Shut Of.

Toronto, March 25.—Col. Matheson and his fellow inquisitors secured some further interesting material during the resumed enquiry into the affairs of the Consolidated Company before the Public Accounts Committee of the Legislature on Thursday morning, when A. H. Clutty, treasurer of the defunct corporation, was on the stand for about two hours. It was learned that the company was insolvent and obtained credit to a very large extent through their financial difficulties, but Mr. Clutty explained that the company was living in expectation of securing money from Philadelphia. The Conservatives made an attempt to find out whether any payments were paid to Messrs. Conmee and Bowman, as coal members, on their contract with the corporation while the company was not meeting its current obligations, but this line of questioning was objected to by the Liberal members, and finally a vote was taken, the committee deciding by a vote of 11 to 9 not to admit the questions. It was a straight party vote, and Messrs. Conmee and Bowman, the members interested, voted with the majority.

Grand Trunk Wants Bonus.

Toronto, March 25.—The Ontario Government is considering an application from the Grand Trunk Pacific for a subsidy for a branch line to run from some point on Thunder Bay, probably Port Arthur or Fort William, to a point on the main line. This branch would give the company an outlet to Lake Superior. The Premier said last night that he had nothing to say in regard to the application. Messrs. C. M. Hays and William Mainwright had a conference with the Premier on Wednesday.

FATAL TRIP ON STONE.

Cheese Maker Dougald McGregor Loses Life By Gun Discharge.

Brantford, March 25.—A shooting accident took place about seven miles north of here yesterday afternoon in which Dougald McGregor, a cheese maker, lost his life. McGregor had just come out of the cheese with his loaded shotgun, when he tripped on a stone. In some way the hammer struck and the unfortunate fellow received the contents in the lower part of his body, dying on the road, noticing McGregor in a stooping posture, investigated the matter, but McGregor was unable to say faintly: "I've shot myself," and died. A coroner was notified, but an inquest will be held.

TOLD IN A FEW LINES.

M. Currie, section foreman, was run down by a snowplow near Oakville, Man.

ONLY A SUGGESTION

BUT IT HAS PROVEN OF INTEREST AND VALUE TO THOUSANDS.

Common sense would suggest that it one wishes to become healthy in physique, he must eat only such the food we eat and digest and that food should be abundant, and flesh forming food, like eggs, beefsteak and cereals; in other words the kinds of food that make bone are the foods which form the greater part of our daily bills of fare.

But the trouble is that while we eat sparingly and generally overload the stomach, from abuse and overwork, does not properly digest and assimilate it, which is the reason so many people remain thin and under weight; the digestive organs do not completely digest the food forming foods, meat and eggs and similar wholesome food.

There are thousands of such who are really suffering from hunger, although they may have no particular pain or inconvenience from their stomachs.

To such persons would lay their prejudices aside and make a regular practice of taking, after each meal one of two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets the food would be quickly and thoroughly digested, because these tablets contain the natural pepsiness and diastase which every man's stomach should have in supplying this want the stomach is soon enabled to reach its natural tone and vigor.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets digest every form of flesh forming food, meat, eggs, bread and potatoes, and this is the reason why they quickly build up, strengthen and invigorate the dyspeptic men, women and children.

Invalids and children, even the most delicate, use them with marked benefit as they contain no strong, irritating drugs, or cathartics or any harmful ingredient.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the most successful and most widely known of any remedy for stomach troubles because it is the most reasonable and scientific of modern medicines.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by every druggist in the United States and Canada as well as Great Britain, at 50c for complete treatment.

Nothing further is required to cure any stomach trouble or to make thin, nervous, dyspeptic people, strong, plump and well.

GRAND TRUNK DEPOSITS.

Minister of Finance Gives Information in the House—Public Works Estimates Considered in Committee of Supply.

Ottawa, March 25.—Particulars of the two deposits made by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company were supplied by the Minister of Finance in the House yesterday. The deposit under the amended agreement of last session was made in London by the Grand Trunk Railway Company. It consisted of a certificate for one million pounds, four per cent. guaranteed stock of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. With an endorsement that the stock had been allotted subject to the condition that unless such allotment was sanctioned and approved by a general meeting of the company, the allotment was to be null and void. The certificate was not approved and accepted by anybody on behalf of the Government.

The certificate for one million pounds Grand Trunk guaranteed stock is still in Montreal. It has not been released, but will be now that a cash deposit has been substituted for it. The deposit under the agreement was to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. But as the company's arrangement with the bank is for 3 per cent. without interest, no interest will be paid by the Government.

Public Work Estimates.

The public works estimates under the Government were considered in Committee of Supply last night. An effort was made by the Opposition to secure from Hon. James Sutherland a clear statement as to those portions of the Public Works Department that have been surrendered to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and the number that are surrendered voluntarily; or under pressure. In this effort they had only partially successful. Mr. Sutherland told the House that particular work his department had been relieved of, but his explanation of the circumstances under which the changes were made was exceedingly unsatisfying.

Fellow English Preacdest.

Mr. Borden brought up the question of the Chief Justice of Alberta, the Solicitor-General being allowed to do outside practice, whereby the salary in that Province is somewhat reduced. The Premier, however, was not a member of the Government, and it might be advisable for him to keep in touch with the courts.

Sold Investors Models.

The Minister of Militia stated that between twenty-five and thirty thousand models deposited by inventors in the recent offer department were sold on private public tender for $6,000, which sum $3,000 was paid for advertising. T. G. Bingham of Ottawa, was the lucky tenderer.

The Minister of Militia stated in reply to Mr. Clark that the City of Montreal has paid nothing to the militia authorities in connection with the calling out and maintainance of the militia during the recent Montreal strike. The amount demanded was $18,850. The city was sued and judgment rendered, but an appeal has been entered.

Not to Exceed Ten Miles.

The danger from unprotected level crossings was emphasized by Ed. Lancaster of Lincoln in pressing the second reading of his bill to amend the Railway Act. His amendment provides that the speed of trains on level crossings, or cities, towns and incorporated villages shall not exceed ten miles an hour, unless watchmen are employed. The bill will probably go before the Railway Committee.

Mr. Lancaster then moved the second reading of his bill to amend the criminal code of 1892. The purpose of this measure is to prevent minors electing as to how they shall be tried before committing with their guardians. Mr. Lancaster mentioned several instances where boys and girls had received severe sentences on trivial charges because the magistrate they elected to be tried by the magistrate.

Mr. Fitzpatrick said he did not see any need of the measure. The debate was adjourned.

Isolated for 36 Days.

Trenwater, March 25.—The severity of this winter has given railway men experience that they will be likely not to forget for many years. If "tie-ups" can be considered any honor, then surely the Trenwater branch of the C.P.R. can easily claim first prize. After a complete isolation of twenty-six days, the snow-plow with one engine followed by two other engines and a gang of shovelers, steamed into this village at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon and was met by everybody was thankful and a large number of passengers who had given men a hearty welcome at the depot.

Menard Reappointed.

Ottawa, March 25.—Joseph Menard, the Clarence township murderer, who escaped from the guards on Brook Village during the early morning hours, was recaptured last night by a farmer. He was hid in a barn about a mile from the village. He will be taken to the county jail at L'Orignal to-day.

Alaska Boundary.

Washington, March 26.—Supt. O. H. Tittman of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, as commissioner for the American Government, and Chief Astronomer W. King of the Ottawa Government, the British Commissioner, have been in conference in this city over the work of making the boundary line of Southeastern Alaska, in accordance with the award of the tribunal at London. There are about 600 miles of the line to be marked, and the work will begin early next summer.

Driven to Quebec.

Montreal, March 26.—Premier Ross is evidently driving the maltsters out of Ontario. It was announced here yesterday that the Canada Malting Company of Toronto have secured a location on the Lachine Canal, St. Henri, and will erect a very extensive malting plant and elevator at a cost of $350,000. Tenders are now being asked for. The malt house and the elevator is to be constructed by Messrs. Barnett and Record of Chicago.

IS NOT MARRIED TO SOO

Government Not Tied Up Absolutely to Guarantee Bill.

Premier Ross Says He Is Waiting For Further Information From Philadelphia Before Proposing the Second Reading of the Bill—Mr. Hanna Still Continues His Search After the Fullest Information.

Toronto, March 26.—Premier Ross informed the Legislature yesterday that the Government was not absolutely committed to the Soo guarantee bill, but was waiting for further information from Philadelphia before proposing the second reading of the bill. The knotty question of Sault Ste. Marie legislation came up in different forms, but the debate which called for the above remark was provoked by a motion of Mr. Hanna, asking that all the papers relating to the defunct organization be laid open to the scrutiny of the members. On another occasion, Mr. Hanna made a search after information establishing the connection between Messrs. Conmee and Bowman, Liberal members, and the proposed legislation. There is now little likelihood that the second reading of the bill will be moved till after the Easter recess, as the Opposition is determined to bring out all the facts before the measure comes up for intelligent discussion.

Capital in Beet Sugar.

The Premier was unable to answer a question by Henry Carscallen for the capital invested in beet sugar factories, the tonnage of beets consumed, the wages paid, etc., and the Attorney-General called attention to the practice of members putting questions on the paper for information that ought to be the subject of a return.

It was not the intention of the Government, the Premier informed Mr. Hoyle, to introduce legislation during the current session, granting financial aid towards the development of the peat fuel industry.

Mr. Dunlop desired to know if H. E. Truax was a creditor of the Soo Companies, and Mr. Truax replied: "The Soo Company is not in any way indebted to me."

Cumulative Voting.

Dr. Nesbitt moved the second reading of the bill to abolish the system of cumulative voting in regard to Boards of Education. Mr. Graham said a large number of petitions had been received from labor bodies requesting that the system be given a further trial. The bill was referred to the Legal Committee.

Third Readings.

The following bills were read a third time: Respecting the Muskoka Lakes Navigation & Hotel Co. (Mahaffy); to further extend the powers of the Consumers' Gas Co. (Lucas); to incorporate the Village of Chatsworth (McKay); respecting the Windsor, Essex & Lake Shore Electric Ry. Co. (Reaume); respecting the London, Aylmer & North Shore Electric Ry. Co. (Routledge); respecting the Town of Perth electric lighting system (Matheson.)

Hon. Mr. Gibson introduced a bill to amend the Ontario Game Protection Act to prohibit the shooting of capercailzie.

Stabbed His Teacher.

Ottawa, March 26.—Clyde Morris, a waif from Scotland, placed with Henry Meredith of North Gower, was arrested yesterday on a charge of wounding his school teacher, Geo. Gibson, principal of Rideau Front School, North Gower. Mr. Gibson was inflicting corporal punishment, when Morris, who apparently had an open pocket knife in his hand, made a lunge at the principal with it, and succeeded in scratching his neck. The teacher caught the boy by the hand, and the young rascal then stabbed him in the wrist, making several nasty gashes, before skipped, and was captured tramping into Ottawa.

James Riley Killed.

Corriwall, March 26.—The citizens of Cornwall were shocked yesterday morning by the announcement that James Riley, the well-known accountain of the Cornwall Lacrosse Club, had been accidentally killed in the Stormont mill. The accident happened just about the hour the mill started, 6.30 a. m. Mr. Riley was employed in the finishing room, and he was killed by the big drums of the rope drive, by which the power is first taken from the wheels. Death was instantaneous, the body being much cut about the head and shoulders. He was 35 years of age.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Remember the main.

The expected has happened again.

It was pointed out, long ago, in these columns, that the water main which lies on the bed of the river, at the lower bridge, should be sunk and placed in a safe position. The ice smashed it one spring, what guarantee had we that the same thing might not happen any other spring? None whatever, yet the authorities, with a spirit borrowed from the famous "Arkansaw Traveller," shut their eyes to the danger and allowed the interests of Belleville to be jeopardized. . .

This penny wise and pound foolish policy has prevailed too much in Belleville in the past. "Always put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day" is put a good motto where business interests are concerned. The question of expense is nothing compared to the question of safety. It is the imperative duty of the authorities to seize the first opportunity to have the main sunk beneath the bed of the river, so that all danger of a recurrence of the present accident may be obviated for good and all. . .

If the authorities, on Monday, do not take steps to clean the filth from Front street, they certainly ought to. The present condition of affairs is nothing short of disgraceful. . .

We hope the audience obtained some light from the gentlemen who spoke in the City Hall last night. They got precious little from the lights they had. . .

It is suggested that, in all churches to-morrow, the beautiful hymn, "Let there be Light," be sung in the morning. . .

We move that it be doesn't give us better pressure soon, the Chairman of Gas be sent over the dam in a barrel, Sam O' Shanter and all. . .

The fast is," said a gentleman this morning, the same party having a pretty good knowledge of the gas works, "the works need a thorough overhauling by experts. Until that is done the best results cannot be looked for."

That is probably true, but it is also true that the Council, so they say, intend to have the works and gas mains overhauled and placed in proper repair. And they don't get started a moment too soon. . .

It is only fair to admit that the pronouncement of the proposed electric railway, in their statements last night, put matters in a fair and favorable light before the audience. What a pity it is that stock and bonds are not as cheap as talk!

Robins and bluejays are now plentiful, but those other jays, the spring poets, are as scarce as could be the average man's bin. . .

We have received, from the proprietor of the New York American and Journal, a pamphlet entitled "Trust Lies About William Randolph Hearst." The feeling which fills one's breast, after he reads the pamphlet, is one of thankfulness that Canadian politics are not run on the same lines as those of the U.S. Mr. Hearst, who is moving heaven and earth to get the Democratic nomination for President of the United States, claims to be engaged in a crusade which he describes as a forger and confessed criminal, whose speech he prints. The language is shocking and disgusting. If a titan of wealth can be run down in this true, neither man has any more right to be in public life than he has to be Pope of Rome. The whole thing is an insight into the seamy side of Yankee politics, which is not calculated to spread the spirit of annexation in this country.

MAN'S MOST CRITICAL AGE.

Very often the vital resources are small at forty-two, but if one lives between fifty-seven and sixty-two years of age there is a strange slowing down and loss of nerve. It is important that this transient period of decay should be checked, strength must be imparted to the tired brain, the weakened nerves must be fortified. The wise man will use Ferrozone, whose potency is particularly applicable in these critical periods. Ferrozone quickens the whole being, imparts vigor and power, will set back the onset of senility in a very marked way. In a word, Ferrozone gives strength, vitality and vigor that it is useful to old men. Try it. Price 50c.

WATER MAIN IS AGAIN BROKEN

Moira Rampant Last Night and This Morning, and Ice Caused Considerable Damage along the River Banks —Many Cellars Flooded— An Incipient

Flood on the West Side — Good Thing City Had Supplementary Water Pipes.

The continued thaw of the past few days, assisted by the heavy downpour of rain during last night, caused the ice in the river to break up. At an early hour this morning that portion of the ice between the lower bridge and Cooper's mill moved down, but, owing to the harbor being solid it could get to only a little below the bridge. A large body of ice broke up between the upper bridge and Lazier's mill, and this moved to the vicinity of the upper bridge, being piled up several feet. It was expected that this ice would remain there some time, but a few minutes before 9 o'clock a jam came from further up the river, and this started the immense body on towards the bay. It was expected that there would be a disastrous flood, but the volume of water behind forced the ice out to a considerable distance in the harbor.

On the way down some damage was done to outbuildings situated on the river banks. The walks and railing along Mill street were, for a considerable distance, carried away. . .

MAIN BROKEN AGAIN.

The most serious damage sustained was the breaking of the water main, which crosses the river at the lower bridge. Just how much was broken away or carried away it is impossible to say, and this cannot be determined until the ice moves out and the water lowers. The break was immediately discovered and it was fortunate for the city that supplementary pipes were over the top of the bridges, through which the water was forced from the pump house.

As soon as the ice had passed down and become blocked the water rose rapidly and many cellars on the west side of Front street were flooded. In this respect but little damage was done, as the majority of the merchants had taken the precaution to remove their goods to places of safety.

The river is now clear of ice from above Lazier's mill to below Cooper's mill. At Canifton there is a considerable quantity, also at Derbyville, but it is not expected down for some time, as it is apparently firm.

A number of hotels on the west side of Front street were greatly inconvenienced to-day, as their yards and stables were flooded.

At noon to-day many commons on the west side of the river were small lakes, the sidewalk on Everett St. was covered with water, and the scene around some of the residences would put you in mind of Venice. On Coleman St. the water was running over the sidewalk in different places. Mrs. Sinfield was this morning driving along Everett St. on the way to market, and, being short sighted, drove rather close to the ditch, the consequence being that the conveyance upset and she was precipitated into the icy water up to her neck. Some carpenters men rescued her, or the consequences might have been serious.

A resident of Bridge St. west had a peculiar experience yesterday afternoon. The water backed up in a ditch near his house and forced its way into his cellar, putting out his furnace. Upstairs they had only a gas stove for which there was no fuel. The unfortunate family were face to face with the prospect of death by freezing and lingering starvation on a diet of biscuits and breakfast food. The operation employees were to-day doing good work in the way of spreading piles over flooded crossings and other places.

As we went to press this afternoon the footbridge gangway was impassible owing to a couple of feet of water.

Cellars on the east side of Front St. are now flooded.

CATARRH IS CERTAINLY CURABLE.

In fact it is one of the most curable diseases if fragrant healing Catarrhozone is used. No matter how long you have suffered with catarrh you can be perfectly cured by inhaling the antiseptic vapor of Catarrhozone, which strikes at the foundation of the trouble and establishes such a healthy condition in the system that catarrhal germs simply can't exist. "I suffered from catarrh of the nose and throat for years," writes S. H. Bowsle, of Pinkerville. "My nostrils were always stuffed up and I had a most disagreeable, hacking cough. Catarrhozone cured me completely." Catarrhozone never fails. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25 cents.

It's pretty tough when a man can't even get credit for his good intentions.

Lessive Phenix washing powder has no equal for cleaning clothes of all kinds; disposes entirely with washing crystals, soap, chloride of lime, and similar harsh chemicals that burn both clothes and hands. It does the washing quicker and better, and in half the time, than by any known method. It is cheaper than the commonest soap. It gives a perfect whiteness to the clothes, making all stains, no matter of what nature, to disappear; and above all will not injure the tissue of the finest fabric. 25-21

Do you know why they use yeast in white flour bread?

When white flour is wet it forms a compact mass, and if cooked thus, as in some kinds of pastry, and eaten, the digestive juices would only act on the outside of each morsel and the process of digestion is greatly prolonged. So yeast is used to make it porous. Yeast, however, consumes a portion of the gluten in the flour, which is already greatly deficient, being lost in the bolting.

The Lightning Changes We Make.

Great is the human makeup, and great are its chameleonlike qualities in the way of expressing feeling. Writers from time immemorial have taught us what to expect from the different colors that flit across our countenances, and, of course, writers are never wrong. Here are some of the lightning chromatic changes that we all have grown to recognize, and there are several counties yet to be heard from:

A man turns green with envy, yellow with hatred, purple with rage, scarlet with anger, white from fear, pink from excitement, saffron from sickness, black from torture, red from heat and blue from cold.

Sometimes, too, he is "cold as steel," "hot as blazes," "cool as a cucumber," "a warm proposition," "hard as brass," "soft as mush," "smooth as a board," "a rough customer" and "a slick article." Then again he is "good as wheat," "sound as a rock," "strong as an ox," "weak as a cat," "slippery as an eel," "sly as a fox," "mean as a snake," "poor as a mouse," "hungry as a wolf," and "dry as a fish."

TATTERS

By M. LOUISE CUMMINS

...Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure...

Radford Hoyt toiled along the cliff path, a moving mass of cloaks and cameras.

His genial face, hotly flushed, smiled as though he was right in the fun of the merry party ahead.

The tall, graceful girl who seemed the center of it stopped suddenly, pushing her heavy hair back from her forehead.

"Who said this wasn't summer, and where is the lighthouse?" she demanded.

"'Tis but a step,' my lady fair."

The man who spoke was usually to be found at Elise Crompton's side. He turned as he answered her and flung a light coat back to Hoyt.

"Here, Rad, you seem to be the general burden bearer," he drawled easily. "Mr. Jerold! What a shame!" Elise laughed. But she glanced rather contemptuously at Hoyt.

The coat struck the young fellow's shoulder and slipped to the ground. The smile did not leave his face as he passed on. In the gathering shade of the lighthouse he dropped his load amid a murmur of thanks from the girls.

"Where's my coat?" Jerold examined the pile of wraps on the ground.

"Where you threw it probably." Hoyt picked up a stone and shied it with easy strength into the water.

"I threw it to you." Jerold's face flushed with chagrin.

"Did you? Well, I only fag for women."

Elise Crompton turned and for the first time in their acquaintance looked directly at Hoyt.

"Why, he's a man!" she thought wonderingly.

His eyes met and held hers steadily for a moment. She looked quickly away, annoyed to find herself blushing under his gaze.

After that she felt like a ship swept from its destined course by a strong wind. Hitherto she had acquiesced in her mother's wish that this outing might end in her engagement to Jerold, though well aware that wealth was his one recommendation. But that look of Hoyt's had been as a steady breeze on a foggy day.

She, Elise Crompton, to sell herself! The blood rose shamefully to her temples. More than ever she had wanted anything she wanted that this young man with the honest eyes should think well of her.

She began to avoid tete-a-tete with Jerold, but in spite of that what she had learned in that dream a few days later. Perhaps the possibility of Hoyt as a rival had given to Jerold's dilettante wooing the spur it needed. He raised his eyebrows in surprise, incredulity almost, when she temporized and asked for time to think it over.

That afternoon she strolled down to the rocks alone. Hardly had she seated herself when a man's voice reached her, coming in admonitory jerks from around the next promontory.

Elise leaned forward and saw Hoyt sitting quite near her, between his knees he held the shaggiest and most forlorn of mongrels. His hand was firmly closed upon one of the dog's forepaws.

"Here, Jerold!" The girl drew back quickly. "Here, will you? The poor beast has cut his paw almost in two on a broken bottle."

The girl quivered at the harshness of the voice that answered.

"Oh, let the cur alone. Where has every one disappeared to?"

Hoyt's reply sounded as though his teeth were clenched on something, and Elise could hear the noise of tearing cambric.

When Jerold passed out of sight she rose. Hoyt had finished his bandaging and, followed by the dog, limped on three legs, was ascending to the cliff path above.

"Look here, Tatters, old fellow," he admonished, "you'd better go home, if you've got one, to go to, which I very much doubt. I could never take you to the hotel, you know."

He swerved at a sharp cry from Elise. One foot had become wedged between the rocks. Her body swayed uncertainly, while her face grew white with the agony of a spraining ankle.

With a bound Hoyt was at her side. Very tenderly he freed the jammed boot and, lifting her lightly, carried her to the path above.

"Ohh!" Her lips quivered with pain as she leaned against him.

"You'd better sit down while I go for a carriage," he said quickly.

Suddenly a ray of humor shot into her eyes. Tatters stood before her, his bandaged paw pathetically uplifted in a ludicrous demand for sympathy.

"Oh, poor fellow! I know how badly it hurts. There are two of us," she exclaimed reshly. Then she turned her face up to Hoyt. "How good you are, how good!"

Hoyt felt himself turning dizzy under her look.

"Leave the dog with me," she said suddenly. "I—I would like to keep him always, if I may."

"You"

Hoyt stared in amazement from the girl in her pouring misery to the battered animal at her feet, and yet, incongruous as it seemed, he could not deny to himself a certain sense of fitness there had been something—something for him—in the eyes of both which it meant madness to think of in connection with Elise Crompton.

That evening she sat on the piazza in a low steamer chair, with Hoyt beside her.

Tatters, who had protestingly been initiated into the ways of higher living through soap and water, lay curled up on the end of her gown.

"Is Jerold to be congratulated—yet?" Hoyt turned to her solicitously.

She was looking off near the moonlit water and did not withdraw her gaze.

"Mr. Jerold will never be congratulated as far as I am concerned," she answered quietly.

Hoyt's hand closed over the one which rested on the arm of herchair. Elise looked up and saw his face, white and streaked in the moonlight. She withdrew her fingers and lightly touched his coat sleeve.

"Why—don't you—say it?" Her eyes were smiling naively into his.

"Say it! I never have been mad enough to dream that it would be any use. I have loved you from the first moment I saw you—sweetheart!"

If ever Tatters needed four legs it was then. He got slowly on his three available ones abd, with his stump of a tail revolving like a windmill, barked ecstatically, for in the moonlight the two figures cast but one shadow.

Hoyt made a quick grab at him.

"Don't!" Elise's fingers closed on his. "Only for him I might never have known—until too late—that I loved you. "And"—she leaned her head against Hoyt's arm and looked critically at Tatters—"I really think he is a handsome dog, don't you?"

"I do," said Hoyt promptly.

And yet Hoyt had been one of the judges at the dog show.

The Novelist's Gentleman.

In that curious code of morals which obtains in certain classes of society a man may be a gentleman and not pay his bills—but a man may not be a gentleman if he neglects to pay the debts he has incurred over a game of cards to one who may have no need for the money. A man may lie often and differently and yet be a gentleman—in fact, that very quality in the other thought a gentleman he is sometimes deprade upon the dexterity and fluency of his lies.

A few faults he should not commit. He must not cheat, for example, and he must wear clean linen. He must not falsify intentionally, only upon those occasions which particularly demand it. If he can possibly help it he must not be a coward. In this country he should not marry for money, though in Europe that is not only condoned, but looked upon as quite possible if not commendably clever. The gentleman in Europe "cannot live" on his pay, he is ashamed," so the rich wife is the only respectable way out of the difficulties that he is very often in.—Geraldine Bonner in The Reader.

One day last week the people of Kingston voted to spend a couple of hundred thousand dollars in acquiring out of date steam power electric plant. Now application has been made to the Kingston City Council by a company which desires to distribute water-generated electric power in the city. The Kingston Light Company evidently had a pretty good idea of the proper time to sell out.

No Such Thing As Luck

In Successful Decorating

Successful decoration must be the outcome of study—of thought rather than of mere chance.

In the chance room there will surely be something wrong.

Possibly the color. Perchance Drawing — Likely both.

Whether Chamberr Drawing Room, Living Room. Library or Den, the room must be treated with thought of surroundings, of furniture of complexion, of lighting, of siz.

The environment of a room with North or East exposure must not be blue, while either West or Southern exposure may use blue to advantage

How about Crimsons, Greens and Brown—where may these colors be used—just ask your decorator, if he is worthy the name he can tell you.

The Filigree Ball

BY ANNA KATHERINE GREEN

AUTHOR OF

"THE LEAVENWORTH CASE."

heat and light we sought courage. She seemed to feel grateful for this contact, and the next minute, flinging all her scruples to the wind, she began a relation of events which more or less answered my late unwelcome queries.

"The death in the library, about which her most perplexing memory hung, took place when she was a child and her father held that high governmental position which has reflected so much credit upon the family. Her father and the man who thus perished had been intimate friends. They had fought together in the War of 1812 and received the same distinguishing marks of presidential approval afterward. They were both members of an important commission which brought them into diplomatic relations with England. It was while serving on this commission that the sudden break occurred which ended all intimate relations between them, and created a change in her father that was equally marked in home and abroad. What occasioned this break no one knew. Whether his great ambition had received some check through the jealousy of this so-called friend—a supposition which did not seem impossible, as he rose rapidly after this—or some other cause, of which dimly hinted at by his contemporaries, but never breaking into open gossip, he was never the same man afterward. His children, who used to rush with effusion to greet him, now shrank into corners at his step, or slid behind her chair, whence they peered with fearful interest at his dark figure, pacing in moody silence the halls of his ancestral home, or walking with frowning brows over the embers dying out on the grate, heartbroker of his famous library.

"Their mother, who was an invalid, did not share these terrors. The sight was very tender of her, and the only smile they ever saw on his face came with his entrance into her darkened room.

"Such were Callista Moore's first memories. Those which followed were more definite and much more painful. Preston Erskine, who had a high opinion of her father's ability, advanced him rapidly. Finally a position was given him which raised him into national prominence. As this had been the goal of his ambition for years, he was much gratified by this appointment, and though his smiles, came no more frequently his frowns lightened, and from being positively thirsty became simply morose.

"Why this moroseness should have sharpened into menace after an unexpected visit from his once dear, but long estranged companion—Erskine, his daughter, even after long years of constant brooding upon this subject, dares not decide. If she could she might be happier.

"The general was a kindly man, sharp of face and of tall thin figure, but with an eye to draw children and make them happy with a look. But his effect on the father was different. From the moment the two in the great hall below, the temper of the host betrayed how little he welcomed this guest. He did not fall in courtesy—the Moores are always gentlemen—but it was a harsh courtesy, which cut while it flattered. The two children, shrinking from its edge without knowing what it was that hurt them, slunk to covert, and from behind the two pillars which mark the entrance to the library, watched the two men as they walked up and down the hall discussing the merits of this and that detail of the freshly furnished mansion. These two innocent, but eager spies, knew no other than curiosity held in hiding, even caught some of the sentences which passed between the so-called friends, and though these necessarily conveyed but little meaning, the tones disclosed what it was that hurt them, st

The Fraternal Societies of Belleville

SHORT SKETCHES OF THEIR HISTORY AND PRESENT STANDING.

The ceremonies were announced to commence at seven o'clock and were of a public character, but the very limited room at the disposal of the Brethren for the accommodation of the guests, rendered it necessary that the invitations should also be limited, and that very consequently confined to ladies who were near relatives of Orangemen. District Officers and Officers of Lodges throughout the County were of course invited, and we noticed many of them in attendance. At six o'clock the Brethren and their guests commenced assembling. The Master of Ceremonies received the guests and conducted them to seats prepared for the occasion in the Lodge Room. At the appointed hour the Master and Deputy Master attired in their official robes and decorated with the full insignia of their orders, entered and took their seats. Then after due announcement followed the Brethren of the O. the B. P., and the R. H., decorated with the insignia of the order to which each belonged. Rather a longer pause followed the next announcement, which was then made that the Officers from the Grand Lodge, with the C. of the R. S. were present and demanded admittance. This were immediately followed by thrown open, the Brethren rising, and the Master of the Lodge advancing to meet the Grand Master in the Grand Master, who now entered preceded by the I. C. of the R. S. accompanied by the acting G. C. and followed by the G. of the R.

Forme in the procession came the Bible, surmounted by a sword and placed by the side of the cushion and the Imperial crown of the British Empire, symbolic that the unswerving loyalty and devotion of Orangemen to the throne were second of God. The reinness of the insignia and robes worn by those participating in the procession, both by picturesque and correct costume of the bearers of the A. and others, cannot be described in the space of a report of this kind, but the impression on the appearance of the room was the theme of admiration. On raised seats around the room were seated the ladies, their bright glances outshining that of the gold, the silver, the jewels and other decorations of the brethren in the centre, and their smiling and animated countenances were not diminished in effect by the handsome bouquets which had their had adopted of showing their interest in the Order, by wearing some one, and some another of the bright flowers which are a part of our chosen emblems.

The R. W. Grand Master was now conducted to his seat by the W. Master, and the ceremony of the dedication was proceeded with, accompanied by singing, prayer, and reading appropriate portions of Scripture, and illustrated by the various symbolical representations. The address was then delivered by the Grand Master, which we cannot speak in too high terms of the merit of the labour we cannot bestowed on this composition. The first part of which was the history of the descent of the House of Brunswick from the remote ages of antiquity, and how by the sterling, shrewd acts it did in the most conclusive manner, that the virtues of our present most Gracious Sovereign, are as hereditary as her descent; that the unsullied sweetheart of the House of Brunswick has never been disgraced by treachery to the throne or country, according to its foes; that whether defending with the sword, the temporal possessions of the See of Rome, or with the pen, the sacred regard for treaty obligations, its uncompromising opposition, equally to the tyranny of the despot or of the mob, has been the main cause of its elevation to the constitutional Sovereignty of the British Empire. The second part was devoted to an account of the rise and progress of Orangeism, and to a correction of some misstatements now existing in the evidence taken at the time of the Parliamentary enquiry into its history; and the vivid colouring of the account of the sufferings of the Rev. and our fellow-subjects, for the protection of whom the Institution was first founded, was extremely affecting. Of the third and concluding part of this beautiful address, we can scarce venture to speak, so as language that we can employ will do justice to the elegance and purity of its diction and the impressive and feeling manner of its delivery. It was a heart-stirring appeal to the feelings of the audience, who could not resist the temptation of answering it by repeated cheers, although such is not the usual practice of Orangemen in their Lodges. It called upon the firm to the encouragement of virtue, and the reprobation of vice, to the continuance in the exercise and practice of religious toleration, and in the exclusion of all parties who contracted views of bigotry and sectarianism; to be slow in taking offence at real grievance; to avoid strife, and to seek benevolence and peace, and to endeavour themselves worthy Orangemen, by fearing God and loving the Brotherhood. In maintaining the Queen's rights and maintaining the laws. May the impression that the ceremony made by this affecting and eloquent oration be permanent on the minds of the hearers.

After the address the National Anthem was sung, and other suitable and appropriate verses were introduced. Mr. Herbert Wallbridge, who also assisted him in the musical department of the ceremonies of the day, was frequently called for the correct and effective manner in which it was rendered.

After the ceremonies, the guests above invited to the banquet at one of a banquet prepared for the occasion and served by Brethren of the Order, consisted of the choicest varieties of the season in profusion and abundance. The joy and hilarity of the festivities continued to 11 o'clock, when the Brethren and guests (not in number) retired, apparently mutually pleased and satisfied with the entertainment, which was due to the various committees and the Brethren who assisted them in the arrangements of the festival.

The building is 59 feet in length and 29 feet in breadth and the Lodge room consisting of the upper story, is a handsome room well ventilated, and well lighted. The windows and doors are hung with white damask and festooned with green. Master's seat is one of the best specimens of the art of painting we have ever seen; the basement is of light oak, ornamented with gold veins, the pillars and pilasters on both sides, and the back ground of which are similar to the base, the whole surmounted with what is called a dove colour, marble, with veins of blue and a tablet of purple, inscribed on which, in letters of gold, are the Ten Commandments on one, and various portions of Scripture, designating the orders, on the other. The Master's and Deputy Master's chairs are elaborately carved oak.

This has taken place on seven which as far as the Loyal Orange Institution of British America is concerned will prove an important era in its records.

ONTOLD MISERY. — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, About two years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for the Gurney Foundry Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was telling this misfortune to a friend of mine, who advised me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I did so, and before one bottle was finished, I found it was benefiting me, and as a result of what I did since then, I feel confident that I am sure in complete and permanent. Do all afflicted with this distressing complaint as I heartily recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills to them. I have experienced only the persistent use of it will cure any form of dyspepsia. (Signed), TRAVELLER.

The biggest brave does not always make the best soldier.

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I ventured to try Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, and have received benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. Indeed, I do not hesitate to say that I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it a great virtue in cases of severe bronchial and lumbago complaints."

EVER FELT THAT DEATH WOULD BE WELCOME?

Mrs. Margaret Smith often did until Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart gave her a new hope and cured her heart.

"I was for two years a great sufferer from heart trouble. At times I was confined to bed, at times my pain was so intense that I would have welcomed death with joy. I was attracted to Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart by reading of some wonderful cures wrought by it. One dose gave me relief in 20 minutes. After only two bottles I can truly say I never felt better in my life." Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart.

The Store For Quality

This store excels not only in quality, but variety as well—never has it been able to show what it does to-day, and notwithstanding the fact that the clothes that wear the Quick & Robertson label are the uncommon kind, the prices of them will prove the greatest surprise of all.

The Rain Coat—the Top Coat—the Three-Quarter Length Overcoat—the New Single Breasted Sack—the New Double-Breasted Sack, are all here—There's absolutely nothing missing.

Easter Clothes

Naturally we are very proud of our Boys' Clothing Department. The showing we make for Easter is extraordinary—it is unusual, not only in wideness of variety and exclusiveness of style, but in lowness of prices—quality suit always has been is paramount

Suits for young men receive particular attention—our showing is so entirely different—the garments equal in style, individuality, and material the output of the foremost tailors, and our prices are less than HALF.

The Finest Haberdashery for Men and Boys.

This department is a complete store in itself—exclusiveness is just as possible, if not a little more so here than it is in smaller establishments.

We have it and our Up-to-Date methods of merchandising enables us to assure it to all without extra charge—our prices are regulated by quality only, and WE WILL SAVE YOU MONEY.

An Unusual Showing of Spring Hats.

This department can be depended upon, not only for quality and fairness in the prices, but the newest creations will be shown as soon as they are issued.

In its exhibition of the spring styles will be found the Christys', Barrington and Hawes blocks in soft and stiff hats at $1, $1.50, $2.00, and $2.50.

EVERYONE WITH SORE THROAT

Should know how quickly Nerviline cures. "I can recommend Nerviline very highly for sore throat," writes Mr. D. McKenzie, of St. George. "I once had a very sore throat and my chest was full of cold and soreness. Every cough hurt me. I cured myself quickly by rubbing my chest and throat vigorously with Nerviline and using it also as a gargle. I believe Nerviline to be the best general remedy for emergent sickness that one can get. We have used it for twenty years in our house." Price 25c.

PUBLIC MEETING WELL ATTENDED

Considering the Inclement Weather which Prevailed Last Night—Kingston Men Appear.

Mr. Turner, of Boston, Again Presents the Promoters's Side of Case—Some Demurrers.

Meeting Was Unanimous That We Need the Road in Our Business—Notes and Incidents.

There was, considering the inclement weather, a very good attendance in the City Hall last night at the public meeting called by Mayor Chown to discuss the proposed electric railway from Toronto to Cornwall. Many of our prominent citizens were present, and all seemed to take an active interest in the proceedings. There appeared to be no doubt that everybody was in favor of the road being built, and there was unanimous and enthusiastic upon the question of adding another $50,000 to the city's indebtedness in order to purchase the Company's bonds. In fact, the unanimity seemed to be on the other direction. However, the promoters laid the matter before the audience in a seemingly common sense and practical way, and answered, in part, the necessary questions put to them like men who wanted to be fair and let everybody see matters in their proper light. There is no exaggeration will strike one who was in attended the meeting last night but went away, after hearing the addresses and discussion, with a better opinion of the proposed project and with a conviction that the promoters were very much in earnest.

The light was execrable, the visiting gentlemen from Kingston were handicapped thereby, as they were unable to properly show their plans and "blue prints."

It was shortly after 8 o'clock when the Mayor, who acted as chairman, called the meeting to order, and asked Mr. A. B. Turner, of Boston, to address the meeting on behalf of the Ontario Electric Railway Co.

Mr. Turner's address was precisely the same as the one he delivered to the Board of Trade on Wednesday night of last week, and had already been fully reported in our columns.

Mr. Carson, of Kingston.

The next speaker was Mr. Carson, of Kingston, who said that the whole matter question for Bellevillians would be, what benefit will the road be to the city. In his experience, he thought, had proved that the more railroad connection a place had the better. The road, he was sure, would be a well built and a credit to Canada. Mr. Carson spoke of the towns along the main line as those made by Mr Turner. In conclusion he said the Company wanted the co-operation of the people.

Mr. Hyde (the people) made it known in a practical way that they wanted the road and they got it. He thought the City Council should give the people of Belleville a chance it deserved, and asked everybody to say a good word for the project, which, he believed, would prove of great advantage to this section of the country.

Mr. Carson and Hyde, and the Mayor asked if anybody wished to ask questions. The promoters were quite ready to answer any and all of them. There was, for a minute or so, no response. Mr. J. W. Johnson and Mr. Lawrence Harvell were side by side in front seats. "Mr. Johnson," said the Mayor, "have you no questions to ask?"

Mr. Johnson said he would like to see the matter dealt with fully, and suspected the whole question of municipal indebtedness.

"Platform, platform," said several voices, and the ex-Mayor took off his overcoat, mounted the platform and proceeded, for about fifteen minutes, to dissect the transaction from beginning to end.

Mr. F. W. Johnson's Views.

Mr. Johnson said he had heard Mr. Turner's remarks, both at the Board of Trade meeting and to-night, and acknowledged that the proposition had been fairly stated. Mr. Turner had glowingly pictured the benefits to the city generally, and expressed great confidence in her future. They could all agree with him in that, and was glad that Mr. S. Sprague were finding it out. Now, as regards Belleville's position in the matter. It reminded him of the case of a farmer who had, say, 100 acres of land which he considered worth $100 per acre for speculation, but, owing to the mortgage already on it, was assessed below. He would increase his indebtedness by another $50,000, and increase the assessment accordingly, than speculate and perhaps find his burden of debt increased instead of lightened. Yes, he thought, was analagous to the case of Belleville. The railway scheme, he thought, was a good one, and the prospects excellent as the city's finances, he, for one, would hesitate before increasing the debt. Mr. Johnson then gave the figures of Belleville's indebtedness, which, he said, amounted to $709,000, a great deal of which had been in the hands of speculators in Holland. What part of them could remember how they had boomed the Grand Junction Railway, which had turned out exactly as they expected it would. However, while their gross debt was $709,000, they had a sinking fund and a first-class asset in the Waterworks system, which he put at their net debt down to $441,000. That was Belleville's position to-day. What we needed, he thought, more than anything else, was a railroad to Tweed and connection with the C.P.R. If the promoters could promise us that he, for one, would be willing to give them all they ask. There was no thought, one thing we in Belleville needed more than an electric road to Toronto, namely a sewerage system. If the city spent $50,000 in the bonds of the road he was afraid the sewerage system scheme would be effectually sidetracked. Then, too, he noticed that the proposed railroad company were to put the burden of selling per bonds on the city, which would in itself mean another year while still on the tax rate. Mr. Johnson spoke of the bay bridge, in which the city took $80,000 stock. They were told at the time that the receipts from the stock would ultimately enable the city to purchase the bridge, yet it had not turned out exactly that way. Suppose, too, after the railroad was built, that it did not turn out to be successful. If it ceased running it would be of no use to be left on the bridge, but the bridge was still there, and its good offices were felt, whereas the proposed railroad, if it ceased operations, would be absolutely no use to them. Then as to running schedule. One of the speakers had said they would have a half-hour service; another said an hourly service. How would it be in winter time. He thought that in a winter like the present had been, the Company would do well if they ran a car once a month sometimes. (Laughter.) Then as to capital. The promoters said they could get unlimited capital in England and the U. S. If so, why did they come here after our paltry $50,000? They could easily, in the money market of the world, raise $50,000,000 for the scheme if it was as favorable as they said it was. There was no right under the Statutes to promise them cheap rates over their own line, but Belleville manufacturers would want to ship their wares on other places than those on the line of the proposed Ontario Electric Railway. At least he hoped so. In conclusion, Mr. Johnson said that he had expressed only his individual views, but he could not see how, unless the Company promised to let R. Crossen have with Tweed, the city would be justified in spending $50,000 of their money in the Ontario Electric Railway.

Mr. Turner Replies.

Mr. Turner came forward with a smile to answer Mr. Johnson, and began by complimenting that gentleman on the fair way he had stated the case. (Mr. Turner) had said nothing of the city's finances, but felt sure, from the experience of other municipalities, the proposed road would benefit Belleville. In the banks, they would be willing to assist in taking the city's bonds in exchange for their cash. In reply to Mr. Johnson's remarks about the bay bridge, Mr. Turner pointed out that the city had no mortgage on that after they invested their money, whereas, in the case of the railroad, they would receive security on the shape of a mortgage on the whole road. As to running in winter time, Mr. Turner put up a good argument in favor of electric roads, as against steam roads. He thought that in the long intervals between trains were much easier to keep clear of the fall of snow, as compared with the latter, and the snow thus did not get so much chance to accumulate. As to the Tweed branch line which Mr. Johnson spoke of, they would be quite willing to build it, westigate and see if, in their judgment, the road would get operating expenses and a fair profit. If so, they would build it, but otherwise, he thought, they would hardly be expected to build a road costing $900,000 for the sake of giving Tweed Belleville's $50,000. However, they were quite willing to enter into the matter further and confer with the City Council in regard to it. As to Mr. Johnson's remarks about the C.P.R. Company, Mr. Turner was so good, they would be able to secure unlimited money in the money markets. Mr. Turner pointed out that their object in trying to get places like Belleville to take up their bonds was to be able to show capitalists that the places interested would do all they could and were willing to make sacrifices to attract it. Of course the capitalists would say: "Well, if the road is a good proposition, and the people of Belleville want it, why don't the people of Belleville subscribe for some of the stock themselves? If the people of Belleville have no confidence in the road, in which they are directly interested, how can you expect us, who are not directly interested, to have any?" As to the bonds, the city was not asked to purchase them till the road was built, and in operation from Toronto to Kingston. In regard to Mr. Johnson's remarks about freight rates, Mr. Turner was their intention to handle through freight by means of transhipment, but they could not, of course, promise the low rates on any line but their own. Mr. Turner then made a few remarks relative to the advisability of the road should be built or not. If the expression was in the affirmative, then they (the promoters) could confer with the Council and the matter be fully investigated.

Must be Submitted to Ratepayers.

Mr. F. W. Johnson said it would be necessary for the Council, before passing a by-law to purchase the bonds, to submit the matter to the ratepayers.

"Yes," he was told,

Mr. Whining, of Kingston.

Mr. Whining, a legal gentleman, of Kingston, made another reply to Mr. Johnson's remarks. Mr. Johnson had spoken of Belleville's debt, and had mentioned the Waterworks system as a fair asset. So it was, but they would also have to consider the debt for that. The ships of a first mortgage on the railroad, and they were not asked to go on until it was completed from Toronto to Kingston. They were not asking for a bonus, but a loan of $50,000 for 20 years, which would give the city, as an asset, a first mortgage on the road for $952,000. The only question, it seemed to him, was, Is the asset a good one, and a safe security? He thought it was, and read figures in proving that other electric roads in Canada, of a like character, had paid and were paying handsomely; "Working at a large profit," he was told by Mr. Whining, expressed it. He thought he remarks forthcame a fair answer to some of Mr. Johnson's remarks.

Rather a Pertinent Question.

Mr. Johnson asked what the terminal points, Kingston and Toronto, had done in the matter.

Mr. Whining said nothing so far. They had not yet been interviewed. The promoters, he said, had to begin somewhere, so came to Belleville.

Mr. Johnson said they could hardly have found a better place than Belleville, which, he said laughingly, was always ahead of Kingston.

Mr. Turner said there was at present a steady railway light in Kingston, and they wanted to be that get settled before laying their plan before the city.

Mr. Walter Allwell.

Mr. Walter Allwell spoke briefly. He was in favor of the proposed road, but, with the present state of the city's indebtedness, most of which came from aiding railroads, he would hesitate before voting to increase it.

Mr. Rabbins.

Mr Rabbuts did not see why the promoters came to us for money when, as they said, the proposition was such a good one. Why did they not get the money from capitalists?

The Mayor pointed out that Mr. Turner had already answered that question. They wanted the municipalities to purchase bonds as an expression of confidence in the road.

Mr. C. P. Holton.

Mr. C. P. Holton spoke in favor of the project. They should not, he thought, do anything to discourage the promoters. The road, he believed, would be a great benefit for Belleville. He thought they should do all they could to find out all they could in connection with the project, and do their best to bring about the building of the road, which, he believed, would be a great thing for the city.

Mr. Gorman.

Mr. Gorman spoke in favor of electric roads in general, which had materially helped some places he knew of.

An Unanimous Vote.

There were no more speakers and the Mayor said they might as well proceed to get an expression of opinion from the meeting. If the expression was in favor of the road going built, the promoters would approach the Council and submit to that body what plans, papers, etc., they had bearing on the project.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell, laughingly—"We're all in favor of the road being built."

The Mayor—"All in favor of the road being built say 'Aye.'"

Everybody stood up.

The Mayor—"All opposed."

Not one got on his feet.

And then the meeting adjourned, most of the audience seizing the opportunity to examine the "blue prints" of the proposed line, which was hanging on the wall.

PROF. CAPPON'S LECTURE

POETRY AND MUSIC AT GRADUATES' CLUB LAST EN-TERTAINMENT.

An evening of rare pleasure and profit was enjoyed by a large and appreciative audience in Bridge street School lecture hall last night, when Professor Cappon, professor of literature in Queen's University, lectured on "Browning," "Kipling," and "Burns," the first name being characterized as the great poet, and the other two as the representatives of popular and folk poetry. The music which preceded and followed the lecture was very appreciative and stirring. Mr. Byron Hodson, accompanied by Miss J. Cunnington, rendered in excellent style, "Mandalay," and "The Absolute" and "The Brass o' Mar." Miss Norah Lister, accompanied by Miss Ethel Robertson, scored a veritable triumph in the old tradition of Kipling's "Recessional" and "Boots," and "Spring has come."

A hearty vote of thanks was moved by Mr. Curtis Bogart, seconded by Mr. A. McCaskile, and was felicitously conveyed to the lecturer and the vocalists by the chairman, Mr. Ponton, who, at this final lecture, took occasion to express the thanks of the Graduates' Club of which he is president, to the authorities of St. Agnes' School for their kindness in tendering the use of the hall, and to the various ladies and gentlemen who, throughout the season, had contributed so much to the success of the evenings spent together in intellectual and musical enjoyment.

LIFTING THE BURDEN
With a Gentle Hand—ANTI-PILL.

Woman's life is a battle with nerves that sap strength and energy. Shattered nerves aggravate and promote chronic troubles. There is no remedy like Dr. Leonhardt's ANTI-PILL for lifting the burden of pain that is dragging you down. It begins its work in the stomach from which the blood is fed and its power controlled.
ANTI-PILL embraces a new principle. Its effects are different from anything else, and there is no habit forming or wonderful influence. Dr. Leonhardt has prepared the formula entirely free from the injurious ingredients common to present day Pills, and it is the ideal system treatment. RIVALS FOR NEXT CANAL

Port Hope and Trenton Submit Evidence to Transportation Committee.

Peterboro, March 26.—Port Hope and Trenton, the rivals for the outlet of the Trent Canal, submitted evidence before the Transportation Commission at its session yesterday morning. Both were agreed upon the importance of the canal as a national waterway, by which the products of the west could find outlet, and that it should be completed as early as possible.

Port Hope claimed that no thorough independent survey of their route had ever been made for an eight or ten-foot canal, such as they devised would be to meet the requirements of trade, and held that the route was cheaper, quicker, safer and more direct from Georgian Bay than any other.

Trenton, on the other hand, argued that the open lake in which the canal would open at Port Hope was dangerous to barge navigation; that there would be no power development on that route; that the loss of water by percolation and evaporation would be considerable, and that the natural current in the river was the only proper one to take.

Evidence was taken from representatives of Barrie, Orillia and Belleville, establishing the fact that the canal would be a great equalizer of freight rates, effecting a saving of large amounts to each municipality in the item of coal alone, and that it would encourage industrial development.

McINTOSH BROS.

THE G.T.P. CONTRACT

First Order in the House of Commons on April 5.

Opposition Speakers Oppose Appointment of a Canadian of a General Officer Commanding of the Militia—Sir Frederick Borden Gives Considerable Information Concerning Amendments to the Militia Act.

Ottawa, March 26.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier informed the House yesterday that on Monday he would lay on the table of the House the correspondence between the Government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. He also stated that the resolution ratifying the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway contract would be made the first order after the introduction of bills on Tuesday, April 5, and not be continued until finally disposed of.

The Militia Act Bill.

Col. Sam Hughes took strong ground in opposition to the provision in the bill to amend the Militia Act qualifying a Canadian officer for the position of G.O.C. He held, and members on the other side of the position agreed with him, that there is no reflection on Canadian officers in the present law which makes the position of general officer commanding, open only to officers of the British army. It was wholly a question of experience, they argued and Canadian officers could not possibly have the experience of British army officers.

Imputation Against Canadians.

Sir Frederick insisted that the present regulation is a distinct imputation on the ability of the Canadian officer. It specifically disqualified Canadian officers for the position of G. O. C., and the Minister of Militia energetically argued that the highest military post in Canada should be filled only by a competent Canadian officers. He admitted that the object of the opposition's argument that under the present law a Canadian officer may be appointed general officer G.O.C. by taking a course in the British army, but this was a roundabout course which should not be imposed on officers in our own militia.

Question of Salaries.

In moving the resolution, the Minister of Militia said he had decided to move the director-general of the salaries from the civil to the military side, his salary standing at $2,500 per year, the same as that of the adjutant-general and quartermaster-general.

Col. Hughes declared that $6,000, the salary of the general officer commanding, was grossly inadequate. It was, he said, not more than half the amount paid to G.O.C.'s in some of the lesser colonies. The adjutant-general received $12,000 a year, and a major-general $7,000 and upwards.

Suggests Sir Percy Girouard.

"I suggested the other day," said Col. Hughes, "that Sir Percy Girouard, a Canadian, would make a good G.O.C. for this country. I forgot at the time that Sir Percy Girouard receives a salary of $7,000 a year, or three and a half times what the G.O.C. receives in Canada."

Col. Hughes said surely a military expert at the top of his profession deserved more than $6,000 a year. "Don't be afraid of the men behind you who are kicking," said the colonel, addressing himself to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. "If you take up the question of better pay for the general officer commanding the militia, the country will stand by you."

Sir Frederick Borden said it was not fair to compare salaries in Canada with salaries in England, since in England a major-general would have hundreds of thousands of men under his command. It was a fact to be remembered that the G.O.C. in Canada receives traveling expenses, including trips to and from England.

No Canadian Pension.

Mr. Clarke asked if there were any provisions for pensioning the G.O.C. Sir Frederick replied that there was no pension except that provided for by the Act in the case of the British army. If a Canadian officer were appointed to the position, a pension would be made for him in the way of an allowance. If he were a very active man he might be given a position on the staff of the Imperial forces, which would be done by a system of exchange of officers. At present the commandant, one of the professors of Kingston Military College an officers of the British army. The G. O. C., the quartermaster-general and the chief of the Intelligence Department are also British army officers.

Would Be Accepted.

It had been represented to the British authorities that qualified Canadian officers should be given an equal number of positions in the British army. This offer was likely to be accepted.

Was No Reflection.

Mr. R. L. Borden contended that the present act was no reflection on the Canadian militia. It was simply meant that to qualify for the position of G.O.C. an officer must have taken a course in the British army. There were good and capable officers in the Dominion militia, he declared. Would the bill before the House relieve Col. Gwatkin, chief of staff, or Borden, simply because it did not mean that he must take a course in the office of the G.O.C.?

Col. Thompson defended the change in the act. The resolution passed.

Provincial Subsidies.

In the House Mr. Borden called the attention of the Government to a clause in the speech from the throne, delivered at the opening of the Quebec Legislature, in which it was stated that there was every reason to believe that the important subject of the readjustment of the provincial subsidies is being seriously considered by the Government of Canada. Mr. Borden said he gathered from the Prime Minister's remarks that the subject had not come under the consideration of the Government thus far, and he concluded that the person who drafted this speech for the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec must have been under a misapprehension.

"The Premiers of all the provinces," replied Sir Wilfrid Laurier, "have approached the Government on two or three occasions, but especially last fall, with the object of obtaining a readjustment of the subsidies as defined by the Act of Confederation. This subject has not yet been taken up by the Government, but I stated personally to one or two of the Premiers, and amongst them to Mr. Parent, that in my judgment it would be made at an early date the subject of serious consideration on the part of the Government. Nothing more, however, has been done."

To Rest the G.T.P.

Ottawa, March 26.—One of the rumors to reach here is to the effect that William Mackenzie will offer to build a transcontinental line superior to the proposed Grand Trunk Pacific and save the country thirty millions. The story is accompanied by another, that some of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's colleagues in the Cabinet are friendly to Mr. Mackenzie's proposition.

CANADA'S OCEAN PORTS.

Lord Strathcona Corrects Misstatement and Says Winter Port Is Halifax.

London, March 26.—(C.A.P.)—Lord Strathcona writes to The Times combating Sir C. H. McLaren's statement that the Canadian ports are closed in winter, and says that all the statements as describing Halifax and St. John as always accessible are correct, and that the safest harbors in the world.

Ice Breaking Government.

The Right Hon. John Morley, speaking at St. Alban's, said the country was sick of a Government which had wrecked or water-logged its own constitution. But all. Only one Government act promised to be a success—the negotiations between France and England. The next general election would turn on free trade, and the great labor party would come to the front.

Embryonic Home Rule.

The Home Government discussed yesterday an embryonic measure of home rule for Scotland. Replying to a bill applying to Wales the system of private bill legislation employed for Scotland, Right Hon. W. H. Long, M.P. (president of the Local Government Board), speaking for the Government, sympathized with the Welsh demand, but considered it unwise to pass the bill until the success of the Scottish experiment was attained. A select committee will enquire into the Scotch system. The Welsh members were not pressing that portion of the bill setting up a new form of administrative machinery based on the county councils.

BABE WAS LEFT TO FREEZE.

Some Owen Sound Children Make a Gruesome Discovery.

Owen Sound, March 26.—This town has a sensation in the murder of a newly born baby, which was found at noon yesterday by children playing in the street. Apparently it had lain in a snow bank on Peel street for six or seven weeks. It was wrapped in a coarse covering of rag carpet. The body was taken to the morgue, where it was found that a cord, like a shoe string, was wound around the neck, and had been pulled tight enough to strangle it. This, the police consider, is sufficient evidence that the child was murdered by its unnatural mother.

Coroner Cornwall has been held an inquest yesterday afternoon. After viewing the remains, he ordered an adjournment till Tuesday, to receive the post-mortem testimony. The Attorney-General has been notified, and it is expected that a special officer will be sent here to work up the case.

The body is that of a healthy, well-formed infant. The coroner thinks it was alive when left in the snow bank.

THE SPRING FRESHET.

Bad Week in the Watersheds of Toronto Junction—Factories All Crippled Up—

On the Grand River.

Toronto Junction, March 26.—A serious break in the water main occurred yesterday morning about 8 o'clock, which will necessitate factories closing for the next two or three days. The break was occasioned by a freshet caused by the rapid melting of snow in the bush west of Elizabeth street. The water found its way through the sand, and on the road, which had here been filled in to a depth of twenty feet, was carried away bodily. Five lengths of the ten-inch main were carried down with it. These lengths are now lying in the ravine on the Kennedy estate, about 170 yards from where the break occurred.

When the break occurred it was not known at the pumping station, which continued to belch through the boilers, and the result was that the raging away as much of the street as the depth of the ravine from one side of the gully acted as a syphon, and the syphoning of the water that was in the Junction. With the waterworks engine pumping water from the north, the broken hydrant syphoning the water from the Dominion on to the west, the flood flowing from the west, there is little doubt that at least a hundred feet of roadway 20 to 25 feet deep was washed away.

All Factories Closed Up.

As a result of the break, all the factories on the west side were obliged to close for the day. The C.P.R. shops and blacksmith shop, also Campbell's Mill, ceased work. Nearly 1,000 men were thrown out of employment temporarily.

Following is a list of the factories and men employed by each:

C.P.R. shops, 500 men.

Gurney Foundry Company, 200 men.

Canada Cycle & Motor Company, 200.

Heintzman & Co., 250.

Dodge Manufacturing Company, 200.

Nordheimer Piano Company, 100.

Wilkinson Plow Works, 150.

Queen City Mills, 50.

Canadian Engine Company, 40.

Comfort, Soap Company, 100.

Worsted Braid Company, 25.

The C.P.R. also uses a great amount of water for its engines and is greatly inconvenienced by the trouble.

A special meeting of the Board of Works was held in the evening, when it was decided to accept the offer from Toronto city, of connecting the main on Regent street, Toronto, with the main at Bloor street, Yorkville in the town. This will give the town fire protection.

Grand River Broke.

Brantford, March 26.—The Grand River at this point broke up yesterday afternoon. Though some disastrous floods have occurred at this period in the past, nothing like such a great damage is anticipated this spring. The river had risen about four feet, but the ice is proceeding quietly and showing no sign of breaking of a damaging nature will occur unless an ice jam rolls up. Even then the residents along the river bank will not be alarmed. The big dykes which have been built on the river are said to be ample protection. However, the treacherous water is being watched closely night and day by the civic authorities. At Glenmorris, some miles north of here, a bridge was taken away by the on-rush of water. The water is rising fast.

Persons Fined.

Berlin, March 26.—The Grand River is rising rapidly, and there promises to be a good sized ice and break up of the ice inside of 24 hours. The river is spanned by five bridges between here and Galt, but the only one in any imminent danger should a sudden thaw occur, is the ice bridge at Blair, which is a fill-about bridge. The river now over a foot of water over-flowing the ice, which, although over two feet thick, will not stand the pressure very much longer.

Cattle by Railway Stolen.

Toronto, March 26.—J. J. Keegan by mistake took a draught of cattle and left yesterday morning early. He in dead. He lived at 182 Argyle street with his wife and infant child. Deceased, it is supposed, arose to take some medicine. In the darkness he made a mistake and secured the wrong bottle. Medical men were called in, but they arrived too late. Coroner Pickering decided an inquest was unnecessary. Deceased was 25 years of age and a glass blower by trade.

Hardly any rubbing with Sunlight Soap. The Sunlight Maids say its child's play.

SUNLIGHT SOAP

Will wash anything, but to secure best results with least labor should be used in the Sunlight way. First dip the articles to be washed in a tub of lukewarm water and draw it out of the water on a wash board and rub the soap over it lightly. Then roll them up tightly and lay under the water. Leave them there for thirty minutes and let Sunlight Soap do its work. Commence rubbing the clothes lightly on the wash board and the dirt will drop out. Turn the garments inside out to get at the seams but don't use any more rubbing. No need to scald or boil a single piece and don't wash through two suds. Rinse in lukewarm water taking care to wash out all the dirty suds, but then ring out and hang out to dry. That's the Sunlight way. It makes the clothes snowy white.

ASK FOR THE OCTAGON BAR

Sunlight Soap washes the clothes white and won't injure the hands.

NO SECRET.

There is no secret about Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil. The label tells the whole story. There is a knack in making it. The only secret about it is the secret of its success.

This year, when cod liver oil is very scarce and high, all kinds of cheap, inferior oils are used to take its place, and all sorts of things presented as substitutes. Think of petroleum being taken as a substitute for cod liver oil! —too absurd. Think of the so-called wines, extracts and cordials of cod liver oil! —they are simply the shadow without the substance; no food value in them.

Scott's Emulsion — "The Old Reliable" is the same yesterday, to-day and forever.

Its quality and purity can be absolutely depended upon at all times.

Admiral Togo Fails to Bottle Up Port Arthur.

Refused to Engage Russian Fleet—Russian Torpedo Boat Lost and Seven Killed and Thirteen Wounded on Sunday Morning—Russian and Japanese Troops Clash—Chinese Bandit Band of Fifty Annihilated By the Russians.

St. Petersburg, March 28.—Vice-Admiral Makaroff, commanding the Russian naval forces at Port Arthur, has sent the following telegram, dated yesterday, to the Emperor:

"I beg most humbly to report that at 2 o'clock this morning the enemy made a second attempt to block the entrance to the inner roadstead. For this purpose they despatched four large merchant steamers, convoyed by six torpedo boats, to the entrance.

"The enemy's ships were promptly discovered by the searchlights, and were bombarded by the batteries and by the guardships Bobr and Otvajny. Fearing the enemy's ships might break through, Lieut. Krinkin, commanding the guard torpedo boat Stilni, attacked the enemy and destroyed the latter of the foremost Japanese steamer with a torpedo.

"This steamer turned to the right and was followed by two others, with the result that the three were stranded to the right of the entrance. A fourth steamer went to the right of the enemy's ships, and likewise sank to the side of the Otvajny. The Stilni then battled with the enemy's six torpedo boats. Engineer Artificer Swyerof and six seamen were killed and the commander and twelve seamen were wounded.

"At daybreak the enemy's battleship and cruiser squadrons appeared, and I proceeded with the fleet under my charge to meet the enemy.

"The second attempt of the Japanese to block the entrance to Port Arthur has failed, thanks to the energetic defence by sea and land forces, who acted as they did during the first attempt.

"The harbor remains perfectly clear."

Destroyed the Silas.

A further telegram to the Emperor from Vice-Admiral Makaroff says:

"I respectfully report that the enemy having withdrawn, I returned to the harbor with the fleet.

"The torpedo boat destroyed torpedo boat Stilni, which stranded on a reef, in consequence of damage caused to her engines by one of the enemy's shells, was moated during the course of the night and entered the harbor, thanks to the energy of her crew. Her commander, Lieut. Krinkiski, who was slightly wounded in the arm, did not quit his post."

Particulars of "Retiring Fly" Attempt.

St. Petersburg, March 28.—The following despatch has been received from Gen. Smyrnoff:

"Port Arthur, March 27.—Last night after moonrise the Japanese attempted to block the entrance to the harbor.

"Four fire ships were sent toward the port conveyed by a torpedo flotilla. Toward 2.15 the approach of the enemy's ships was perceived by the guardships and batteries, which simultaneously opened upon them heavy fire.

"The fire ships were preceded by torpedo boats, and were followed at a considerable distance by larger ships, which opened on the forts previous to the action of the fire ships and torpedo boats.

"Owing to the heartiness of our artillery fire, and the boldness of our torpedo boats, the fire ships did not reach the entrance of the harbor. Two of them grounded on a reef under Golden Hill, another sank behind the first turn of the channel, sunk by a torpedo from our boats, and the fourth sank, its bows touching a Japanese steamer sunk in the previous attempt off Majchnaja Geroda.

"The entrance to the harbor remains clear.

"A hotchkiss one-inch calibre quick firer was found aboard one of the sunken steamers, from which a fire had been kept up on torpedo boats.

"A boat left each of the sunken ships carrying their crews. One of these is believed to have been picked up.

"Towards 4 a.m. the enemy's torpedo boats retired, and the bombardment ceased.

"Vice-Admiral Makaroff at once proceeded in a steam launch to inspect the enemy's sunken steamers.

"The enemy's torpedo boats reappeared at 5 o'clock this morning. They were sighted south of Port Arthur, and the batteries re-opened on them. Towards 6 o'clock the enemy's squadron appeared on the horizon, and ours steamed out to meet it. At 6.40, the battleship opened fire. Our ships' batteries soon ceased, the Japanese squadron fell to the southward, evidently declining an engagement. At 10 o'clock they disappeared below the horizon."

It is stated that one Russian torpedo boat was sunk in the engagement at Port Arthur this morning, but is thought the vessel can be refloated.

Chinese Mixing In.

St. Petersburg, March 28.—It, is stated on apparently reliable authority that Admiral Makaroff's report of his reconnaissance of the Elliott Islands, yesterday, contained the startling statement that he captured a junk filled with Chinese regular troops, which was being towed by a Japanese gunboat.

A report from Vladivostock says that a mine has been discovered under the fortress, with wires leading to a Chinese house in the town.

Russians and Japs Clash.

St. Petersburg, March 28.—A telegram from Viceroy Alexieff has been received by the Emperor, dated Mukden, March 26. It gives a report from Mistchenko, as follows:

"At 11 o'clock in the morning of March 23 I sent two Sotnias of cossohire in order to ascertain the strength of the enemy's forces. The troops crossed the River Chongchongring, Gu Schila, when, after one-half versts (about one mile from Pakchieng), sighted a mounted post of the enemy, consisting of 15 Chinamen, which, on the approach of our Sotnia, scattered, being followed by infantry. Our Cossacks requested the support of two Sotnii-Cossacks, and opened fire against the post and patrol, at 400 yards range.

"One Japanese was killed and a horse of the enemy were killed. After firing two volleys our patrol retired, on learning that the enemy's infantry was advancing. Second found Pakchieng to be occupied by the enemy. There are two companies and about three squadrons of cavalry of the enemy on the right bank of the Pakchieng, with posts two versts from the river.

"There are three thousand Japanese in the town of Anju, and warships and transports are constantly arriving at Chinampo. Troops landed at Chinanpo are marching to Pingyang, there concentrating to Sinanu and Kangsive.

The report of Gen. Smyrnoff from Port Arthur says: "Our company of Cossacks has defeated and almost completely annihilated a band of Chinese bandits, about fifty strong, near Vitsiwo. There were no losses on our side."

Steamer Leaves Port Arthur.

St. Petersburg, March 28.—For the first time since the war began the Russian Admiralty on Saturday left Port Arthur and the protection of the guns. It was the sole reason for the ships Vice-Admiral Makaroff sent on despatch to the Emperor, in explanation of the reason for the cruise, but its object is not clearly revealed in a statement of the contents of the Vice-Admiral's despatch made public last night.

Suffice it to say that the Russians has leaked out to show that Vice-Admiral Makaroff, having repaired his warships Retvizan and the cruisers Pallada and Boyarin, considered the squadron sufficiently strong to run the risk of an encounter with the Japanese ships, which were not in sight when he steamed out of Port Arthur Saturday. The published statement announces that the object of Vice-Admiral Makaroff was to examine several neighboring islands. There has been considerable doubt as to where the Japanese fleet maintains its base.

Saw Russian Fleet.

London, March 28.—A Times correspondent, on a despatch boat in the Far East, reports having seen a Russian squadron of five battleships and cruisers, thirty miles southwest of Port Arthur, Saturday afternoon, steering for Port Arthur, their exposed flank being protected by a line of torpedo boat destroyers. The same correspondent, wiring on Sunday, says he saw the Japanese fleet leaving Port Arthur after the fight of that morning, which he was too late to witness. A close examination of the vessels showed no signs of their having had hard usage.

The correspondent remarks also that the Russian ships are using Japanese coal, the smoke of which can be detected from fifteen to twenty miles distant, while the Japanese are burning Welsh coal, which makes very little smoke.

Woman Lawyer Burned to Death.

Detroit, Mich., March 28.—Miss Dertha VanderKamp Green, daughter of a former prominent attorney of Syracuse, N. Y., was burned to death in her home on Woodward avenue here yesterday. She had gone down into the basement before daylight, and it is supposed ignited her clothing with a match. She lived but a few hours.

Crown Witness Hiding.

Winnipeg, March 28.—The trial of Wilcox, at Regina, for mail robbery, was again adjourned Saturday, owing to the absence of Brenner, an important witness for the Crown, who is supposed to be in hiding across the line.

Marconi's Father Dead.

Rome, March 28.—Guiseppi Marconi, the father of the inventor, died at Bologna yesterday, aged 83 years.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The title of Alderman in Belleville must, like virtue, be its own reward. Otherwise we hardly see how busy merchants and manufacturers would give up their valuable time, free, gratis, for nothing, to the service of the city, and in return receive lukewarm recognition from the majority of people and downright, slanderous abuse from the minority. And that is undoubtedly how things go in Belleville.

* * *

These few reflective remarks are called forth by the fact that the City Council on Saturday came in for many hard and unfair knocks, the same coming from a source which can easily be guessed without being mentioned. The hard work of different chairmen was sneered at, the statement was made that the tax rate this year has been put to an "enormous height," and it was also affirmed that the city had, on Saturday morning, through the breaking of the main, been without water for some hours. The last statement, we are told by an Alderman, was untrue.

Our informant said it looked like a vicious attempt to get the Underwriters to raise the rates in the city, but surely no resident of Belleville could be so unpatriotic as to attempt to thus bring muscalled-for expense on our merchants and citizens. We hope not, but actions speak for themselves.

* * *

As to the statement that our taxes this year have reached an "enormous height," it is only necessary to state, as we have already stated, that the tax rate this year is three-tenths of a mill higher than last year, which means an increase of exactly thirty cents on each $1000 of assessment. That, we take it, is not an "enormous" increase. And the figures been given by the "back seaters" the effect, of course, would not be so injurious, but to make the bold statement that the taxes had risen "up to an "enormous height" is apt to make strangers think we are in a very bad way, indeed, when, in fact, the reverse is the case.

* * *

What the object of this abuse can be we know not. Perhaps it is personal animosity to the Aldermen; perhaps it is the advancing of the interests of a concern for which the traducer is alleged to hold a brief; perhaps it is simply caused by a bad liver; but, whatever the cause is, there can be no doubt that it is decidedly unfair to the hard-working gentlemen who spend their valuable time, for nothing, to advance the interests of the city, and can have no other effect than that of working irreparable injury to the municipality as a whole.

* * *

Pope Pius has issued a mandement forbidding females singing in choirs of public churches, but a cable telegram from Hamilton says, is to take effect in that city after the Easter services. What's to become of the sweet songsters?

* * *

English free traders are a queer lot. Charles McLaren, M. P., says:—"Thanks to the bounties, the quantity of pig iron from Canada is imported into England are increasing month by month," and that, as the United States and Germany put up bounties, they will be less formidable competitors with our blast furnaces than Canada." Suppose this is correct, is it not better from an Imperial standpoint that supplies should come from a portion of the Empire than from foreign countries, particularly if cheaper?

* * *

The Education Committee of the Cheshire County Council, England, made an attempt to prevent the teaching of the Bible in the county schools, but were defeated, upon which the Bishop of Chester protested it "is a satisfactory to learn that the attempt is being made in its true character and repudiated accordingly. It is unfortunate that such an attempt has been made just when we Protestants of all denominations are celebrating the centenary of the Bible Society." The Bishop was right.

* * *

The Mansion House Committee, London, England, have been given authority to expend a balance of the money in hand in assisting genuine unemployed to emigrate to Canada. A good use to which to put the money. But it is only the industrial class that is wanted in Canada.

The High Commissioner for the Commonwealth of Australia in London receives a salary of £3,500 ($17,500). Lord Strathcona, the Canadian High Commissioner, receives only $10,000. Not half enough for the position he holds. It will be difficult to find a successor to Lord Strathcona, unless he's a millionaire.

A telegram from Vienna of March 25th says:—"Two female infants, grown together from the waist to the hips, were taken to the hospital in Miskolcy, in Hungary, to be separated. The doctors refused to separate the children on the ground that it would kill them.

There is nothing like being in the newspaper business. Le Journal of of Montreal has now five libel suits on its hand for having stated that a certain lot who publish-ed a newspaper were "a little group of Canadians professing to have no religious beliefs, and making a specialty of insulting the most respectable and venerable persons among us." They claim $5,000 each to mend a damaged reputation.

* * *

Mr. S. H. Blake delivered a lecture the other day before the Canadian Club, Toronto, on "Higher Ideals," in which he denounced election corruption, declaring that any party in power who profited by the frauds committed at an election were as bad as those who committed them. Honest men would endorse this sentiment, but the pious editor of the Toronto Globe denounces Mr. Blake for "taking advantage" of what it calls "the courtesy of the Canadian Club to vent his political spleen." Such is the teaching of a sterling Grit editor in the 20th century. What next?

* * *

To-day's despatches make it appear probable that there will be another naval fight before long. But those Russian reports of the Japs declining an engagement should be taken with a grain of salt. Admiral Togo is as eager for an engagement as a bear year girl.

Sports and Pastimes

SPORTING NOTE AND COMMENT.

The Kilties' Band of Belleville played association football with a Los Angeles team on March 19, and the Californians played to beat the Band, which they did very easily, the score being 7-3. The musicians played in kilts, while their pipers paraded the sides of the field playing "Hoot, mon. There's Water in it," or something like that, and a Los Angeles paper says fed up condition of the town and musical comedy, a bargain day rush and a riot. Frank Robinson, of this city, played full back, and he was never more than half full in his life.

The Hastings Star has the following to say in reference to the formation of a Trent Valley League League:

"To enter the O.L.A. nowadays means that you must have considerable "pull" and plenty of the "long green" to make any impression. We have material in Hastings for a good junior team out we haven't the money like some of our bigger neighbors to secure outside help so as to be capable of holding the pace set by the teams that generally make up the junior series of the O.L.A.

"We suggest that the senior teams of Peterboro and Belleville be barred for they are in the lumpers business at all times. While the Port Hope seniors have the same failing they are not looking for something easy to go up against. By all means form a Trent Valley League and be sure and have a residence rule."

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

FORMER BELLEVILLE VOCALIST WELL KNOWN IN CO.

The Los Angeles Cal., Examiner, in noticing a concert by the Belleville Kilties' Band in that city, says: "The Kilties presented their farewell programme at Hazard's Pavilion last night. Their numbers were rendered with the snap that usually characterized them and the saudeville features were exceptionally attractive, including Jock Irish and Scotch reels. An added feature was the rendition of "Holy City" and "Comin' Thro The Rye", by Miss Catherine Ward, a contralto from Belleville, Canada, who is now living in this city. Miss Ward has an exceptionally strong and well modulated tone, a charming stage presence and was a member of the Daly Opera Company of New York before coming to this city."

A LAUGHING SUCCESS.

The Four Cohans' everlasting musical comedy success, "The Governor's Son," will occupy the boards at the Carman to-morrow night, March 29. New songs and bright, catchy music make the attraction one of the successful hits of musical comedies. There are thirty-six people in the cast and the present edition of the play has been published down to the times. The cast is a great one and not one who likes sweet singing and laughable situations should miss this entertainment.

EARL OF PAWTUCKET COMING.

Madager Carman takes great pleasure in informing the theatre-going public that he has secured for next Saturday evening the great straight comedy "The Earl of Pawtucket,". This company is only playing the principal cities of Canada and was only secured after a great deal of trouble. Being under the management of Klirke La Shelle, the noted successful manager, is a guarantee that the production will be an elaborate one. The company gave great satisfaction at the Academy in Montreal this week as was evidenced by the accounts in the press. The plan will open on Thursday morning at Biggs'.

WHY CATARRH POISONS THE SYSTEM.

The catarrhal germ excites inflammation, offensive secretions are thrown off and pass into the circulation, contaminating the river of life and thus wreck the whole body. Every catarrh victim should use fragrant healing Catarrhozone, the surest cure for every type of catarrh yet discovered. Catarrhozone can't fail to cure because its vapor kills the germs and removes the cause of the trouble. Then it soothes and heals, stops the cough and relieves the stuffed up condition of the nose and throat. Tens of thousands have been cured by Catarrhozone, which is guaranteed. Use only Catarrhozone. Complete outfit $1.00; trial size, 25c.

WHY shouldn't one Optician know more than another, then?

As a matter of fact he does.

DO we have the best instruments and plenty of experience?

Easy to answer, however, judge by our custom. People come to OUR Optician because he is recommended. His examination is thorough and accurate.

He has but the one profession and in that we claim he is as competent as any in Canada.

THE SIXTH SENSE.

Scientists Claim One Means Perception, Has Been Overlooked.

It is commonly supposed that a human being has five senses—sight, hearing, feeling, smelling and tasting. It is now held, however, that to these must be added a sixth.

The sense of muscular tension that we experience when we sustain or raise a weight is really distinctive any or all of the so called "five senses" and is therefore entitled a sixth sense, say's Success. Physiologists who have tried to measure it, however, are confronted by numerous difficulties. Not only is it hard to separate its indications from those of the sense of touch, as mentioned, but the ratio by which the weight rests, but the feeling of heaviness differs when the sustaining member is moved in order to "heft" the weight, as the provincial term has it. It is really distinct the moment avoids all this trouble by causing the subject to hold the weight suspended by a thread between his thumb and forefinger. When the weight is suddenly supported from below by raising a board pit contact is made with it the person who holds the weight feels a sense of relief the weight be sufficient, and this is entirely independent of all the elements that have hitherto been considered. Even the smallest weight that is necessary to produce the sensation is the measure of the muscular sense in the person experimented upon.

The Future of Shorthand.

The conclusion at the end of a lecture on the history of Captain Thomas Lloyd, a master of shorthand reporting in America, "It suggests a glance at the future of that system of writing. When we are trying in so many ways to economize the methods of handling business and our time and labor it is not to be supposed that the old method of writing will continue to be used universally when printing press was hailed as a relief from the tedious task of the scribe, reading manuscript; but, while it did much, it did not fill the entire want. Then came the typewriter, and to meet another large gap.

At present the typewriter and stenographic system of writing go hand in hand. They supplement each other. But the time is not far distant when the typewriter will be retired, to a great extent, because letters and reports written in shorthand can be read correctly, without being translated at length on the typewriter. That will be because so many people will be able to read shorthand that the translation will not be necessary. And then the everybody will wonder why it did not come long ago.

Difficult Plurals.

The difficulty of forming the plural of words for different kinds of fish is not solved by lexicographers any more than by grammarians. The Oxford dictionary says of the word "cod," for example, that the plural is 'rare, and it gives a quotation from a writer of the seventeenth century in which occur "Cods" and "Codsheads." During the last few years we have several times seen trouts as the plural of trout. Dr. Murray, editor of the dictionary, calls "three brace of trouts." And there is, of course, Hood's use in the "Dream of Eugene Aram" for the expression "trouts in a pool." By the way, Dr. Smith in his excellent dictionary says that the collective plural, salmon, corresponds to a class of neuter nouns in the Old Saxon and Old Norse and Icelandic in the oldest English. And fishes are and are "sheep."—London Chronicle.

Lockjaw.

As to lockjaw, the Pasteur laboratories send out a steady supply of antitoxin from their well kept stables, and a break of this disease very much as hydrophobia. In both cases, it is true, the treatment is only preventive, not curative, but this is usually sufficient, as the symptoms are generally indicated in advance. If by some sad oversight hydrophobia does break out it always runs its course, as every physician is with lockjaw there is still a change of saving life, even after an outbreak, by inoculating lockjaw bacteria directly into the brain. The record of recovery is 60 per cent.

Don't Like Baths or Fresh Air.

A Dundeen (Germany) physician, having collected a list of from six questions to seventy-three persons who were more than ninety years old, learned, among other things, that all of them are below the average height, most of them have light hair and have retained plenty of it, and none of them has any teeth remaining. All but five are inveterate jokers and admit being "wild" in their youth. Few of them take kindly to the bath or to fresh air.

A Canal Across England.

How many people know that the south of England is an island entirely surrounded by water? For over a hundred years England has been cut in two by a canal which connects the Severn with the Thames, making a continuous water way from Bristol to London. Until 1864 the canal was largely used, but railway competition then made it unprofitable. Last year the canal was cleaned and repaired, and traffic has just been recommenced.

A Singer's Treasures.

Mme. Marie Roze-Mapleson among her many treasures two strangely contrasted memorials. One is a programme printed in gold letters on white satin of the songs she once sang before Queen Victoria, and the other is a beautifully executed testimonial presented to her by a convict forger when she sang to the inmates of Auburn prison in New York. The testimonial, which is a beautiful work of art, was executed entirely by the convict himself.

JAPANESE POETRY.

It Is Confined to Lyrical Effusions of the Utmost Brevity.

Japanese poetry is absolutely confined to lyrical effusions of the utmost brevity. The Japanese poem is generally limited to three, four or five lines and seldom exceeds a few dozen. One would look in vain for a poem of the length of Bryant's "Thanatopsis." Japanese literature has never invaded the epic field, and has no metrical form which even remotely resembles an ode, a ballad or a long poetic narrative like "The Ancient Mariner." The minor metrical arrangements like the rondel, triolet, villanelle, etc., are absent. Of what, then, does Japanese poetry consist? If one discusses its apparent lack of scope he becomes inclined to hesitate before to point to the "Manyoshu Kogi" (Collection of Myriad Leaves). True enough, its bulkiness is most alarming, as it extends to 122 volumes. But it proves to be only an anthology of short poems, each complete, bearing no relation to other stanzas, except in the choice of subject, the work being divided into poems of spring, summer, autumn, winter, poems of parting, love, sorrow, etc. Collections of this kind, admirably printed and supplied with numerous indexes and elaborate commentaries, are published at intervals under the auspices of the government and represent the classical poetry of Japan.

FEMININE INTUITION.

The Philosophy of the Girl at the Candy Counter.

The girl at the bonbon counter put up a large box of [illegible] and selected candy under the personal supervision of a nervous young man. He took a card for each of fifteen ladies over a list of addresses for their delivery, paid the bill and walked out looking decidedly glum.

"Ought to bag a sweetheart out of the candies," remarked the cashier.

"Guess again," said the salesgirl. "It's caramels to car fare that he has a sweetheart and that he has quarreled with her, their first, probably. He is sending candy to his ladylove's dearest friends, because he knows she will not fail to tell her about it.

"A candy counter is the homespun of the human heart to girls who can read it. When a young man buys a pound to get particular his selections, Cupid is getting in his fine work. The lovers' quarrel usually ends in such a lockless display as you saw just now. When the reconciliation takes place, we shall sell nothing in stock good enough for that fellow. When he's married, he'll stop coming."

INSECT MIMICS.

Clever Disguises That Save Them From Their Enemies.

A well known naturalist tells us of an insect in Nicaragua so completely resembling a leaf that a whole host of the ants will march right across it without recognizing it as their food. Mr. Belt, another South America another insect, one of the membracidæ, which not only mimicked the leaf exactly as to form and venation, but, like its model, carried in its mouth a long piece of leaf about the size of a dime.

Even more wonderful is the disguise of the insect of Java, which makes itself into so exact a semblance of an orchis flower that the insects upon which it lives fly to the hope of a feast, but remain to furnish one.

The butterflies butterflies, which are avoided by all insectivorous birds, which are exactly imitated by another class, which are so much like that if they did not assume a protective disguise they would be extirpated, and they do so to such perfection that even experienced naturalists sometimes cannot distinguish them. Another authority mentions a small beetle which turned itself into so good a copy of a wasp that he was afraid to touch it with his fingers.

A Singular Creature.

One of the most singular looking creatures that ever walked the earth or "swam the waters under the earth" is the world famous man faced crab of Japan. Its body is hardly an inch in length, yet the head is fitted with a face which is the exact counterpart of a Chinese coolie—a veritable missing link, with eyes, nose and mouth all nicely defined. This curious and uncanny creature, besides the great likeness it bears to a human being in the face, is provided with two legs which seem to grow from the top of its head and hang down over the side of its face.

Brides Who Perch In Trees.

Among the Lolos of western China it is customary for the bride on the wedding morning to perch herself on the highest branch of a large tree while the elder female members of her family cluster on the lower limbs and shake the sticks. When all are duly stationed the bridegroom clambers up the tree, assailed on all sides by blows, pushes and pinches from the dowagers, and it is not until he has broken through the fence and captured the bride that he is allowed to carry her off.

Her Sorrow.

One of the classic friends of Princess Mathilde was Count Benedetti, the French ambassador whom the king of Prussia was said to have insulted at Ems. Her words on hearing of his death, after he had been her intimate counselor for more than forty years, are worth recalling. "Alas," she said, "now there's no one left who will dare to contradict me."

NAPOLEON'S POLICE.

They Were Well Watched to Insure a Full Measure of Duty.

During the reign of Emperor Napoleon I. at a dinner in Paris the conversation turned upon the emperor and his government. One of the company remarked that he was a great man, but was too fond of war. When the party broke up, a gentleman who was present requested to speak in private to the person who had made the observation. "Sir," said he, "I am sorry for it; but I must request you to go with me to the police." "What!" said the other in the greatest apparent alarm. "I have said nothing against the emperor but what every one must acknowledge, that he is too fond of war. There can be no harm surely in that." "With that I have nothing to do. You must go with me to the police. The other now began to show the strongest symptoms of fear. He entreated the police agent in the most pathetic language to have compassion on him. The other, however, stood unmoved by all his solicitations, and when the latter man rose from his knees and burst into a laugh, to the utter astonishment of the informer. "You think you have caught me," said he. "You are a spy of the police. So am I, and I was put over you to see whether you would do your duty."

THE COST OF A LEGACY.

Sometimes It Doesn't Pay to Inherit Money In Italy.

In Italy it sometimes to be a somewhat expensive affair to inherit money—that is, if it be a small sum. Not long ago a young man came into a little town of Romagna who left 1 lira 58 centimes, or, say, 32 cents. This sum, which had been deposited in the postoffice savings bank, became the property of the young man's father, as the amount was so small, the father thought it unnecessary to make a declaration of the legacy as the law prescribes, especially as the stamped paper on which the declaration must be made would cost about 22 centimes more than the money involved.

The postoffice afterward in received a demand from the local state treasury for the payment of 14 lire 45 centesimi (about $2). Thinking a mistake had been made, he took no notice of this demand, with the result that later an official called upon him and demanded the immediate payment of 18 lire ($3.50). The father had not received the money in hand, so the official took possession of the man's furniture. The cost of this seizure brought the total sum to 30 lire, which the poor man had to pay that same winter to avoid the sale of his goods by auction.

GENERAL LYTTELTON,
First Military Member of Great Britain's New Army Council.

The first military member of the new Army Council is General the Hon. Neville Gerald Lyttelton, who is uncle of the Earl of Cromer's secretary. He is no stranger to the War Office and the Horse Guards, for two years he was private secretary to Mr. Childers when he served with distinction in the Egyptian war, held various home commands, but saw his first experience in South Africa, where so many others lost theirs. In 1900, when Lord Kitchener relieved Lord Roberts, General Lyttelton took over the command in Natal. In the end Division of the Natal Army in February, 1900, during the illness of General Clery. He was in command of the troops chasing Dewet in Cape Colony in the early months of 1901, and was then in command in Natal. In June, 1902, when Lord Kitchener returned home, General Lyttelton took over the command of the British troops in South Africa. Like all his family he is a keen cricketer.

Lord Newton's Estate.

Lord Rowton, Disraeli's private secretary, left an estate valued at £915,000. His will, which was proved in London recently, bears date August 30, 1902, with codicils of March 27, 1903, and November 6, 1903, and the executors are his nephew, Captain Noel Armar Lowry Corry, of 12 Eaton Terrace, and of the Grenadier Guards, who is secretary legate, and Mr. Henry Manisty, of 1 Howard street, solicitor, to whom he bequeathed £350. His will begins: "As to my papers and manuscripts, I specially request the executors to ask Mr. Arthur E. Scanes, secretary to the Westinghouse Electric Company, of Westinghouse Buildings, Norfolk street, to set them in order, and select and set apart such of them as in his opinion ought to go with the papers of Lord Beaconsfield (which he has arranged for me), and if he will undertake this duty I bequeath to him the sum of £200, and I direct that all such papers and manuscripts as he shall so set apart shall forthwith be delivered to the person entitled to the custody of Lord Beaconsfield's papers."

Subject to a number of personal legacies to relatives and others, and legacies to servants, the testator left the residuary estate to Captain Noel Armar Lowry Corry, the executor, nephew.

Will Boiled in Shark.

Vancouver, B.C., March 23.—John Spittal, a famous hunter and trapper, was found dead in his shack near Tarra Nova Canarry, on the Fraser River, with a bullet hole in his skull and other indications of foul play. The door of the shack was secured on the outside with a padlock. Spittal's two guns are missing, and there was a coat in the room that did not belong to the dead man. Spittal had been missing for the past five weeks. No one had a view of the cabin being locked, though until yesterday of searching it for the lost man.

GRAND - TRUNK - RAILWAY

This week's shipment by G. T. R. brought to hand the New Easter Suits that we want you to see. Easter seems to be the coming out time for all new garments. If the weather is propitious, the overcoat is discarded and man walks forth in all his glory of a new suit. We are going to help a good many of our customers to enjoy Eastertide, if new clothes will do it. Prices are very moderate, too, this season, and a better showing at $7.50, $8.50, $10, $12, and $15.

TIMELY TOPICS.

It does really appear that some of the trouble with the gas is local. On Saturday night the writer noticed that the illumination in one store on Front St. would be fairly good, while a few doors distant there would be hardly any at all.

* * *

However, there is no doubt at all that the employees of the gas works have been doing penance lately, while the gas consumers gave up something during Lent.

* * *

Two fine Sundays in succession! .

* * *

The church congregations were large yesterday.

* * *

Perhaps some people, whose stoves and furnaces were out, went to church to get warm.

* * *

Others, we know, went to avoid a roasting in the future.

* * *

Unless things get much warmer than they were last night, we will hardly be playing lawn tennis on Good Friday.

* * *

Anyhow, it was nice of the weather man to send that beautiful white snow to cover up Front St.

* * *

The gas was better in church last night. That supplementary pipe the gas man put down helped things a good deal.

FOR A DISORDERED STOMACH.

"I have been troubled for some time with indigestion and sour stomach," says Mrs. Sarah W. Cattis, of Lee, Mass. "and have been taking Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets which have helped me very much so that now I can eat many things that before I could not." If you have any trouble with your stomach why not take these tablets and get well? For sale by all druggists.

EFFECT OF THE SURTAX

Big Drop in German Exports to the Canadian Dominion.

Chamberlain's Tariff Commission Will Take Evidence After Easter—Canada Most Temporate Portion of the Empire—Australia Is Advised to Study Canada—Irish Party to Pick the British Winner.

London, March 28.—(C.A.P.)—The Berlin Kolnische Volkszeitung has published a striking table showing the effect of the Canadian tariff surtax. The total value of the German exports to Canada for the last three months of 1902 was £476,151. For the corresponding period of 1903 it was only £371,207.

Witnesses After Easter.

Mr. Chamberlain's Tariff Commission has finished its preliminary work and the examination of witnesses begins immediately after Easter.

Canada Most Temperate.

The Daily Chronicle says the Barr colonys' requests for the exclusion of the liquor traffic affords evidence that there is something in the atmosphere of Canada opposed to alcoholic indulgence. Canada is the most temperate portion of the Empire and her influence extends even into Maine.

Advised to Study Canada.

The Melbourne Age denounces the decision of the Federal Government to spend £20,000 on contractors' surveys of the line of the proposed transcontinental railway.

The London Chronicle, referring to the protest advices the Australian critics to study the history of the Canadian Pacific Railway, now the backbone of modern Canada, and for which Sir John A. Macdonald was turned out of office for supporting so extravagant a scheme.

Wish to Do It.

The Freeman's Journal, referring to the Parliament of the Irish people, convened for April 21, says in the great coming contest for the control of the British Empire the Irish party will pick the winner. It styles the Unionists treacherous and cruel, while the Liberal League section led by Lord Rosebery and Mr. Asquith are, it says, equally underserving.

Milner For the People?

Lord Milner, speaking at a Johannesburg dinner, said he did not take two-pence for the opinion of home critics so long as he received the confidence of the people on the spot.

On Liberal Lines.

That the next Government will be national, one or Liberal lines whose primary object will be to defend free trade, is the thesis supported by this week's Sunday Sun. It continues by pointing out that the Unionist free trade group have decided to support Major Seeley, who will not support the Government. The Liberals are thoroughly in accord with the movement. Major Seeley was nominated for re-election on Saturday at the Isle of Wight. The proposed Liberal candidate, Mr. Baring, having resigned.

THE LUCKY THIRTEEN.

Asleep in Cabaret Splintered to Pieces and Not Hurt.

Portage la Prairie, March 28.—The C.P.R. express, which was stalled at Hosmer since Thursday, started Friday night for the west, but only got as far as a point between Dagg and McGregor, when it ran into a submerged snow-plow and was wrecked.

A fireman was injured, but none of the passengers. Three engines were sent off the track. The caboose at the rear of the snow-plow train was lifted clear off the track and smashed into kindling wood. The second engine of the express and three tenders were thrown completely off the track and two baggage cars derailed.

That there were no lives lost is nothing short of miraculous. There were thirteen men asleep in the caboose of the front train, which was smashed into pieces, and it passes imagination how they escaped injury. As it was, they came out unscathed, except that one man was a little bruised.

Fire at Smith's Falls.

Smith's Falls, March 28.—The Shields block here was badly damaged by fire at 1 o'clock yesterday morning. The fire started on the second floor in rooms occupied by A. Percy as a tailor shop. The ground floor was occupied by O. C. Abbott, druggist, with W. H. Kerfoot, stationery and fancy goods, and the post office. Although the fire did not burn down into these stores much of the water found its way there and all suffered heavily. The C.P.R. Telegraph Company office was in Kerfoot's, and it also suffered.

Ducks and Geese.

Do geese "quack?" "No," says the observant critic; "geese do not quack, but they squack." It is the ducks that quack, and the story of the goose going about from day to day with a "quack, quack, quack," is declared to be without good foundation. There is, indeed, quite a difference in the vocabulary of these feathered creatures, but it requires a sharp ear to discover the difference.

Classes In Art Needle Work

EXPRESS MATTER BLOCKADE

U.S. Treasury Department Ruling Enforced at Suspension Bridge.

Niagara Falls, March 28.—A big blockade of express matter from Canada to the States is existing at this port, and express agents are wild over the situation. This condition has been brought about through a ruling of the treasury department that the consignor of a package going forward to a point in the States shall file an affidavit with the collector of customs at the port of entry, describing the package and its contents minutely. This ruling was put into effect at Buffalo and Port Huron last July.

The collector of the port of Suspension Bridge, or Niagara Falls, did not put the ruling into effect here until a few days ago, but the effect has been somewhat paralyzing to the express business. News was received here that the representatives of the United States and American Express Companies are now in Washington asking Senators Depew and Platt to seek to have the ruling set aside. There is no discrimination made regarding the situation.

Joke Starts Small War.

Cape Town, March 28.—The fracas which occurred on board the Doune Castle Saturday between the men of the "Boer and Briton" contingent, who sailed from Africa to take part in the St. Louis Exhibition, was caused by a simple question.

A brawny Britisher jocularly enquired of a big Boer, "How's Kruger?" The Boer, misinterpreting his meaning, struck out, and a free fight followed.

The Boers sang the "Volkslied," while the Britons shouted "God Save the King."

In the melee, two men were slightly stabbed. The ringleaders were placed in irons.

Protest Against Interference.

Ottawa, March 28.—Federal disallowance of the British Columbia act forbidding employment of Orientals by companies operating under a provincial franchise, will not put a stop to a continuation of similar legislation against Japan. The Legislature has passed an act similar to the Natal act in force in Australia and parts of South Africa. This has not yet been disallowed, and when it has been it will be re-enacted by the Legislature as a standing protest against the policy of the Federal Government.

Amputated a Foot.

Ottawa, March 28.—Thomas Evans, C.P.R. brakeman on the Gatineau Valley branch, had his right leg and foot crushed on Saturday while coupling a snow plow to a freight car. The doctors found it necessary to amputate the foot.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying Worms. It is safe, sure and kind but gives such satisfaction. Some persons have peculiarities at tacks of Canadian cholera, dysentary or diarrhoea, and have to use powerful prescriptions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking, acids of fruit, is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. Fowler's Extract of Strawberry Cordial as being the best med icine in the market for all Summer Complaints. If a few drops of it taken in a little sugar and water, are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

A little postage makes a heavy ounce.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles, there is no preparation that can compare with Peers with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It acts like magic. It gives prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness from the lungs, releases phlegm, it immediately soothes the most troublesome cough, and by its wonderful healing power, stops the mucus which stops up the air tubes which causes difficult breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness across the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup unsurpassable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation, and hoarseness in the throat and bronchial tubes, and gives power to the vocal organs, making the voice clear and sonorous. If parents would keep this Syrup in their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and sickness, let them procure a bottle of "Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup," and whenever a child has taken cold, has the cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

On occasion knowing what one needs, it is well to be getting it. It will positively cure such headache as "Nervine" cures. This is not talk, but truth. One dose will do it. Try a "Nervine" sample. Small pill. Small cure. Small price.

Many people failed to be heard because it was too short.

Dr Thomas' Eclectric Consumption —Men who follow sedentary occupations, such as bookkeepers, will find it a great help to them. Shoemakers, tailors, etc., often find it a source of backache. The Filigree Ball

BY ANNA KATHERINE GREEN

AUTHOR OF

"THE LEAVENWORTH CASE."

"You do not look well," my father here broke in, what' seemed to me a peculiarly cold voice. "Come and sit down—"

"Here's the door closed."

"We had hung about this door, curious children that we were, in hopes of catching a glimpse or at least a querulous sentence which had been put into place that day. But we scarcely drew away at the, and were playing in and out of the halls when the lights for dinner were opened and our father came out.

"Reuben is a man now, and I have asked him more than once since then how the general looked at that moment, but he has never seemed to me, very, very important, and to this day, for that he has come to know a man's passions and temptations, I think he will be found to have never relieve my mind, and I can only hope that there were real signs of illness on the face to which he bent then I could feel that all had been right and his visit one to ease the natural result of the great distress of his friend. Certain it is that Mr. Moore's ills had of him before he felt has always struck me with strange pathos. A little child, left to look upon a man, who, for all his apparent health, will be another's victim in the evening. I do not wonder he does not like to talk of it, and yet—

"It was Reuben, who came upon the general first. Our father had not yet descended to the hall. He was with loud cries and piteous ejaculations, which had gone upstairs and surprised him in the room with my mother. I recollect wondering in all childish simplicity why he wrung his hands so over the death of a man he so hated and feared. Nor was it till years had passed and our mother had found a home in the grave and the house had settled into a gloom too heavy and somber for Reuben to endure, that I recognized in my father the signs of a settled remorse. Now I simply wondered at sorrow for by the fact that he had been saved from what he looked upon as political death by the sudden but opportune decease of his best friend. This cause of grief is the feelings which had unnerved him for life. Don't you think that this one explanation of his invariably moody brow and the general dejection which has marked his same library? Though he would live in no other house, he would not enter this room without the look of the gloomy settle from which the general had fallen to his death. The room was virtually tabooed, and though, as I have already remarked, it was open and from time to time for great festivities, the shadow it had acquired never left it. Even my father felt its very door until he died. Is it not natural that we, his descendants, should share this feeling?

"Yes," said I, said so; but would say no more, though she cast me little appealing looks which accorded not with the confidence from the pressure of her small fingers on my arm, and the impulse itself. The memory of the wind which at that moment blew with fierce rain on the windows, the embers and filling the house with Jeanshe calls. I simply kissed her again to impress it with her back with me to England and forget this old house and its sad and gloomy memories for all that was the sum of the comfort at the poor consolation. Then, after an other restless night, I crept down in the early morning to peer into the library and ascertain for whose story I had at last learned. I can not say that I was able to recall the meager ghost of the unfortunate general but the combination of the prodigious bench which still kept its mysterious watch over the deserted apartment.

So much for the passages culled from the book itself. The newspaper excerpts, to which lignext turned, bore a much later date, and read as follows:

"A strange coincidence marks the death of Albert Moore in his brother's house yesterday. He was discovered dead in his bed at the identical spot where General Lloyd fell forty years before. It is said that the resemblance of a man hitherto regarded as a model of physical purity and endurance was preceded by a violent altercation with his elder brother, in which all the excitement incident upon such a break in their usually pleasant relations must have occurred to the sudden death. Edward Moore, who, unfortunately, was in the room when his brother succumbed—some say he was the last surviving occupant—and now lies in a critical condition.

"The relations between him and the deceased Albert have long been of the most amicable character until they unfortunately fell in love with the same woman.'

"Attached to this was another slip, apparently from a letter paper.

"The quarrel between the two brothers Moore, just prior to the younger one's death, turns out to have been of a more serious nature than was first supposed. It has now leaked out that an actual duel was fought, at that time, between the two on the floor of the old library; and that in this duel the elder was wounded. Some even go so far as to affirm that the lady's hand was the real cause of this, but we doubt the first blood; it is no longer denied that the room was in great disorder when the servants first rushed in at the sound of the shots. Everything movable had been pushed back against the wall and an open space cleared, in the midst of which could be seen one drop of blood. This is certain in fact, Mr. Moore is held to the house by something even more serious than his deep grief, and that the young lady who was the object of this fatal dispute has left the city."

Pasted under this was the following original announcement:

"Married on the twenty-first of January, at the American consulate in Rome, Italy, Edward Moore, of Washington, D.C., United States of America, to Antoinette Sloan, daughter of Joseph Dewitt Sloan, also of that city."

With this notice my interest in the book ceased and I prepared to step down from the chair on which I had remained standing during the reading of the above paragraphs.

But as I did so, I spied a slip of paper lying on the floor at my feet. As it had not been there before, I concluded there could be little doubt that it had slipped from the book, which leaves I had been turning over so rapidly. Hastening to recover it, I found that it was in fact the memorandum paper partly inscribed with words in a peculiar and illegible writing. This was a great find, for the peculiarity of the hand in which writing one which could be readily identified. What I saw written there was still perfectly available. It was in the look of some of the memoranda I had myself made in the days of my most perplexing moments of this same case. I transcribe it just as it read:

"We have here two separate accounts of the same occurrence, one who breathe their last on the ancestral hearthstone of the Moore house library.

"Certain facts are emphasized in both:

"Each victim was alone when he fell.

"Each death was preceded by a scene of altercation or violent controversy between the two and by the alleged master of these premises.

"In the case of Albert Moore the house reaped some benefit, real or imaginary, from the fatal affair.

A curious set of paragraphs. Some one besides myself was searching for the very problem which at the present moment upon. I should have been pleased to see the brief sentences if the additional lines I now once upon could have been written by any one but myself. But no one of any other blood or associations would have thought of the memoranda which followed. The only escape I could see for the writer was in supposing which some men fert in formulating their thoughts otherwise than with pen and paper. These words were intended for the writer's eye, and were therefore to be understood.

"Let me recall the words my father had used when the two men hurriedly rushed in upon us with that account of my misdeeds which changed all my prospects in life. It was my father's first birthday and the old man had just been planned on my behalf. Reuben son I might expect the house in which we were to live with him and with it a secret which has been handed down from father to son ever since the fatal duel which resulted in the person of Colonel Alphens. Then he whispered it to me, and I was immediately went on to say: 'This secret, Reuben, is one of those mysterious facts, without the knowledge of which you would be no true Moore. These facts are not to be entrusted even to your son or whoever may be fortunate enough to bear the name. What it is the legacy which goes with this house and which will be inherited as yet has refused either to reduce or to transmit. Listen. You have often asked the gold filigree ball which I wear on my watch-guard. The Filigree Ball

BY ANNA KATHERINE GREEN

AUTHOR OF

"THE LEAVENWORTH CASE."

"You do not look well," my father here broke in, what' seemed to me a peculiarly cold voice. "Come and sit down—"

"Here's the door closed."

"We had hung about this door, curious children that we were, in hopes of catching a glimpse or at least a querulous sentence which had been put into place that day. But we scarcely drew away at the, and were playing in and out of the halls when the lights for dinner were opened and our father came out.

"Reuben is a man now, and I have asked him more than once since then how the general looked at that moment, but he has never seemed to me, very, very important, and to this day, for that he has come to know a man's passions and temptations, I think he will be found to have never relieve my mind, and I can only hope that there were real signs of illness on the face to which he bent then I could feel that all had been right and his visit one to ease the natural result of the great distress of his friend. Certain it is that Mr. Moore's ills had of him before he felt has always struck me with strange pathos. A little child, left to look upon a man, who, for all his apparent health, will be another's victim in the evening. I do not wonder he does not like to talk of it, and yet—

"It was Reuben, who came upon the general first. Our father had not yet descended to the hall. He was with loud cries and piteous ejaculations, which had gone upstairs and surprised him in the room with my mother. I recollect wondering in all childish simplicity why he wrung his hands so over the death of a man he so hated and feared. Nor was it till years had passed and our mother had found a home in the grave and the house had settled into a gloom too heavy and somber for Reuben to endure, that I recognized in my father the signs of a settled remorse. Now I simply wondered at sorrow for by the fact that he had been saved from what he looked upon as political death by the sudden but opportune decease of his best friend. This cause of grief is the feelings which had unnerved him for life. Don't you think that this one explanation of his invariably moody brow and the general dejection which has marked his same library? Though he would live in no other house, he would not enter this room without the look of the gloomy settle from which the general had fallen to his death. The room was virtually tabooed, and though, as I have already remarked, it was open and from time to time for great festivities, the shadow it had acquired never left it. Even my father felt its very door until he died. Is it not natural that we, his descendants, should share this feeling?

"Yes," said I, said so; but would say no more, though she cast me little appealing looks which accorded not with the confidence from the pressure of her small fingers on my arm, and the impulse itself. The memory of the wind which at that moment blew with fierce rain on the windows, the embers and filling the house with Jeanshe calls. I simply kissed her again to impress it with her back with me to England and forget this old house and its sad and gloomy memories for all that was the sum of the comfort at the poor consolation. Then, after another restless night, I crept down in the early morning to peer into the library and ascertain for whose story I had at last learned. I can not say that I was able to recall the meager ghost of the unfortunate general but the combination of the prodigious bench which still kept its mysterious watch over the deserted apartment.

So much for the passages culled from the book itself. The newspaper excerpts, to which lignext turned, bore a much later date, and read as follows:

"A strange coincidence marks the death of Albert Moore in his brother's house yesterday. He was discovered dead in his bed at the identical spot where General Lloyd fell forty years before. It is said that the resemblance of a man hitherto regarded as a model of physical purity and endurance was preceded by a violent altercation with his elder brother, in which all the excitement incident upon such a break in their usually pleasant relations must have occurred to the sudden death. Edward Moore, who, unfortunately, was in the room when his brother succumbed—some say he was the last surviving occupant—and now lies in a critical condition.

"The relations between him and the deceased Albert have long been of the most amicable character until they unfortunately fell in love with the same woman.'

"Attached to this was another slip, apparently from a letter paper.

"The quarrel between the two brothers Moore, just prior to the younger one's death, turns out to have been of a more serious nature than was first supposed. It has now leaked out that an actual duel was fought, at that time, between the two on the floor of the old library; and that in this duel the elder was wounded. Some even go so far as to affirm that the lady's hand was the real cause of this, but we doubt the first blood; it is no longer denied that the room was in great disorder when the servants first rushed in at the sound of the shots. Everything movable had been pushed back against the wall and an open space cleared, in the midst of which could be seen one drop of blood. This is certain in fact, Mr. Moore is held to the house by something even more serious than his deep grief, and that the young lady who was the object of this fatal dispute has left the city."

Pasted under this was the following original announcement:

"Married on the twenty-first of January, at the American consulate in Rome, Italy, Edward Moore, of Washington, D.C., United States of America, to Antoinette Sloan, daughter of Joseph Dewitt Sloan, also of that city."

With this notice my interest in the book ceased and I prepared to step down from the chair on which I had remained standing during the reading of the above paragraphs.

But as I did so, I spied a slip of paper lying on the floor at my feet. As it had not been there before, I concluded there could be little doubt that it had slipped from the book, which leaves I had been turning over so rapidly. Hastening to recover it, I found that it was in fact the memorandum paper partly inscribed with words in a peculiar and illegible writing. This was a great find, for the peculiarity of the hand in which writing one which could be readily identified. What I saw written there was still perfectly available. It was in the look of some of the memoranda I had myself made in the days of my most perplexing moments of this same case. I transcribe it just as it read:

"We have here two separate accounts of the same occurrence, one who breathe their last on the ancestral hearthstone of the Moore house library.

"Certain facts are emphasized in both:

"Each victim was alone when he fell.

"Each death was preceded by a scene of altercation or violent controversy between the two and by the alleged master of these premises.

"In the case of Albert Moore the house reaped some benefit, real or imaginary, from the fatal affair.

A curious set of paragraphs. Some one besides myself was searching for the very problem which at the present moment intent upon. I should have been pleased to see the brief sentences if the additional lines I now once upon could have been written by any one but myself. But no one of any other blood or associations would have thought of the memoranda which followed. The only escape I could see for the writer was in supposing which some men fert in formulating their thoughts otherwise than with pen and paper. These words were intended for the writer's eye, and were therefore to be understood.

"Let me recall the words my father had used when the two men hurriedly rushed in upon us with that account of my misdeeds which changed all my prospects in life. It was my father's first birthday and the old man had just been planned on my behalf. Reuben son I might expect the house in which we were to live with him and with it a secret which has been handed down from father to son ever since the fatal duel which resulted in the person of Colonel Alphens. Then he whispered it to me, and I was immediately went on to say: 'This secret, Reuben, is one of those mysterious facts, without the knowledge of which you would be no true Moore. These facts are not to be entrusted even to your son or whoever may be fortunate enough to bear the name. What it is the legacy which goes with this house and which will be inherited as yet has refused either to reduce or to transmit. Listen. AUNT ELIZABETH, MATCHMAKER

By T. BLAIR EATON

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure.

The orchestra leader waved his baton energetically, as if summoning the drooping charges to spurt in the last quarter; then, with a final roar, in which drums and cymbals strove to outdo each other, the waits came to an end, while the perspiring musicians mopped their faces and cursed in guttural German these Wednesday night hops.

Mr. William Fosdeck stepped through the low window on to the veranda with a sigh of relief and a sense of duty done. He had danced with each one of the three giggling Masson girls and now felt assured he richly merited a cigarette and a few moments' quiet on the broad, moonlit verdaha, where the tinkle of the surf on the rocks below was a grateful contrast to the noise and whirl of the palm bowered, sitting room he had just left.

As he turned the corner to claim his favorite nook some one called, "Oh, good evening, Mr. Fosdeck!"

He turned and beheld Gertrude Martin and her aunt in the shadow of the ivy vine. It was Aunt Elizabeth who had hailed him.

"Oh, dear, dancing, I see," said Fosdeck, throwing away the newly lighted cigarette—with what inward thoughts may be imagined—and taking the vacant chair by Miss Martin.

"No," said the girl; "it's so delightful here."

"A trifle chilly, though, Gertrude, dear," the aunt said, "if you'll both excuse me for a moment I think I'll get a wrap."

"Shan't I get it for you, Mrs. Curtis?" said Fosdeck.

"Oh, thank you, no," Aunt Elizabeth returned. "I really don't know where mine is, and I anticipate quite a hunt before I find or run it to earth."

As Aunt Elizabeth disappeared around the corner the girl sighed resignedly.

"Oh, dear," she said, "it's too absurd. She invariably stampedes within three minutes after you appear, and her motive is so horribly obvious."

Fosdeck laughed. "Her methods are a trifle open," he observed.

"But I feel very different now we understand each other," the girl went on. "It was awfully embarrassing at first, especially that time she mancounted on our sailing down with you. I had her pegged, you weren't going."

"And you're going back day after tomorrow," he said, almost reproachfully.

"You must back my word," she said. "If it amounts to that, I won't go, he answered.

"Thanks! Good night," she called, and was gone.

Fosdeck strode down the walk toward the water. He was thinking of the girl as she stood down in the verandha, the moonlight on her copper colored hair and her dark eyes looking frankly into his own. Halfway down to the water he stopped suddenly and dug his toe viciously into the gravel.

"Oh, hang Aunt Elizabeth!" he growled.

Fosdeck watched the fleet depart for the island next morning, with them Miss Martin and her aunt. He spent a miserable day wandering about the woods behind the hotel. Late in the afternoon he took the catboat and sailed down past the island, where he saw the fleet anchored, and caught a glimpse of the merry picnic party on the shore. Then he sailed southward, and not until he saw the fleet start for home did he turn about to come back.

As he neared Picnic Island he saw some one fluttering a handkerchief from the pier. He ran ashore to find Aunt Elizabeth and Miss Martin disconsolate.

"This is rare good fortune," Aunt Elizabeth said, ingenuously as they came aboard. Presently she found an excuse to say further:

"Oh, what made you sail down past here?" said the girl when they were alone. "Aunt Elizabeth recognized the boat by the queer pennant you fly. Of course then she contrived to have us left behind when the fleet started home and signaled you when you came along."

"Poor soul, I wanted to give her one more chance!" he returned.

"Let's go back and surprise her," she suggested. "It'll be rough out there in this wind."

"You want"— he began doubtfully.

"It's what she deserves," she said grimly.

They went outside the chain of islands into a strong breeze and rough water. Miss Martin went below to get a bucketful as they sped along. Miss Martin sat on the edge of the cockpit, her hair in fine disarray, her hat off and her eyes shining.

"Isn't this glorious?" she said. "I'm almost grateful to Aunt Elizabeth for once."

That little hand grasped the rail near the wheel. Fosdeck watched it hungrily and suddenly decided the wheel needed him for one of his own hands. The other closed over the little hand on the rail. She looked up surprise, but made no attempt to withdraw it.

"If Aunt Elizabeth hadn't thrown me at your head I'd accept you," she returned.

"Let's call Aunt Elizabeth nil," he cried.

"Let's," she replied very softly.

His free arm drew her gently from the rail and close beside him, and at that moment some one came up through the companionway. Aunt Elizabeth stood before them clutching the little brass rail, very white and shaky, but even in that moment of physical anguish she beamed upon them triumphantly, as one who has fought a good fight.

"Ah, I knew it from the very first," she said weakly.

HE SAW SOME ONE FLUTTERING A HANDKERCHIEF FROM THE PIER.

aged to miss the coach down from the village and left us to ride back together."

"Yes," Fosdeck laughed; "you were a perfect little fury when there open site me. Really you made me feel it was I, not Aunt Elizabeth, who had engineered the whole affair."

"I wanted you to hate me," she said. "Last winter," he said slowly, "when your Aunt Elizabeth was preaching you to me all the time, I decided if I ever met you to dislike you very much."

"I'm glad, after all, it hasn't made you enemies," she said.

"So am I," he asserted, with a fervor that made her glance up at him quickly. "Poor Aunt Elizabeth!" he went on. "I fancy she doesn't dream her plans have already succeeded in setting us conspiring to defeat her schemes. I'm almost sorry for her."

"She's so terribly in earnest about it," said the girl. "Every time she makes those idiotic excuses and leaves us I think I'll speak my mind plainly to her. Then I go upstairs simply boiling, and she meets me with such bless-you-my-child-didn't-I-fix-it-beautifully sort of air that I haven't the heart to say a word. Once she said, rising, "I shall leave you, for you want to be alone and finish your cigarette."

"Really, Miss Martin"— he began.

"Now, don't spoil it all by saying things which are generally expected at such a time," she said. "I like you best when you're perfectly frank."

"I wish you wouldn't go," he persisted.

"I want a promise from you before I leave," she said. "Don't go down in your cockpit tomorrow to the picnic on Poplar island with the fleet, will you?"

"Why?" he asked.

"It's high time we were taking the field against Aunt Elizabeth. She

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

When they saw him coming along, case in hand, they rushed to the door and called and beckoned and made frantic gestures.

As soon as he was within the house they almost dragged him upstairs and into the bedroom where she lay, gasping and so very, very pale.

"What do you think?" three of them cried at once.

He was painfully shocked and distressed.

"I think she's a very sick woman," he said.

They waited a second, and then one said:

"What shall we do first?"

He looked surprised.

"I should call a doctor," he said emphatically.

At that they all screamed at once: "But aren't you a doctor?"

One day not long afterward the little girl of the family heard her mother lamenting because there were no berries in the market for the invalid. The child left the room quietly and presently returned with a saucer of something that looked delicious.

"Here, papa," she said, "just try this. I fixed it for you."

"What is it?" asked the invalid, with a spoonful half way to his lips.

"Jelly with little glass beads in it. If you eat it with your eyes shut, you'll never know it isn't whole raspberries. I tried it, and it was just lovely."

Twould Spoil This Story to Tell It in the Headline.

To use an eighteenth century phrase, this is an "o'er true tale." Having happened in a small Virginia town in the winter of 1902, it is a story very much of the present. Up to a short time ago Mrs. Jos. Harmon, of Mills Station, Va., had no personal knowledge of the rare curative properties of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. She says, "my baby took a dreadful cold and at one time I feared she would have pneumonia, but one of my neighbors told me how this remedy had cured her little boy and I began giving it to my baby at once and it broke up the cold." Sold by druggists. Manufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for placing in a great many who will, undoubtedly, recommend it too highly or say too much in its favor. No Such Thing As Luck

In Successful Decorating

Successful decoration must be the outcome of study—of thought rather than of mere chance.

In the chance room there will surely be something wrong.

Possibly the color. Perchance Drawing — Likely both.

Whether Chamber, Drawing Room, Living Room, Library or Den, the room must be treated with thought of surroundings, of furniture of complexion, of lighting, of size.

The environment of a room with North or East exposure must not be blue, while either West or Southern exposure may use blue to advantage

How about Crimsons, Greens and Brown—where may these colors be used—just ask your decorator, if he is worthy the name he can tell you.

We solicit your test of our ability on this or other decorative subjects,

The Store For .. Quality ..

This store excels not only in quality, but variety as well—never has it been able to show what it does to-day, and notwithstanding the fact that the clothes that wear the Quick & Robertson label are the uncommon kind, the prices of them will prove the greatest surprise of all.

The Rain Coat—the Top Coat—the Three-Quarter Length Overcoat—the New Single Breasted Sack—the New Double-Breasted Sack, are all here—There's absolutely nothing missing.

Easter Clothes

Naturally we are very proud of our Boys' Clothing Department. The showing we make for Easter is extraordinary—It is unusual, not only in wideness of variety and exclusiveness of style, but in lowness of prices—quality suit always has been in paramount

Suits for young men receive particular attention—our showing is so entirely different—the garments equal in style, individuality, and material the output of the foremost tailors, and our prices are less than HALF.

The Finest Haberdashery for Men and Boys.

This department is a complete store in itself—exclusiveness is just as possible, if not a little more so here than it is in smaller establishments.

We have it and our Up-to-Date methods of merchandising enables us to assure it to all without extra charge—our prices are regulated by quality only, and WE WILL SAVE YOU MONEY.

An Unusual Showing of Spring Hats.

This department can be depended upon, not only for quality and fairness of prices, but as a place where the newest creations will be shown as soon as they are issued.

In its exhibition of the spring styles will be found the Christys', Barrington and Hawes blocks in soft and stiff hats at $1, $1.50, $2.00, and $2.50.

BANNER SUNDAY AT UNIVERSITY CHURCH.

SOMETHING ABOUT AN EDIFICE WHICH HAS A HISTORY—IT RE-OPENED YESTERDAY AFTER RENOVATION AND DECORATION

Yesterday was "Banner Sunday" and re-opening day at University Church, which, after a lengthy, renovated and decorated through the kindness of one of its old Sunday School boys, Mr. C. H. Scantlebury, the large audience was present, and special music was rendered: Rev. Mr. Brown, of the Tabernacle, gave an address, and a special collection, amounting to nearly $60, was taken for the debt on the church, which has been reduced by the efforts of the school during the last two years from $600 to $48.

The members of the Sunday School are delighted with their church as now refitted, and hope that with the wiping out of their debt, the school will be able to do better work than it has done in the past.

Inasmuch as the building in question has a history, a little description will be of interest to many in the city.

University Church was built as a Chapel for Albert College in 1873 when Belleville was booming. It is some years now regular preaching services have been held there, but, labor religious agencies have come, and are still, carried on in this now historic building, in close connection with this church that the first Mission Band was organized in Canada, Gordon Wilson, one of Mrs. Carman, Conorad Dafoe, the Leeds missionary, Mrs. Holdsworth, Mrs. Bannister, Prof. Holgate, Mr. W. Bleasdell, Mr. Bellamy and Fred Strangways, while, for the past eleven years, Mr. Scantlebury under the direction of Prof. Downie.

DESERTED HER INFANT.

CHAPTER IN THE LIFE STORY OF A YOUNG WOMAN WHO LOVED, NOT WISELY, BUT TOO WELL.

An unfortunate young woman, named Helen Stone, was arrested here on Saturday evening, charged with deserting her infant, and, although it is but scantily detailed the charge, she at last confessed and told of her downfall. It appears that the young woman in question was working in this city some months ago and left here for Toronto, where she resided for a time, where she remained for some time. She returned to Belleville and went to Brockville, where on February 15th, 1904, a child was born and delivered of a child. After being discharged from the hospital the young woman went to Kingston and remained a few days. On Saturday last she arrived at the G.T.R. for Trenton, and, with her child, came west. Upon the arrival of the train here at 5 o'clock she disembarked, but instead of taking the child with her, deposited it in a shawl, put it in a basket and left it standing on the platform under a seat in the car. At Trenton the little one disappeared and the infant was send back here and taken to the home of a family to be cared for. The unfortunate girl's home is said to be in this county.

The young woman was this morning brought up before Magistrate Ponton, charged with deserting her child was preferred against her by Detective Crowe. Afterney not being ready to proceed, a remand for one week was granted, and the girl was taken back to jail.

State of the River.

Whilst the water in the river has exceeded somewhat since Saturday, there is still a great volume, and many yards and cellars on the west side of Front street are still flooded, causing considerable inconvenience to residents. Grafton and Carrollville the ice is intact and the general impression is that it will not break up for some days. From the mouth of the harbor to Cooper's mill the river is filled with a great solid body of ice.

Owing to water in the boiler room, Hogle's factory was shut down to-day.

Shortly before o'clock this afternoon the ice moved down to below the lower bridge, and this caused the water to rise about two feet, thus draining cellars and yards along the river.

COLDS ARE DANGEROUS

How often you hear it remarked: "It's only a cold," and a few days later find that them is on his back with pneumonia. This is of such common occurrence that a cold, however slight, should be carefully guarded. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy counteracts any tendency to pneumonia. It always cures and is pleasant to take. For sale by all druggists.

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

NOTES OF SERVICES IN BELLEVILLE'S DIFFERENT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

Large congregations were present in the above church yesterday, and in the morning the Rector, Rev. Mr. Gilliland, preached an impressive Palm Sunday sermon from the text found in the 16th and 11th verses of the 21st chapter of St. Matthew:

"And when He was come into Jerusalem all the city was moved, saying, Who is this?"

"And the multitude said, This is Jesus, the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee."

Palm Sunday, the preacher said, was the most impressive day the world had ever known, and it was then till the Saviour comes again in His glory. It were well just now that people should study the life of Jesus Christ, and realize where He came from and what He submitted to for us. The text showed that Christ on His last journey and on the road to persecution Himself. He did not enter Jerusalem as He was expected to; He did not come with pomp and pageantry, but as the meek and lowly Prince of Peace. He came to establish a kingdom which was to last forever. His coming in humility and His condescension of His coming we, too, should have a part in, that we, too, like Him, could be great enough to be childlike, not childish, but childlike, in faith and humility. His last journey was taken that we might be drawn nearer and closer to the New Jerusalem. The next time He comes it will be in the clouds in majesty. May we be ready to meet Him and dwell with Him in eternity.

Bridge Street.

"The Sin of Idolatry" was the subject discussed by the Rev. Dr. Crothers last evening to a large congregation. His text was from Exodus, 20th chapter and 7th verse:

"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh His name in vain."

During the service Miss Mabel Vermilyea sang, with much effect, a solo entitled "Jesus, Lover of My Soul, Fair," and in the anthem, "Cast Thy Bread Upon the Waters," Miss Hale Price sang a solo.

John Street.

The Pastor, Rev. A. H. Drumm, preached at both services. In the evening his subject was in reference to Jesus being tempted. The text was from St. Matthew, 4th chapter and 8th verse:

"Again the devil taketh Him up into an exceedingly high mountain and showeth Him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them."

At the conclusion of the discourse "The Palms" was sung by Mr. P. Furlo.

Christ Church.

At Christ Church this evening the Rector, Rev. W. B. Heeney, gave an address in reference to the duties of the Church during the Holy Week. Mr. E. Heathorn sang a solo.

Tabernacle.

At the place of worship last evening the Pastor, Rev. Geo. Ross, preached on able discourse in reference to the Passion Week. His text was from Hebrews, 11th chapter and 7th verse. At both services Miss M. Hall sang solos.

BOYS' SUITS FOR EASTER.

THIS YEAR'S TAX ROLLS.

AN EFFORT WILL BE MADE TO GET THEM OUT AS SOON AS POSSIBLE.

A special meeting of the Executive Committee of the City Council was held this morning, presided over by the Chairman, Ald. Panter. The object of the meeting was to consider the advisability of getting out the tax rolls as early as possible, and that the ratepayers may have the opportunity of making their first payment by June 1st. If this is done extra help will have to be secured in order to accomplish the work, and for some discussion the matter was left in the hands of the Chairman and Clerk to arrange.

ON THE VERGE OF HOSTILITIES

The desire of Russia to get its Black Sea fleet through the Dardanelles recalls the fact that the Black Sea fleet passed through the Dardanelles on one occasion, and in the act brought England and Russia to the verge of hostilities. It was in 1878 that Russia declared war against Turkey in consequence of the Bulgarian massacres. The Russians pressed forward to the very suburbs of Constantinople, and in order to prevent the capture of that city the British fleet passed through the Dardanelles notwithstanding all the treaties. Of course in Canada everyone is at liberty to use Dardanelles Turkish cigarettes, and whether they have cork silver or plain tips will not affect the Eastern question.

Y. M. C. A.'s PROPOSED NEW $30,000 BUILDING.

ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING HELD YESTERDAY AFTERNOON IN CONNECTION WITH THE PROJECT.

At the Y.M.C.A. rooms on Sunday afternoon a large number of young men and boys were present, and the meeting was both interesting and profitable. Plans of the proposed new building were shown and explained by Mr. Wilkie, Provincial Secretary, who also gave a short address in reference to the Association's work and improvements which were being made in buildings in various cities and towns in the province. Previous to his address devotional exercises were held, conducted by Mayor Chown, and Mr. H. McKay sang a solo.

Ex-Mayor Graham, president of the local Association, presided, and read a paper outlining the proposed new building in this city. According to the plans prepared by the Provincial Committee, a three-storey building is to be erected on the land, building and equipment complete will cost about $30,000. The building externally will be plain but substantial; internally it will be one of the best adapted to the work in Canada. It is intended to contain the following features:

1—Large gymnasium, with running track, lockers and dressing rooms, shower and tub baths, swimming pool, visitors' gallery, lavatories, and physical director's office and examination room.

2—Rooms for educational classes, reading room, library and study.

3—Lecture room for small gatherings such as literary, society and practical talks, class meetings, Bible classes, etc.

5—The prominent feature will be the reception hall, with cozy corners lighted from a sky light and office so arranged that the Secretary can see everyone who enters and also see into the gym and game room and gymnasium, in fact he will be able to control every part of the building from here.

6—A camera club room. Kitchen, dining room and committee room.

7—Separate rooms for the boys' department with special privileges for both school boys and employed boys from 12 to 17 years of age.

8—An excellent lunch room will be afforded for some friend to add the name of gentlemen for the small number of young men attending night schools. The feature here is the closest relation to the regular work as a revenue producer.

The Provincial Secretary stated that during the present week the work of canvassing for city for subscriptions would be proceeded with. Already some 200 young men had pledged themselves to become members for five years if they resided in the city and up annually $5 which was a most creditable showing.

SUMMER SCHOOL — 12 O'CLOCK CHANGE—OPENS 1904.

The people of Belleville and vicinity will be pleased to learn that extensive preparations are being made for a Summer School at 12 O'Clock Park this year. Last year unfavorable weather interfered with the school, but the officers have this year secured the Park. Some of the best talent in the province will lead the classes and address the mass meetings. Special emphasis will be placed on Bible study, teacher training, missionary study, Sunday School methods. Prof. McLauchlin, of Victoria University, will conduct the Bible study each morning.

DROWNING ACCIDENT AT GLEN MILLER.

EMI LANEY'S RECKLESSNESS SEEMS TO HAVE COST HIM HIS LIFE.

A sad drowning accident occurred about 5 o'clock on Saturday afternoon at Glen Miller on the River Trent. Three men named Emil Laney, L. Dafloe and H. Laney, Sr., were engaged in doing some work on the dam situated at Miller's mill. Laney, Jr., was out on the dam, whilst the other two were on the shore holding a rope which encircled Laney's body.

After he had performed some work Laney considered that he was safe and took the rope from off him. He had not come done more than in taking a step he slipped and in an instant was carried over the dam. The father and Collins are of the opinion that the unfortunate man but it was of no avail. After being whirled around in the eddy for a few minutes he was carried down the river and under the ice.

Laney was a married man, having one child. He had been employed for some time for Mr. Miller and was a capable workman, being respected by his employers and associates. It will probably be some days before the body will be recovered.

LIFE LOST IN A FLOOD

Duncan McMartin Was Drowned at London, Ontario.

London the Less Suffers From a Flood Greater Than Any Since 1883—Over a Hundred Families Rendered Homeless—Bridges Swept Away—Many Cases of Destitution—Pleads Elsewhere.

London, March 28.—One life was lost in the flood which submerged West London on Friday night and Saturday, a flood greater than any since 1883, when thirty persons lost their lives and many thousands of dollars of damage was done. The death roll includes:

Duncan McMartin, medical student, was drowned by the upsetting of a canoe, while engaged in the work of assisting families cut off by the high water. His companion, Frederick Adams, had a narrow escape.

The body of McMartin, the medical student, who lost his life at Blackfriars dam, has not been found.

Wade Turns Up O.K.

Mr. Wade, the grocer, who was reported to have been swept from his porch and drowned, had, it turned up and is safe and well. His escape is little short of miraculous. Fresh water in front of his store was several feet deep and a swift current was running. He was saved only by the sturdy efforts of several onlookers.

Another may die from exposure. Thomas Hunt, Dundas street, suffering from typhoid fever, was removed from his home in an open boat yesterday morning to a place of safety, and conveyed to Victoria Hospital, where he is in a very critical condition.

Wide Ruins Seen.

All day Friday the water rose and surged along with a sullen roar. The warm rain sent the water all the entire district from the County of Perth into its bed, and with each hour the usual Springtime freshet recorded a rise in the flood. Though the ice had been pretty well cleared out of the south branch on Thursday, Friday at 4.30 the ice which had been jammed in the north branch north of St. Mary's gave way, and came down the river at race-horse speed, sculling and crashing in the foam at the bend before it began its way into the current westward toward the lake. By 6 o'clock the low banks along the south branch had been covered with water, the Kensington Road and Tillery property, the flats in the rear of the London Rolling Mill Company, as well as those across the river to the south, Wimer's Island, Smith's Creek to Hospital, disappeared from view, and the water began to make its way up Dundas street, and over at West London the flood was but four or five feet from the top of the breakwater in the lower places. Hunt's mills were compelled to close down, and the local electric power house also felt shaky.

Flood Practically Over.

The flood in London West is practically over, the water recommenced to go down on Saturday evening and fell rapidly during the night. Sunday morning saw the river fully again by itself, what it was inside hours previously. The loss through damage to property is roughly estimated in the neighborhood of $50,000.

Communication by the Grand Trunk between here and Detroit is cut off owing to heavy rock cuttings on the line. Unless several days of warm weather are again followed by rain, there is small danger of further trouble.

Bridges Swept Away.

Thamesville, March 28.—The River Thames has control of the town here. The water has risen rapidly since Saturday morning, and the entire town was flooded, nearly every place of business having their feet of water on its floors. Boats can navigate most any street in town with safety. All the bridges have been obliged to tear up and move upstairs. All churches were flooded and closed. Communications are very few, as cut off owing to washouts. The G.T.R. bridge here is in danger and is being closely watched. The water is still rising fast.

Factories Closed Down.

Woodstock, March 28.—Friday night's heavy rainfall considerably increased the volume of water which has flooded the low-lying lands about the city, although on Saturday morning the freeze-up had reduced it greatly. During the day the Hay Company had to close their works, the water having encroached on some of the machinery shafting, interfering with the operation of the vats. The Canada Furniture factory closed down in the morning, and the Woodstock Knitting Company was compelled to shut off the steam Saturday morning and close operations.

Sewer Works Covered.

During the night the flood covered a wide area of land in the extreme southwest corner of the city. All the flats west of the Furniture Company's lumber yards were inundated, and the "Sinking Fields" in the west were under water. The land purchased by the city, and on which the sewage disposal filtering beds have been constructed, is flooded over, and there will be no work on these works to be seen. The water rose over the 13th line, Dereham, and on Saturday it was impossible for rigs to drive through.

During the night the creek reached the level of the road on Norwich avenue, and flooded the bridge near the G.T.R. crossing, carrying a portion of it away.

The Thames, extending from Dorchester to Woodstock, is flooded. There is almost an unbroken body of water extending between the two points, and the lowlands, marshes, swamps and fields have been inundated. Many fields have been flooded, and rail fences have been obliterated by the rush of waters. In some places the tops of the fences only are observable.

Bridges and Works Flooded.

Ingersoll, March 28.—The River Thames rose at an alarming rate and exceeded the high water mark during the fists to the depth of several feet. The flood continued to rise until close to the C.P.R. tracks, Richardson's mill and Kerr's shop being surrounded by water. The Noxon works have been flooded and work then is suspended. There is probably a couple of feet of water near the company's dwelling house. Thames street Saturday morning, in which heavy oil barrels were floating in all directions. The water has also flooded over the C.P.R. tracks and at W. Patterson's mill, on the flats.

The woollen mill is closed down in consequence of several inches of water being in the boiler-room.

The town hall was also flooded, and the Collegiate Institute has brought up the library volume of water from the north and has caused no little damage. The rain was heavy on Saturday night, the water having commenced to pour into their beds.

Bridges Swept Away.

Wallaceburg, March 28.—The worst spring freshet in the history of this section started Friday, and poured down both branches of the Sydenham River in the north of this city, and has flooded all the low lands in the town. Many people in town having to leave their houses. Several farmers and their families have been taken from their homes in boats, some of them losing their stock, and all their crops of feeding. The Pere Marquette was unable to run trains on Saturday on account of wash-outs. During the night the steamer Winona broke from her moorings and struck against the railway bridge, but fortunately she cleared it, and no harm was done, but loud damage was done. A loaded boat of coal has also been jammed on the bridge to weigh it down. Apparently the worst is now over, as the water is falling.

Oil Wells Suffered.

Petrolea, March 28.—The flood that annually occurs here every spring from Bear Creek was not as bad as in former years, although many oil wells situated on the banks of this creek have suffered from same by turning out fine, and the water is following its natural course and channel as far as intended.

Near Top of Dyke.

Brantford, March 28.—On Saturday evening the Grand River at this point had assumed such swollen proportions as to cause the city authorities and many citizens great alarm. At 6 o'clock the water was early Saturday afternoon, and from that time the water rose rapidly. It is estimated that it was more than fifteen feet above the normal level. At one time it was feared the dykes protecting a portion of the waterworks were not high enough, the water was within six inches of the top. Large quantities of ice passed down.

Kept Under Water.

Chatham, March 28.—The water in the river rose to an alarming height on Saturday, but is now subsiding. The Canada Flour Mills Company was forced to shut down Saturday morning in order to get the water away before the water reached them.

The King car merchants were busy Saturday clearing their cellars. Many of the cellars on King street, in fact some of the business flats, filled with a foot and some as much as two feet of water.

Raleigh Fines Flooded.

Trainmen coming into the city from the west state that the Raleigh plains seems to be one sheet of water with houses dotted here and there and people moving round on rafts. The water is above the Grand Trunk rails and is rushing for the River Thames.

G. T. Crow's store at Prairie Siding is flooded to the counters, and through this neighborhood are in a great state of excitement.

Dresden, March 28.—Food in Harwich have been great, and bridges and culverts have swept away, the Creek road is impassable and many of the bridges are gone further. Two bridges on the third concession are gone and are on the River Road near Rothwell's.

It is reported that the Bidgar farm in the vicinity of Bear Creek is being forced to leave their residences. The Grand Trunk, C.P.R. and London road, had to move his stock out, the water having risen 18 inches in Dresden.

Dresden, March 26.—The river at this point is higher than ever known in the history of the town. McVean's bulk and sugar factory, Mc-Kinnel mill and Crow's mill are all flooded, and the water is up to the sugar stored in the warehouse at the sugar factory. Laird Bros. have lost hundreds of dollars worth of lumber and cedar posts. O. & W. McVean have had large quantities of spokes and rims, that they swept away, about thirty houses are flooded, and also Wick, Waddell's and Dresden mills and Miss A. Whitehead's stores near the bridge.

Trouble at Galt.

Galt, March 28.—The Main street bridge has been rendered impassable by floating ice piling up and jamming the timbers. Fast the river is not allowed to cross the bridge. Several houses have been flooded by the backing up of the water, and the ice on Saturday carried away the Grand Trunk bridge at Preston road. At Blair the C.P.R. track for a mile is under water, and the G.T.R. and small railway bridges has been torn up. There are numerous washouts on the line, but gangs of workmen have been busy all day repairing the roadbed. The Ayr flour mill is partially submerged.

Ready For Danger.

Montreal, March 28.—The river is rising rapidly, the water having reached the 20-foot mark. All the river roads have been closed and a force of men are at the pumping station in case of danger.

Judgment Was Reserved.

Ottawa, March 28.—The appeal of the Bay of Quinte Railway Company against the decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners was heard Monday by a sub-committee of the Privy Council, consisting of Messrs. Emmerson, Scott, Sutherland, Sifton, Fitzpatrick, Aylesworth, Graham, Hogg, K.C., and Aylesworth, K. C., for the Bay of Quinte, appealed from the Board's decision, in regard to a crossing of the C. P. R. at Deseronto. The decision of the Board had rendered judgment reversing the decision of the Railway Committee. The C.P.R. was represented by Mr. McMurray. The sub-committee, after hearing argument, reserved judgment.

THEY ACTUALLY DO THE WORK

FOOD EATEN IS WORTHLESS UNLESS DIGESTED—SOME STOMACHS MUST HAVE HELP.

Food taken into the stomach which, from the weak state of the digestion of the stomach, is not digested, is worse than useless to the body. This is a true statement as far as it goes and a great many dyspepsias are due to this fact. But there is more. They argue with themselves that because the stomach is not able to do the work given them they must be given food in such a form that they do not have to digest it. It would be just as sensible for a business man, who has been doing $10 a day, to cut down his business $9 his own volition and then go to work and do the $1 he receives. Nature has the wisest, soundest business men in the body and goes for work with his business. Likewise the sensible dyspeptic will rebuke the stomach and then give him his body proper nourishment.

Dyspepsia means that we actually do the work which the stomach by disease and inheritance should do. This is a great portion of digestion. Their component parts are: Pepsin, the best of the digestive fluids and secretions of the stomach; hydrochloric acid, to help digest and carry on the work just the same as a good, strong, healthy stomach does it.

On this account Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are of such great value in this section, and effects: They do not cause any irritation to the mucous membrane in the stomach or bowels. They themselves digest the food and assimilate the same with all the assimilant constituted in what is eaten and carried to the blood, and the assimilant constituted in what is eaten and carried to the blood, and the assimilant constituted in what is eaten and carried to the blood, and Port Arthur Aroused.

Port Arthur, March 29.—There is intense feeling here over the report that there is a possibility that the Legislature will grant the privilege to a private company to develop power on Current River, the stream from which the municipality derives its power for the operation of its railway, light and water systems. So high does feeling run that a petition of over one thousand names has been sent to the Legislature protesting against the granting of the concession and pointing out that it will require the full capacity of river for municipal purposes.

Offer Real "Character."

London, March 29.—(C.A.P.)—Parliament is likely to settle the question of character giving by solicitors to maids by the introduction of a bill making it an indictable offence to give evidence knowingly a false or forged character.

Trenton Route Favored.

Ottawa, March 29.—The report of H. A. MacLeod, C.E., on the Trent Valley Canal was laid on the table of the House yesterday. The report strongly favors the Trenton route, though the Port Hope route is $167,000 cheaper.

Lamoraa Is Lost.

Marshfield, Ore., March 29.—The steamer Alliance, which arrived yesterday, reports picking up a boat belonging to Lamorna, a British ship from Greenock, which is supposed to have foundered during a recent storm. The boat was upside down and damaged. Hopes for the safety of Lamorna is steadily waning. The belief is that the Lamorna foundered on March 11 in Berkeley Sound.

RE THE G.T.P. CONTRACT

Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson Writes to Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Grand Trunk President Explains That Modifications Were Necessary Owing to the Claims of Shareholders—Information Drawn Out By Questions—What Ministers Answered to Reply to Members—The Turnpike Trust.

Ottawa, March 29. — Correspondence between the Government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company on the subject of the new agreement for the national transcontinental railway now before Parliament was presented to the House yesterday. There is little in it of public interest, most of the letters being of a purely formal character. The principal letter is one from Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson to Sir Wilfrid Laurier in which he sums up the result of the deliberations of the directors of the G.T.R. after consultation with General Manager Hays and before the meeting of the shareholders was held. The modifications proposed were necessary owing to the clamor of shareholders.

Information Drawn Out.

Mr. Fielding made an explanation in regard to the public accounts. In the House the other day, Mr. Henderson of Halton disputed the statement that there had been a reduction of $3,303,450 in the public debt. He asked for certain information on this point. The Minister of Finance stated that while the accounts had been duly passed by the Auditor-General he was not satisfied as to their correctness. He will have the accounts examined by the Deputy Minister of Finance, and will then present a detailed statement to the House.

They Are Making Surveys.

The Minister of Railways stated that the Government is aware that survey parties are at work along the route of the proposed transcontinental railway between Winnipeg and Quebec. The surveyors are employed by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. There is no understanding with the railway that the Government will adopt the surveys.

Mr. Emmerson informed the House that the Government knew of no survey parties being engaged on the eastern division of the Transcontinental Railway.

Mr. Sutherland stated that no instructions were issued by the Department of Labor respecting the employment of aliens on the surveys being made in connection with the Transcontinental Railway.

Cotton Growing in Canada.

Mr. Ross of South Ontario was informed that the cotton plants are not grown for commercial purposes in Canada. Experiments were made at the Experimental Farm in 1890 and 1892, but they were not successful.

Mr. Fielding informed the House that a commissioner had been appointed to investigate the condition of the lumber trade in Manitoba, the Northwest Territories and British Columbia, but no evidence was offered and the commissioner had asked to be released from his commission. If further representations are made the Government is prepared to take further action.

Didn't Know the Fact.

W. H. Bennett asked in what connection and for what services was $3,000 paid to the firm of McCarthy, Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt of Toronto, as appears in the Auditor-General's report. Mr. Fitzpatrick said that he had not ascertained the fact, whereupon Mr. Bennett explained that he had secured the information himself. The money, he said, had been paid out by the Department of the Interior. The entry in the Auditor-General's reports is as follows: "Re—H. S. Osler, K. C., to his land, re. royalty cases, $2,000 advance on account of appeal to Supreme Court $1,000, total $3,000."

The Turnpike Trust.

Mr. Monk moved for a return showing the present indebtedness of the Montreal turnpike trust to the Dominion Government, and the sums received by the latter as interest on bonds of the trust since 1895.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier claimed that the matter was wholly within the jurisdiction of the Provincial authorities.

The House adjourned at 8.50.

Japanese Shells Played Havoc With Forward Barbette.

Japs Will Not Land An Expedition in Liao River Valley Before April 20—Japs Whipped Cossacks, But Had 50 Killed—Newchwang Under Martial Law—Drawing China Into It—Japs Did Succeed.

London, March 29.—The Daily Telegraph's Tokio correspondent says the Japanese bombardment badly damaged the forward barbette of the Russian battleship Czarevitch. The correspondent adds: "According to a rumor the Japanese transports, escorted by four cruisers, approached Newchwang Saturday and then departed southward. It is stated Viceroy Alexieff will return to Europe in a few days."

The Morning Post's Newchwang correspondent learns that the Japanese will not land an expedition in the Liao River valley before April 20, as their transports are still engaged in conveying troops to Corea.

The correspondent at Shanhaikwan of The Daily Mail asserts that the Chinese have received official authorization to turn over to the Japanese the plant of the Shanhaikwan Railway.

The Standard's Tientsin correspondent says that in compliance with the Russian demand the Chinese Tartar General of Feiqtien has withdrawn to a distance of 60 miles from Mukden. He adds that the Russians are now left in complete control of the revenue and other departments.

The Daily Mail-Wei correspondent of The Times says:

"A Chinese junk, which has arrived here, reports having seen on the morning of March 28, eleven unworthy Russian vessels manoeuvring in the vicinity of a Japanese fleet, which was also manoeuvring. No sound of firing was heard here."

Japs Did Succeed.

London, March 29.—The Seoul correspondent of The Daily Mail says that in the battle of March 23, which Japanese infantry hd with Cossacks, between Hwai and Changju, the Japanese were victorious, but lost 50 killed.

Newchwang Under Martial Law.

Newchwang, March 29.—The civil administration on Sunday evening fortified all the foreign consuls and residents of Viceroy Alexieff's order placing the city and port of Newchwang under martial law, explaining that it had been ordered to safeguard the commercial interest. The regulations will stop Newchwang's trade.

In some quarters the order is regarded as an apparent challenge to neutral powers, especially to China, on account of the appropriation of her territory, and that it renders the United States gunboat Helena and the British cruiser Espiegle liable to an order to leave port.

Drawing China Into It.

London, March 29.—Up to late last night no official communication had reached the foreign office concerning the declaration of martial law at Newchwang, and officials are inclined to the opinion that this indicated that the Russian Government had not sanctioned Viceroy Alexieff's action. The declaration of martial law is somewhat anxiously discussed by the London morning newspapers, among which the question has arisen as to whether Russia is desirous of dragging China into the conflict.

Japs Did Succeed.

London, March 29.—A telegram received from Newchwang yesterday afternoon says that at 3 o'clock Sunday morning the Japanese succeeded in sinking four steamers at the mouth of Port Arthur harbor. A flotilla of destroyers conveyed the merchantmen, which were subsequently sunk, and rescued the volunteer crews. Later the Japanese battleships bombarded the town and its defences.

Col. Otter Seriously Hurt.

Toronto, March 29.—Col. William Dillon Otter, C.B., A.D.C., D.O.C., commanding officer of Military District No. 2, was very severely injured last night about 6.30 by falling or being thrown from his horse in Beverley street, near his residence. Col. Otter had left his home but a short time with the intention of taking some horseback exercise, and it was impossible to ascertain exactly how the accident happened. The animal was riding at the time is well known Paddy of Paardeberg. The officer was picked up in an unconscious condition by McMaster students. The doctor pronounced the injury to be a very serious concussion of the brain. The patient was still unconscious at 10.30 last night.

On Trial For Murder.

Ottawa, March 29.—The trial of William Halton, proprietor of the Oxford Jack, for the murder of John Fitzgerald, late of the Dublin Fusiliers, is in progress at the Assizes before Judge Teetzel. The evidence given is somewhat similar to that presented at the preliminary hearing before the magistrate. Very conflicting medical evidence is being given. The court sat until after 10 o'clock last night, when the jury was accommodated in a neighboring hotel in charge of the sheriff's officers.

THE SAULT STE. MARIE BRIBERY.

A committee of the Ontario Legislature is at the present time investigating in the manner in which the Ontario Ministers disbursed the large amount of the people's money appropriated to pay certain debts contracted by the Sault Ste. Marie Company and which were left unpaid at the time of the failure of the company. The developments which are taking place must astonish even those who have been active workers of the "machine." It has been shown that no sooner as the Ontario Minister made his appearance with the cash to distribute among the employees, salaries and wages were, without any authority, increased and paid; the owners were handed money to pay the wages of their men, and when questions were asked in committee why their certain payment had been made to two members of the Ontario Legislature, Messrs. Cyprnes and Bowman, the committee declared such questions irrelevant, and, by a majority of two, ruled them out of order. The two interested parties, Messrs. Cyprnes and Bowman, being members of the committee, voted with the majority, thus relieving themselves from answering questions, which, if not guilty, they would have answered without hesitation.

Well may an independent journal thus characterize the whole transaction. The Toronto News of the 24th inst. says:—

"The details of the bribery at Sault Ste. Marie are coming out before the Public Accounts Committee. They fairly take the breath away. Lawyers' and contractors' salaries were inserted on the payroll after the cash had taken place. Salaries were "raised" after the company had closed its works. This was shameless public robbery. No excuse can be given for giving to such doings. No amount of apologetic explanation can make anything else of the payment of these salaries.

"At the moment in which these facts are coming to light, the Legislature is being pressed to vote for the credit of the province to guarantee yet further the private enterprises. The Consolidated Lake Superior Company has no greater claim to public aid than has any other private business concern. It already has had the medium of a scandalous misuse of public funds. Some of its official members are guilty to a rapacious and dishonest swelling of the incomes of well-paid business men. There are twenty-seven Liberal members of the House. * * * If every man of the forty-seven persuaded himself that it was right to put the pay-roll when the Government supplied the money in every man of them could feel that it was right to pledge public credit to a private concern which has been mixed up in such transactions? The scruples of one man could hold up this iniquitous proposal."

How long will honest Liberals justify and support such rascality? It is nothing else.

TIMELY TOPICS.

It is alleged that swallows were seen here yesterday. Arrah! go on. They were snowbirds.

These are the days when the gas works people are afraid the pressure won't be all right and some other people are afraid it will.

Only four more days and we'll see what new by Mrs. Goodwin has been making so much fuss about.

Drinkers of what is called Scotch whiskey may like to know how and where it is made. A British revenue office tells the people through the columns of the London Times that the "blends" are made in bonded warehouses in the presence of officials. One blend is made by mixing 2,000 gallons of English spirit with 500 gallons of raw grain spirit distilled in Scotland. This is then composed of 600 gallons of crude English spirit, 1,300 gallons of crude Scotch grain alcohol, 100 gallons of Scotch malt whiskey, and flavoring material to suit the taste. And it adds, "Generally the ingredients of these blends is less than a year old." Is it not a fact, that most of the branded gins and other foreign liquors are "blended," "flavored," and "doctored" in the cask cellar of the sellers.

The Montreal Gazette expresses the opinion that it is "nonsense" on the part of the Ottawa Government not to reply to the attacks of the Opposition during the debate on the address. The Globe differs from this view, and thinks it was "most pleasing." Of course it is in the Grits, when there was no defence of their maladministration of the affairs of the country, Silence was their only policy.

The Scottish American says; "A Union of Newfoundland and Canada would be a grand climax to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's career as Premier," and so it would, or so claims the Globe. Yes, if it does not cost too much to secure the grand climax.

A KANSAS MONOPOLIST.

(Wasaga Sun.)

A Kansas man who is both a physician and an undertaker, has bought a drug store and does not see how they can escape him.

The Owego Palladium, after noting the first arrival at the Trent Canal given in this city by Mr. Rogers, and his subsequent replies to the questions of Mr. J. B. Flint, says:

"If the estimates of Mr. Rogers are correct, the speedy construction of the 1,000-ton barge canal through this state, is a matter of vital importance. Even with the completion of the canal improvements in this state, the Trent Valley Canal will be a formidable rival to the 1,000-ton barge canal. The navigation season on both canals will be about the same, while the haul from Chicago to Liverpool via the Trent Canal will be 1,284 miles, less than that to be ignored.

"It is very doubtful, however, whether the Canadian Government will construct the Trent Valley Canal. Canadians who have visited Owego recently, have informed the Palladium that they saw by no means sanguine of such being the case. The Canadian Government has now an immense enterprise on its hands—the construction of another transcontinental railway, which will cost an enormous sum, and which is deemed of far greater importance than the construction of new waterways, and the burden of taxation is now very heavy."

The fact that our Yankee friends are willing to acknowledge that the Trent Canal will be a formidable rival is one take it, an excellent argument for its completion by the Canadian Government, and that completion will not be so doubtful as the Palladium thinks; not, at all events, if common honesty can be used. Anyhow, the frank admissions of our U.S. contemporary are worthy of the consideration of statesmen in the country.

RIGHT YOU ARE, SIR.
(Hamilton Spectator.)

He is a miserable specimen of a Canadian who cajoles to the payment of Canada of a small portion of the expense of the British navy, which protects Canada.

Ten sets of Charles Dickens' works, each set to cost $180,000, are being printed at Boston for the Duke of Westminster, J. P. Morgan and others. The fame of Dickens increases as the years go by. No other writer ever appealed so strongly to rich and poor alike.

Not many ministers are more popular than Rev. E. R. Lanceley, of Port Hope, well known in Belleville, who next June returns to the pastorate of the Dundas Street Methodist Church, London, Ont. Mr. Lanceley has already served ten years in London, and it must be a satisfaction to him to know that his work has been so much appreciated in that city.

The Government Civil Engineer, like a sensible man, favors the Trenton terminus for the Trent Canal.

Everyone will be sorry to hear of the accident which befel Col. Otter. May his condition soon improve.

Hon. Mr. Ross' majority was missing again yesterday, and the spectacle is seen of a Government controlling the province when it cannot muster a majority in the House. Self-respecting men would resign rather than continue this state of things, but the Rossites are not built that way.

Very dressy low shoes for ladies in patent colt and vici kid at $4.00, $3.50 and $3.00, at Gorman's, next to Dominion Bank.

To-day's market was rather slimly attended and in consequence prices were rather high for produce which was offered for sale.

Easter footwear in all styles at Gorman's shoe house, next to Dominion Bank.

Lessive Phenix, dissolved in boiling water, is invaluable for washing and cleaning all kinds of Vessels, Kitchen Utensils, Glassware, Marble, Floors and Woodwork of all kinds, &c. &c. If erware washed with it, and quickly dried on a soft cloth or chamois, looks like new. To wash floors, painted work, wood work, kitchen utensils, one or two tablespoonful dissolved in a pail of hot water will make them look like new.

Correct dressers admire Gorman's footwear.

GAVE SAMARIA A FAIR TRIAL AND PROVED IT A SUCCESS—MAN DEAD BEEN DRINKING 30 YEARS—NOW CANNOT BEAR THE SMELL OF LIQUOR.

Fourierville, Ont.

Dear Sirs,—I gave your Samaria Prescription a fair trial and it has proved a success. I wish you to send me another treatment for another patient, who is a heavy drunkard. In the last case, the patient took the remedy himself. I hope I will be able to send you his name soon, as he has been giving it as a testimonial. He had been drinking for the last thirty years, and now he cannot even bear the smell of liquor.

Send this new treatment in my name, as it is for some friends.

Yours truly,
LUDGER MARTIN.

IMAGINATION.

Instances Showing How It Has Made Well Men Sick.

The domination of imagination over the normal exercise of the faculties is no new idea. Samuel Rogers suffered from a violent cold from the effects of what he believed to be an open window at his back, which in reality was closed. An instance of this known to the medical faculty is more strange still. Two men stayed at a house in which an inmate had died of cholera. One man placed in the room in which the patient had died was in ignorance of what had occurred. He slept well and was no worse. The other, wrongly told that the room in which he slept was that in which the cholera patient had died, spent a night of mental agony and in the morning was actually found to be suffering from this complaint. He died of cholera.

A similar instance was mentioned the other day by a friend of the writer. Two London men stayed in the country at a house where scarlet fever was reported. One, an unimaginative, healthy minded fellow, awoke all right in the morning. The other, a nervous, sensitive man, was very ill—had not slept and had broken out into a terrible rash when the doctor declared to be scarlet fever. A wire to a London medical man was dispatched, and by the first train he hurried down. The supposed fever patient proved to have no fever at all beyond an imaginary one. As it was, there was no scarlet fever in the house, the case had been wrongly diagnosed, and the frightened visitor had tortured himself into a violent rash, all without cause.—St. James Gazette.

BASKET BALL.

An American Game With No Uncertainty as to Its Origin.

Basket ball as a recreative game is unique in its origin for two reasons: First, it is our one positively womehome American production; secondly, the name, date and place of its authorship are exactly known. Basket ball was born in the year 1891 at Springfield, Mass., and its author was James Naismith. The story is short enough to be interesting. In that town is a training school connected with the Young Men's Christian associations and of course professors, among them a professor psychology, who is paid to teach the young ideas how to think effectively. In one of his lectures he called attention to certain conditions upon which the brain could with advantage be exercised and challenged his class to supply the requirements in most cases. The conditions were the invention of a new game which could be played indoors in a limited area by a defined and unaccumble number of contestants and adaptable to both sexes. Upon this hypothesis one of his pupils, James Naismith, the same night evolved basket ball. It was taken into practice the next day experimentally and found to meet the conditions and limitations laid down by the professor admirably. But it had more than an academic value, as it has spread as one of our most appreciated outdoor games.

Knock-down for Sir Wilfrid Lawson.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, the eminent English temperance leader, says that he never received a knock-down till, young as he was, he was sitting along with the old familiar black bottle protruding from his pocket, he entered into conversation with him, and pointed out the misery which had resulted from the bottle, and earnestly exhorted the man to flee from its contents. The man was so overcome that he took out the receptacle and emptied the liquor into the road. Sir Wilfrid's face beamed with pleasure, and, handing the man sixpence, he said, "Take that; it will buy you something better." The man, to the disgust of Sir Wilfrid, entered a public-house and spent the sixpence in beer. The liquor he had thrown away was cold tea.

LONE DOG'S NEW AGENT

By F. B. Wright

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure.

Brainard was the new agent at Lone Dog, and he was slight and young looking and curly headed. The N. W. and M. had appointed him station agent at Lone Dog because no one else would take the job.

Lone Dog resented Brainard's appointment. His cleanliness and his solemnity, the last two constituting the height of eccentricity in Lone Dog, and four nights after his arrival whirled in to have fun with the "kid tenderfoot." It was harmless fun enough. But the boy—he was little more—did not understand it and grew angry, then sullen and then scared, to the great delight of the circle of grinning cowboys lounging under the station roof. They made the boy tell them of the east; they made him speak pieces, dance and sing; then, the fun flagging, some ingeniously inclined gentlemen had rifled his shabby little trunk and held its contents up for derision.

"Genta," cried a bandy legged individual in "chaps" and sombrero, jumping on to the one his stained table and holding up a photograph to the audience—"genta, I wants to call your attention to the most unparalleled and stupendous curiosity ever found in these yere parts—a genuwine picter of a gal and a mighty fine gal too. None of these yere blasted shooters, this ain't but the real article; only needs to be seen to be appreciated. In order to avoid a scrimpus over this yere work of art I'm going to give you all a chance at it. What do you bid for it? Come, this boy, he's the donor of Lone Dog."

The idea caught the crowd. There were cries of "Hand it around, Bud!" "The little gal, you say?" "Dinner at 7 sin't forgot what a woman looks like. I ain't been one since last roundup!" And amid a chorus of cheers and suggestion the bidding went on.

Who it was that knocked down to Steve Oliver of the —— X ranch outfit, the price being drinks for the crowd.

"Who is it?" said Steve when he returned to his place against the wall.

"It's—it's—my sister," answered the boy, coloring. "Please give it back to me."

"Don't you fret; you'll get it back again, sonny. Sister, eh?" Steve moved over toward the one lamp and studied the picture, while the other men turned to their devices.

"HAND IT AROUND, BUD!"

Those consisted in washing the boy drink. He didn't seem to be cheerful enough, they said.

The boy refused and then after many threats touched his lips gingerly to a bottle and coughed.

"I can't," he said, coughing and spluttering.

"You don't pass out like that," growled the owner of the bottle. "You drink!"

"I can't," said young Brainard, "and I won't."

"Says what's and 'won't' just like a sure enough man," commented his tormentor. "Then you've got to. We don't like prohibitioners in these parts. They ain't popular." The man twisted his hand in the collar of the boy's blue shirt as he spoke, but the boy tore away, sprang across the room and pulled a pistol. For a moment it looked as if the comedy were about to change to tragedy, and then Big Boy's arm was knocked up and the gun wrenched from his trembling hand. It was the cowboy who had been knocked down.

"You're too old to play with them things, sonny," he said quietly, "and too young to get shot." Then he turned to the others. "I don't know how you feel, boys," he said, "but I don't reckon I care for no more fun today, at least this here kind. Playin' with children is mighty common, but they're liable to git too familious to suit me. I more we pull our freight to the saloon. The drinks are on me."

It was, on the whole, a good natured crowd, and Steve was popular, wherefore it took the hint and its ponies and departed whooping.

An hour later Steve returned. The lamp was out, and he was about to ride along when he heard the sound of sobbing from the dark interior of the station.

"Holy smoke! They don't breed men where he comes from, that's sure," said he, dismounting and going to the door. He moved toward the sound and made out the boy crouching beside a bench, his face in his hands. At the jar of heavy footsteps the boy started, but Steve laid a kindly hand on his shoulder. "There, sonny, don't take on like that when there ain't no reason. The boys was just playin'. They didn't mean no harm unless you'd pulled that trigger."

"I'd have killed him," sobbed the boy, "if he'd touched me again."

Steve chuckled. "He was safe enough, kid. It was the rest of us you had scared. It was plumb ridiculous."

The boy apparently did not see the ludicrousness of the situation, for he continued crying softly, while Steve looked out, powerless to help. A crying man was something new in his philosophy.

"Look here, kid," he said at last, "what did you come here anyway? You're mighty young and mighty innocent for this here strenuous life."

"I had to," said Brainard. "I've a sister—Jessie."

"Yes," returned the boy; "it's just the color of mine."

"I reckoned so. Long, I bet, and curly. I knowed it. What's her name?"

"Er—Jessie."

"Jessie!" Steve pondered over the name as if to see if it would fit his preconceived notions. "You'll be having her on here soon, I reckon, won't you? I'm powerful anxious to come up with your sister."

The boy gave a queer little laugh, half hysterical, half a sigh.

"I guess not now," he said, "after what's happened. I must go away—go back. I ought never to have come. I didn't see it before. Oh, you can't understand," he cried. "I don't want to go. I haven't any situation nor money nor friends!" He broke down, sobbing again.

"And run away from nothing. The sure ain't goin' to do no harm. I'm sure you don't get messed with now much."

"But when you sin't here what would happen? Why, you hadn't been here tonight! No; there's no way but for me to leave."

Steve shifted uneasily in his chair. "This here sister of yours," he said at last, "do you reckon now she'd marry me if I could get to ask her?" He stopped the boy as he was about to speak. "Just keep quiet, sonny. And let me bark a spell. I've been doing a lot of thinkin' since I come here this evening, and I've been about her. I've been drivin' around these parts for the last ten years or more, ever since I was half as young as you, getting into scrapes and out of 'em, riding the range, rounding up cattle, going to law, to, drinkin' and gamblin' and shootin' up a town, just like all men does out here, without there's a gal to make a hold 'em steady, and tonight when I see your sister and you come across me that I wanted to settle down, and I wanted her to help me. That's why I don't want you to go away, kid, for if you do I won't git no chance to see her and ask her. Do you reckon she'd look at me, kid?"

The boy said nothing for a moment, while Steve waited very anxiously. The dawn was just breaking over the plains, and a pale light came through the dirty windows of the station.

"I—I haven't any sister," said the boy huskily at last. "I lied to you, but you've been too good to me, and I can't keep it up. I—in the picture—it's me. I'm—oh, can't you see—I'm a girl?"

"A girl! I'll—be"—— Steve didn't finish the sentence. He rose and went to the window and looked out on the faint gray green of the sagebrush. Brainard continued as if in defense: "I had to do it. I had my brother in the station at home and learned to telegraph. Then he died, and no one had any work for a girl—at least work I could do. Then I thought I would come west, dressed as a man, and get this job, and now—now you know why I've got to go back."

Steve turned and came to the side of the girl. "You sin't got to go back, and you sin't a-goin'—not if I can help it. I might have known you was a woman, only I didn't know women had such hands. Look here, kid—I mean—that is"——

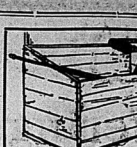
"Jessie was my sister's name," said the girl, with a little laugh.

"Well, I'm rough, and I don't deserve no such gal as you, Jessie, but there's a heap of men git what they don't deserve, and I sin't so mighty bad. You say you like telegraphin'. Well, you sit down then to that ticker and do some telegraphin' for me, one up the line for a new agent for Lone Dog Station and one to Prairie City for a parson. And tell 'em I give 'em until tomorrow mornin' to git here on the first train," added Steve Oliver, with emphasis.

Her Reproof.

Two mischievous boys in the school were laughing uproariously over some slight mistake one of the pupils had made in translation. The teacher looked at them resignedly for a few minutes and then remarked quietly:

"If anything really funny should ever happen in this class, I fear that Mr. Smith and Mr. Jones would require the services of a physician."—New York Times.



The Crutch
(soliloquing)

I HAVE STOOD BY THE OLD MAN FOR FIFTEEN LONG YEARS AND NOW HE HAS TURNED HIS BACK ON A BOX OF SALVE. I THINK I'LL LAY UP FOR IT.

The doctor told him he had rheumatism in the result of his trouble—no fault of his own, he should. The kidneys had failed to perform their functions and as a long, continuous, painful case of rheumatism is the result. He was obliged to use a crutch, of and on for 12 years, until he read an advertisement of and provided himself with that never failing remedy for all kidney disorders, and in a short time was enabled to cast the crutch into the woodbox, to take part in the building of its own funeral pyre.

Many people are suffering from kidney trouble who are not aware of it. They are sick, and unfit for work, business or pleasure. There may be one or many of the symptoms arising from disordered kidneys and they are treating for symptoms instead of fighting the disease, which is kidney trouble.

TIMELY TOPICS.

A wireless special from Mr. John says that yesterday their gallant ship steamed through the Dardanelles and across the sea of Marmora, which put him strongly in mind of Hastings county. Yesterday at 5 p.m. they arrived at Constantinople, and this morning our worthy fellow-citizen tried to obtain admission to the Sultan's harem in order to test the electric lights, but there was nothing doing. The fierce guards, who wore trousers on which the seat side could not be distinguished from the west, glared at him and handled their stent choppers suggestively, so our correspondent beat a retreat in good order. He doesn't care now whether the Sultan is getting his proper amount of voltage or not. One could hardly, he says, help feeling sorry for Turkey's ruler, however, and he has such a worried, restless look. This, of course, may be accounted for by the fact that Easter Sunday is close at hand, and the Sultan has a good many wives to provide with bonnets.

Grand Trunk Traffic Stopped.

Windsor, March 29.—All traffic on the Grand Trunk Railway between here and points east of Chatham has been stopped owing to the floods in the eastern part of Essex and the western part of Kent, particularly the valley of the River Thames. The trouble is at Prairie Siding, which is a little east of Janette's Creek, where it is estimated that about a mile of track has been washed out. All Grand Trunk trains, which, under ordinary circumstances, should use the damaged tracks, are running by way of the Michigan Central, while the Wabash trains are using the Michigan Central tracks between this city and Buffalo.

As far as the eye can reach there is scarcely anything to see but an occasional tree rising above the water immediately east of Janette's Creek.

The water is rushing towards the Thames in huge volumes, and is carrying everything moveable before it.

The floods reported a few days ago in the northern part of Essex have for the most part subsided. So far there has been no loss of life, the loss being confined to stock and property.

Chatham Desolated.

Chatham, March 29.—This town and district have been suffering from flood for some days, but the further rising of the Thames about two feet since Sunday night has completed the desolation in the city. Industry is practically at a standstill, the water having taken possession of cellars and boilerhouses. Several churches were vacant Sunday because the furnaces could not be reached, and all schools are closed for the same reason.

Among the industries closed down are Piggot's, Drader's and Scott's lumber and planing mills; Canada flour mills and elevator; T. H. Taylor's flour and woollen mills and elevator; Stringer's and Wilkinson's Keough & Trotter's foundry, and Bell's elevator.

At 3 p.m. yesterday the water was still rising, and much alarm was felt in the city and vicinity. At Wallaceburg and Dresden the condition is much the same, if not worse. Business is being done in boats between the business men and their customers. Railway communication is cut off above Wallaceburg since Saturday, due to washouts. People on the farms are being rescued from their homes. Considerable loss has been sustained in live and other stock.

Damage at $1,500.

Galt, March 29.—The water was the talk of the Grand Valley as it has been feared this spring. Yet it has come and gone, and no one is much the worse. The water mains were broken and one footbridge swept away.

Woodstock Is Easier.

Woodstock, March 29.—All danger of losses through floods is now passed as far as Woodstock is concerned. The high water on the River Thames and Cedar Creek, which forced the Canada Furniture Company, Hay & Co., and the Woodstock Wagon Company to cease operations in their factories last Friday has receded, and conditions are nearly normal. The factories resumed operations yesterday.

CATTLE LOSSES HEAVY.

Thousands of Head Left to Freeze in N.W.T. Ranges.

Winnipeg, March 29.—West of Winnipeg, on the main line of the C.P.R., on the branch lines, heavy engines are pulling in the snow drifts. Reports received from the Northwest Territories say: "Train service is almost impossible. The Moose Jaw local took twelve hours to come from Regina to Broadview, a distance of ninety miles. Several ranchers say that the loss of cattle will be appalling, as thousands were left running on the ranges when the storm began. No living thing could survive. No person could stand up against it. Several car loads of stock left on the sidings are a total loss. The train, after pulling up to the station, was imbedded in a snow drift as high as the cab."

Snow in the West.

Winnipeg, March 29.—Freight and passenger traffic is congested as a result of the recent storm, and trains and passengers are held up between here and Brandon. Carpenters have been feeding 1,500 railway passengers, who are unable to proceed on account of the snow blockade.

A Cabinet Secret.

London, March 29.—(C. A. P.)—Is there any ground for believing that Mr. Chamberlain's visit to South Africa will be paid out of national funds? Mr. Black M. P. yesterday asked Premier Balfour if Mr. Chamberlain had reported regarding mines and labor, but the Premier refused to divulge Cabinet secrets.

Not Minding Wish It.

London, March 29.—(C. A. P.)—Right Hon. Alfred Lyttelton, Colonial Secretary, replying to E. Wason, M.P., (Liberal), said that no Government instructions were given to Lord Northcote (Governor-General of Australia), to advocate preferential tariffs nor would any action be taken in the matter.

ECZEMA ON LITTLE GIRL

Sleepless Nights for Mother and Awful Suffering of Child.

CURED BY CUTICURA

Had Given up All Hope of Ever Making Any Cure.

"My little girl has been suffering for two years or more from eczema, and during that time I could not get a night's sleep, as her ailment was very severe.

"I had tried so many remedies and spent much money, deriving no benefit, I had absolutely given up all hope of making any cure. But as a last resort I was persuaded to try a set of the Cuticura remedies, and to my great delight a marked change was manifested from the first application. I gave the child a bath with Cuticura Soap, using a soft piece of muslin cloth. This I did twice a day, each time following with the Cuticura Ointment, and at the same time gave the Resolvent internally. After using one box of the Ointment and two bottles of the Resolvent, Cuticura Pills and Soap, effected a permanent cure. I submit this for publication if you desire, hoping it will add to your success and assist in many thousands of mothers in curing themselves." Mrs. I. B. JONES, Abbeyville, South Carolina.

The first step in the treatment of the chronic forms is to remove the scales and crusts and soften the skin, by warm baths with Cuticura Soap. The scalp, ears, elbows, hands, ankles and feet will require frequently a thorough soaking in order to loosen the thickened skin and crusts with which these parts are often covered. Dry carefully, and apply Cuticura Ointment, lightly at first, to prevent friction, and rub it on pieces of soft cloth and bind in place. Take the Resolvent, pills or liquid, in bathtub doses. Do not use cold water in bathing, and avoid cold, raw winds.

Cuticura Soap (25c.), Ointment (50c.), Resolvent (50c.), Pills (50c. per vial), and Cuticura Liquid Resolvent (50c. per bottle), are sold throughout the world. Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston. "How to Cure Eczema."

Sir Horace Rumbold has brought out another volume based on his entertaining diaries, entitled "Further Recollections of a Diplomatist." His relation begins with the year 1873, when he went as Minister to Chili and had charge of the Tacna affairs, and comes down to 1885. Some of the best stories in the volume he got from Lady Marian Alford, who seems to have taken pleasure in placing Gladstone in a ridiculous light. Thus she tells how on one occasion she met the Gladstones at Ford Castle, and went on with Mrs. Gladstone to her country estate. The tenants were on the lookout for her, and made affectionate demonstrations as she drove by, whereat, unconscious, Mrs. Gladstone exclaimed: "They think William is in the carriage." The rest of the story is connected with Consul Hubner, the Austrian diplomatist, and goes back to the time when Gladstone had made himself very unpopular at Vienna by his "Hands off, Austria," speech.

During this sague tour Lady Marian had met Hubner, who was on his way to Raby Castle like herself, and traveled with him as far, as Darlington, where they had to wait a couple of hours before continuing their journey. They went to an inn in the town for lunch, and thence back to the station in the hotel omnibus. There were other passengers in this "bus," one of whom, sitting intently on Hubner, said: "I believe I have the privilege of addressing in the same omnibus with Mr. Gladstone!" to which Hubner replied by a contemptuous grunt and shrug, and, letting down the glass behind him, thrust his elbow out, and deliberately looked out of the window till the station was reached. "What did you do that for?" asked Lady Marian as they got out. "Well," he replied, "I hope I have succeeded in making Mr. Gladstone thoroughly unpopular in Darlington!"

Let the White Folks Settle It.

When Booker T. Washington was asked whether northerners or southerners were responsible for the introduction of slavery he told this story: "An old colored man had a pig which he sold for $3. Later the pig escaped and came back home. Another white man came along, and Uncle Zeke sold him the pig for another $3. When the two purchasers met they were angry and went back to settle it. "Uncle Zeke, didn't you sell me the pig for $3 at 9 o'clock?" said one. "Sho ! did, maam.' 'Didn't I pay you $3 for it at 12 o'clock?' said the other. 'Sho you did mama.' 'Well, then, what are you going to do, about it?' 'Shakes alive!' said Uncle Zeke. 'Can't you white folks settle that question between yo'selves?'"

FOR INFLAMMATION OF THE EYES.—Among the many good qualities which Dr. Pierre's Pleasant Pellets display in regulating the digestive organs, is their efficacy in reducing inflammation of the eyes. It has called forth many letters of commendation from those who were afflicted with this complaint and found relief in the pellets. Inflammation of the nerve centres and the bone is a surprisingly active way, and the result is shown in blindness. 1y

Many a man who doesn't take watches, will be pulled out.

If you have a cough or cold do not neglect it, but get rid of it as soon as possible. Many people are carried off by that hereditary disease have drifted into consumption through a cold or cough that they neglected. Don't neglect a cough, but get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup and be cured before the lungs or their lives would have been seized. Mr. A. H. Tracy, Bay Fort, writes: "Last winter I had La Grippe and it left me with a severe pain in the small of my back and hip that used to catch me when I tried to climb on a fence. This lasted for about two months and I bought a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil and got both internally and externally, morning and evening. Before I was three days at the expiration of which time I was entirely relieved."

When one gets hopping mad he generally gets left.

Their gentle action and good effect on the system really make them a perfect little pill. They are the pills to use them. Carter's Little Liver Pills are the best be found. Perfection, complaints, who might have been averted by the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil attacked do not delay in getting a bottle of Dr. D. D. The Filigree Ball

AUTHOR OF

"THE LEAVENWORTH CASE."

to shriek my guilt aloud and act in open pantomime what I now go through in fearsome silence and secrecy. When the hour comes, as come it must, that I can rise and utter that fatal closet, I shall still enact the deed in dreams, and shriek aloud in my sleep and wish myself dead and cold in the last my hell to go through all eternity. Waking over and over my man, in ever growing horror and repulsion.

"Do you wish to share my fate? Try to effect through blood a release from the difficulties menacing you."

CHAPTER XXII.

They are moments which stand out with intense force and clearness in every man's life. Mine was the one which followed the reading of these lines—which were meant for a warning, but which in more than one case had manifestly served to open the way to a repetition of the very thing they divulged. I felt myself under the same fascination. I wanted to test the mechanism; to follow out their guidance. The instructions given with such short-sighted minuteness and mark the result. But a sense of decency prevented. It was directly my duty to carry so important a discovery as this to my master and subject myself to his commands before making the experiment suggested by the scroll I had so carelessly deciphered. Besides, it would be difficult to carry out this experiment alone, and with no other light than the flickering one by my hand. Another man and more lights were needed.

Influenced by these considerations, I restored the fatal scroll to its place and left the building. As I did so, the first signs of dawn became visible in the sky, and Ignatius Vanderpoel's Big Discovery for Dyspepsia. My nerves were dull and my head ached. For three years I could not eat meat for my weight decreased from 210 to 110 lbs. Now I eat meat three times a day and weigh 170 lbs. I have also taken Vegetable Discovery three times a day and have a bottle of the medicine convenient.

I was, and thought I could not begin to try this great medicine. It never be afraid of doing little because you are little.

Do not despair of curing your sick headache. Just as surely as Carter's Little Liver Pills. They will effect a prompt and permanent cure. Don't forget this fact.

The average watch represents but half of the time it loses.

The Flagging Energies Revived.—Coffee is the drug that is used by almost the entire civilized world. Its expression are sure to intervene. Those persons have the miserable troubles. The "mat of sensation" on the tongue, irregularities, and the stomach ceases to digest properly. Ayer's Sarsaparilla tones the nerves, enriches the blood, and regulates Parmelee's Vegetable Pills with be found a valuable aid in this respect, restoring the organs to healthful activity, dispelling disease and reviving the flagging energies.

Don't be a fool nuisance, it is always better to do what you are.

RAD LA GRIPPE.—Mr. A. Nickerson, Granville Ferry, writes: "Last winter I had La Grippe and it left me with a severe pain in the small of my back and hip that used to catch me when I tried to climb on a fence. This lasted for about two months and I bought a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil and got both internally and externally, morning and evening. Before I was three days at the expiration of which time I was entirely relieved."

"Is he changed my mind," said I. "I can give you no good reason for this; something in the woman herself. She looks—she does not look, nor act like a criminal. While not desirous or raising myself in opposition to the judgment of those so greatly my superior in all respects, I have had the feeling, and I am courageous enough to avow it. And yet, if Mr. Jeffrey could not have left the cemetery gates and reached the Moore house in time to find all the conditions of the tragedy, the case does look against the woman. Is she sure that the shot been when the pistol was fired, asked—"

"Unless what? You have something new to tell us. That we have not seen since we left the room. What is it?"

I cast a glance at the door. Should I be able to finish my story before Detective Gryce returned? If possible, and, though still upset by this new evidence, which I could not but see was conclusive, Miss Tuttle's favor, I spoke up with what spirit I might.

"I have just come from spending another night in the Moore house. All the efforts heretofore made to exhaust its recrets have been found of upon a thorough search, brought us nowhere. I had another in mind, and I was anxious to try it, before resting from all further attempt to solve this riddle. And it has not failed me. By pursuing a clue apparently so trivial that I allowed it to escape me at first, I have at last come upon the key to the many mysterious corners which have defied the library heartstone. And where do you think it lies? Not in the heartstone itself nor yet in the floor under the settle; not, in fact, in the library at all, but in the picture hanging upstairs in the southeast chamber."

"The picture! that faded-out sketch, fit only for the garret?"

"Yes, that sketch which people surveying it, it is just what you say and nothing more. But it is an initiated few-pray Heaven they may have been favored in writing, conveying secret instructions. The whole combination of curves which go to make up that picture, the strange arrangement of words inscribed with the utmost care, the faded-out characters. Viewed with a magnifying glass, the uncertain outlines of a shadowy figure surrounded by a mass of piled-up hair resolve themselves into three words. Also, the words of which are quite intelligible and full of meaning and unmistakable purpose. I have read those lines; and I have, to none, I have transcribed them into plain English. Will you hear them? They contain a most extraordinary statement and command that was manifestly intended as a warning, but which has proved of a very different results. It may explain the death of the man from whom, even if it does not explain why the other inexplicable features of the remarkable case, we are considering."

As I spoke I laid open on the table before me the transcription of which I spoke. Should I read it to them both, or let them? When they looked again, their countenances showed not exclusive only the astonishment which is the one minute of triumph which I have enjoyed in the whole course of disturbed me in the past was forgotten.

"You are a man in a thousand," was the major's first enthusiastic comment; and there was no consciousness of regretting, with very pardonable circumstances, that he had not returned to hear these words.

The major now proposed that we should adjourn to the Moore house. "A family seemed like this does not enjoy its home long, and it is not full of surprises as Washington. We will have to wait for Gryce, however the closet drawers and see what happens, eh? And on our way there"—here he turned to me—"you shall tell us how the particulars concerning the little girl's death were discovered. Mr. Jeffrey's interest in this old tragedy is not yet explained. He knew its diabolical secret."

"This was accidental, and my heart was in my mouth at the time, when I seemed to be so deep in her brother's confidences."

"Ah!" said the major, with a knowing look, "you were not quite so deep in her brother's confidences as you thought."

"To such an extent had I been influenced by the false impressions which I had once surprised on her face.

Had Mr. David Moore been sitting open-eyed behind his vines that morning, he would have had a very surprised to see so many of his natural enemies gathered in his parlor at so early an hour. But, happily, he had just gone, and we were left free to enter upon our investigations without being watched or interrupted.

Our first move was to go in a body to the southeast chamber. Laying down the picture, examine it with a magnifying glass, and satisfy ourselves that the words I had pointed out of its many lines were really to be found there. This done and my veracity established, we next proceeded to the closet where, according to the instructions embodied in this picture, the secret spring was to be founded by which some unknown and devilish machinery would be released to the library hearthstone.

To my great satisfaction the active part in this experiment was relegated to me. Durbin continued to be a mere looker-on. Drawing out the two large drawers from the place at the end of this closet, I set them aside. Then I hunted for and found the small loophole which we had been told edorded a glimpse of the library hearthstone; but seeing nothing through it, I called for a light to be placed in the room below.

With a single peep down to see if they were still on the watch, I seized the handle which opened it and had made sure of when searching for the spring, and began to turn; when instantly—so quickly as to be scarcely the long red stiffened and I saw the barrel of a pistol thrust above the settle-top.

"Stop!" called out the major. "Let go and press the spring again." I hastened to obey and, though the back of the settle had not moved to me, I judged from the look and attitude of those below that the colonel's calculations had been made with great exactness, and that the combination of pressure on the rude and cumbersome bench had been so adjusted that the instant the spring seconding would at the chosen moment strike the head of Mrs. Moore there, inflicting death. That the weight should be made just heavy enough to fall on the head of a person without damaging the skull was proof of the exactness with which this subtle apparatus had been contrived. On open eyes and unprepared questions, but a mere brute might readily pass as a result of NEWFOUNDLAND AND CONFEDERATION.

COL. PONTON'S ADDRESS BEFORE THE CANADIAN CLUB OF VICTORIA.

Toronto, March 28.—The inclusion of Newfoundland in the Canadian Confederation was urged at the Canadian Club luncheon to-day by Lt.-Col. Jw. N. Ponton, of Belleville, who moved the resolution to the same effect adopted when the Chambers of Commerce adopted at the Montreal meeting last summer.

He recognized this all that is necessary in Order-in-Council, Colonel Ponton says, as the British North American Act governs for Newfoundland and any action into the Dominion, Canada would thereby gain her territorial integrity and give her manufacturers a home market on a proved which takes $2,500,000 of coal products yearly. If the United States should object to Great Britain buying St. Pierre and Miquelon, he suggested that Canada should buy them. But it will require a paragraph of action, too, to get the island colony in, which must be urged on primarily by the press, but this press needs suggestion such as may come from those as like the Canadian Club. These will give an impetus in this matter, as they have to others, and it is fitting that from Toronto should come the first move.

When the island colony is taken into Confederation, there will be a complete coast line on the Atlantic. At present, startling as it seems, Canada is bounded by the Atlantic on the east only as far as Nova Scotia is concerned. Ponton gives a brief review of the history of the colony, which was covered in 1497 by Sebastian Cabot, who got a royal grant of £10 for his achievement. He started out to find a short route to Cathay, which Canada has since proven to be the N.W.P. In the Treaty of Utrecht gave to the French rights over a stretch of coast from Cape Ray to Cape John, which rights being magnified by the French through successive years into exclusive privileges. So far were their claims carried that land and coal mining were forbidden by England, and this rather operated for fear of frightening the French away. The fish question has got on the nerves of the Newfoundlanders, in the way Col. Ponton expresses it.

In conclusion the eloquent speaker asked: If Canada and the island determine on union, who shall forbid the banns? No Monroe doctrine can interfere if British resquires St. Pierre and Miquelon. Nevertheless, if the Bond-Hay treaty of reciprocity passes, Newfoundland will hold itself from Canada as the opportunity will be good, and already Boston capital has secured and is developing most of Newfoundland's industries: the assimilation is from which. These facts are in the main those which should have been taken at the flood of 1895, but then the French shore question, now about to be settled, loomed up large, and there are now branches, and not the cementing of the Empire following Australia and South Africa in progress. He closed by an extract from a speech by Mr. Chamberlain, who appealed to men in a world of men, and declared that Britain would always be able to conquer the hearts of her people with the cheers of her children.

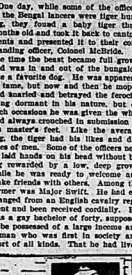
COL. M'BRIDE'S PET

By CYRUS DERICKSON

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure



"IT'S THE MAJOR!" HE GASPED.

One day, while some of the officers of the Bengal lancers were tiger hunting, they found a baby tiger three months old and took it back to cantonments and presented it to their commanding officer, Colonel McBride. In due time the beast became full grown and was in and out of the bungalow like a favorite dog. He was apparently tame, but now and then he moped and snarled and betrayed the ferocity lying dormant in his nature, but on such occasions he was given the whip and always crouched in submission at his master's feet. Like the average dog, the tiger had his likes and dislikes of men. Some of the officers never laid hands on his head without being rewarded by a low, deep growl, while he was ready to welcome and make friends with others. Among the former was Major Swift. He had exchanged from an English cavalry regiment and been received coldly. He was a jolly bachelor of forty, supposed to be possessed of a large income and a man who was first in society and sport of all kinds. That he had hired was dislike and distrust of the man. The beast continued his glare until the colonel's man was ordered to take him away and do him up. The colonel had said nothing to any of the officers, but he had secretly determined to watch the major's play and discover, if there was a cause for his winning the way he did. The major could have had no hint of it, and yet perhaps intuition had given Mr. Wardle, for he was not himself at all. He played and won, but he also played and lost, and his pile grew in their credit side. Seated at his right hand and taking no part in the game was a native gentleman, and he never left his chair from first to last. The major came out loser by £500. On the next night he left £175 on the third night £100. He made good his first two losses from his former winnings, but then he began the third sitting he knew that he would have to borrow of a brother officer to pay his losses.

The officer had not been detected cheating, but he had been out of luck. The colonel may have put two and two together in his own mind, and so perhaps might one of the other players, but the party broke up with the greatest apparent good feeling all around, and half an hour later the colonel was in bed. He was a sound sleeper, and it was pretty far into the night that at night the tiger was given free range of the bungalow. There were no sentinels stationed outside the place, but a native watchman slept on the veranda. At 2 o'clock in the morning the man slept, and the colonel was in dreamland. The tiger was stretched on the floor, blinking and dozing, when he suddenly pricked up his ears and opened wide his eyes. He had heard a step on the compound outside, and he intended the step came nearer. It being in the heat of the season, the doorways were guarded only by mats. Presently the animal saw one of these slightly move, and he got down on all fours and ger. He did not growl or spring up, but the fire in his eyes grew brighter, and his teeth bared over his fangs. He crept slowly and carefully pushed the mat aside and entered the room, which was one in which the guests had been entertained that night, ought to have caught the beast's eye, but it was in the darkness, but he did not. With footfalls as gentle as a hare's he stole across the room to the colonel's desk. The desk had been carelessly left unlocked, and the key in it. The man containing the money to be given to the winning horses of the races to be held in a week later. He took the key, the bag, and the robber had just turned from the desk to make his stealthy escape when there was a roar, a leap, a bound, and he went down with a crash. It was but for a minute that the colonel was at hand with a light, but the beast had done his work. A blow from his paw or a stroke of his fangs broke the man's neck, and teeth and claws were torn at work. He was promptly shot, and the colonel took the money and recalled the dead man over that he might see his face.

"Heavens, but it's the major!" he gasped out as he started back. "It's the major, and he has the bag of money clutched in his hand!"

Not Absolutely Helpless.

Some few persons still cherish the idea that all women are absolutely helpless in business, and that because they are so lacking in financial ability that their cannot safely be trusted to handle money.

Mr. Black belonged to this class. He had been in the habit of paying all the household bills at the end of each month, and his wife, although allowed unlimited credit, had never had a cent in her possession. One day the Blacks happened to be passing the commercial new building in which the bank was situated.

"Do you know, John," remarked Mrs. Black, "I have actually never been inside the bank since it was built more than two years ago!"

"You haven't!" exclaimed John. "If that's the case I guess I'd better give you a check this month and let you pay the bills. Do you think you'd know how to cash it?"

Mrs. Black received the check. That evening Mr. Black asked, not without sarcasm, if she had succeeded in disposing it properly.

"Oh, yes!" returned Mrs. Black cheerfully.

"How many bills did you pay?"

"None. I deposited it to my own credit at that money paying bills."

"Then what in the world did you do with it?"

"Oh," returned the little woman serenely, "I just deposited it to my own account!"—Collier's Weekly.

Gernert, Bavariarring 30a, and I am sure that you will be delight. Catalogue of the collection is to prepaid send the catalogue every Patron which to give his strict address."

This, says the correspondent who kindly sends us the foregoing, rather emphasizes an experience of my own in Munich, where a shopkeeper, trying in English to excuse himself for not having in stock a appliance I needed said, "I have not. I am very disagreeable."—London Outlook.

It appears (says The Lancet) that the most probable explanation of the alleged deterioration of the 'working classes' is 'Blazed' upon a misconception of the facts, and that what we are witnessing is not merely one of the effects of the improved wellbeing of the people and of the greater attractions offered to the worker by civil employment. If this be so, the terrifying sergeant is really carrying on his work in a lower social stratum in which, by force of circumstances, the application of the unfit is greater than was the case when the army was drawn largely to a relatively better class. It is, too, conceivable that although the fact is not recognized, a somewhat higher standard as regards fitness may now be demanded to be met, and that perhaps more stress than formerly is being laid upon defective teeth; imperfect vision and the like.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"THE GOVERNOR'S SON TO-NIGHT."

This extraordinary production proved to be the "piece de resistance" of the last musical comedy offerings last season, and there is every reason for the success that it will not relinquish its grasp on that distinction. It is a mirth provoking farce, really seems to grow in favor as one sees it. The performance will be found to be bright and clean, and the chorus of thirty "singing beauties." Shows indispensable adjuncts to the successful modern musical comedy, musical farce have been supplied with costumes which are bewildering in their revelations in richness and beauty, each one being a creation of the modiste's art in itself. Many new musical numbers have been added to the list of catchy melodies which have tickled the ear last time; several of which it is confidently predicted will become popular "hits." The whole show has been so thoroughly revised that what was formerly hopefully termed the new production is in fact a new production, and a clever comedy. At the opera house to-night.

THE EARL OF PAWTUCKET.

The Montreal Star has the following to say of the Earl of Pawtucket which comes to the Carman Opera House on Thursday evening next:

"Not since John Hare introduced a Mortimer Brown and a Mr. Pinero in 'Spectacles' has a local theatre enjoyed so excellent a comedy as that which was seen at the Academy last night. After the myriad of gags, swaying and nonsense of the past few years, to fulled the Academy stage for the better portion of the first instalment, the coming of The Earl of Pawtucket" is like oil upon troubled waters. In the first place the comedy is delicate in the extreme—a thing of beauty from start to finish—and in its creation, Augustus Thomas, their able playwright, has displayed real full credit in the matter of situations and sparkling effervescent dialogue."

Literary Notes.

AN EASTER NUMBER.

A truly Easter number is the April Canadian Magazine. The cover is a beautiful design by Gagen, and the special illustrations are suitable to the season, and the whole aspect of the book is fair, of a most pleasing sort. To illustrate Mr. Carman's Church Art in Rome. There are some reproductions of famous paintings and photos of Roman scenes that are creditable alike to the engraver and printer. The delicate color effect of the frontispiece reproduction is considerable enterprise and a high degree of skill. The articles are more numerous than usual and well selected. There are two serial stories, and two informing articles. One is "Wheat Growing in Canada," by William Saunders, Director Dominion Experimental Farms, in which he proves that the Northwest may easily produce 800,000,000 bushels of wheat per annum, or about one-fifth of the requirements of Great Britain. The other is "Soil Cultivation," by E. Stewart Russell, shows that Canada's best employ her waste lands by turning them into farms. The departments are interesting and replete with photos, cartoons and pictures of current interest.

If you don't bore children and old people, you may think pretty well of yourself.

NOTHING LOOSENS UP COLDS

On the chest and relieves that tight feeling and hard cough like Nerviline, writes E. P. Brailsford, of Sutton. "I never use any other remedy but Nerviline and find it serves as a general household liniment best of all. Children's colds and inflammatory pains are quickly cured by Nerviline, and its action on colds, coughs and sore throat is unequalled by anything I ever used. Nerviline is both powerful, pleasant and reliable." Every mother should use Nerviline. Price 25 cents.

Wall Papers—Wholesale and Retail.

Successful decoration must be the outcome of study—of thought rather than of mere chance.

In the chance room there will surely be something wrong.

Possibly the color. Perchance Drawing — Likely both.

Whether Chamber, Drawing Room, Living Room, Library or Den, the room must be treated with thought of surroundings, of furniture of complexion, of lighting, of size.

The environment of a room with North or East exposure must not be blue, while either West or Southern exposure may use blue to advantage.

How about Crimsons, Greens and Brown—where may these colors be used—just ask your decorator, if he is worthy the name he can tell you.

The Store For Quality

This store excels not only in quality, but variety as well—never has it been able to show what it does to-day, and notwithstanding the fact that the clothes that wear the Quick & Robertson label are the uncommon kind, the prices of them will prove the greatest surprise of all.

The Rain Coat—the Top Coat—the Three-Quarter Length Overcoat—the New Single Breasted Sack—the New Double-Breasted Sack, are all here—There's absolutely nothing missing.

Easter Clothes

Naturally we are very proud of our Boys' Clothing Department. The showing we make for Easter is extraordinary—it is unusual, not only in windows of variety and exclusiveness of style, but in lowness of prices—quality and always has been is paramount.

Suits for young men receive particular attention—our showing is so entirely different—the garments possess style, individuality, and material the output of the foremost tailors, and our prices are less than HALF.

The Finest Haberdashery for Men and Boys.

This department is a complete store in itself—exclusiveness is just as possible, if not a little more so here than it is in smaller establishments.

We have it and our Up-to-Date methods of merchandising enable us to assure it to all without extra charge—our prices are regulated by quality only, and WE WILL SAVE YOU MONEY.

An Unusual Showing of Spring Hats.

This department can be depended upon, not only for quality and fairness of prices, but as a place where the newest creations will be shown as soon as they are issued.

Will the Toronto Globe kindly note that it was not The Belleville Intelligencer which charged that all hockey players are "either paid outright or receive some compensation for their services." TROTTING.

Charges Against the Local Driving Club.

Mr. Harford Ashley has written the secretary of the National Trotting Association, preferring the following charges against the Belleville Driving and Athletic Association and its managing director:

1. That the association, in August, 1903, did mislead the public by publishing the alleged fact that there were seven entries in one class and five in another, when in fact there were only four rated entries in each class, as shown by the affidavit of the secretary.

2. That on the 20th and 21st days of January, 1904, one Albert Grow, driver, and one Mr. Harford Ashley were refused admission to the Belleville Driving Club's track, though the races, according to the printed announcement, were open to the public.

3. That the Belleville Driving Club accepted entries for their races in August, 1903, and, on the 20th day of January, 1904, when the entries were received, the same had expired, and refunded out of the prize moneys, in which the said entries were to be entitled, moneys to pay for a fifth entry in each race.

4. That the Belleville Driving Club wrongfully held the time of declaring off any of the races at the said meeting.

5. That the said managing director of the association did wrongfully enter or permit to be entered the mare Mary Anderson, having a record of 2.16, whereas no other than such mare was entitled to be entered, by the said races taking place, it is alleged, at Tweed, Belleville, Napanee and Deseronto.

6. That the said managing director wrongfully represented to one Edmund Bogart, a horse dealer residing at Belleville, that the said mare, Mary Anderson, was a green horse without a record, and thereby said mare had a record of 2.16, to the great injury of said Bogart, the declarer.

It is also charged that the Belleville Driving Club excluded one Albert Gerow from their track, notwithstanding that he had a season ticket for the use of the said track. These charges the said Ashley charges is acknowledged by Mr. W. H. Goeber, of Harford, secretary of the National Trotting Association, who stated that the said charges will be submitted to the Board of Review at its next meeting.

Noted Trainers Get Favors.

"Professional judges and starters are all very nice, and I am strongly in favor of having associations having none other in their stands," said Dick Lawrence to a group of listeners. "but the complaint of horsemen that the employing of them will never make the small fry on the tracks the equal to those who control the stakes.

"And I don't suppose the man with a single entry or no should expect to rate with the owner of a team from six to a dozen horses entered in a number of races.

"Therefore, it is no wonder that the secretaries and boards of the large stables get all the favors in the hands of the judges while the little fellow has to grin and bear it.

"From the time the horses come on the grounds in the spring until the secretary is all bows and smiles to the owners of the big strings in the stalls and other things accordingly.

"How different the single entry man! The secretary of the track has placed in some stall, and if a kick is neglected, why then the official is not too busy to attend to him. 'Come around later,' or something of the kind is tossed to him.

"Then did you ever see the starting judge be polite to any horse's owners. Don't you know how many times he will allow one of them to wait for a word with the driver of his mount?

"On the other hand, let the little chap have a bad actor, and after a couple of calls the starting judge will plainly tell him that he had his care of himself. And never does the man with the small rope jar that particular attention to him. If he is back a couple of lengths or so away the horses are sent off.

"Now, how can anybody blame the starting judge? He is working for the association, and must pay a lot of attention to the tracks' best interests, most profitable patrons. It only human nature and the way of the world in general."

The most competent and fair-minded starting judges will do all of what I've said, though possibly they do so unconsciously, meaning in their hearts to do the square thing to every driver in the race. Still, it's only a question of policy.

"Now after the heat is finished with what great respect do the judges relax to the prominent trainers. Till tell you what they have to say in heard with for understudies.

"The little chap! Why, I've seen judges that their backs to him when its entered the stand to make an appeal, with a remark something like 'we understand all about your kick, or 'we didn't know you was in the race.'

"You see I'm not registering a kick, for such a thing avails nothing for me or my patrons. But what I've said is the gospel truth, known to every jack standard.

Record of Looking Glass.

The following from the Uxbridge Journal will be of interest to horse lovers in this city:

"Perhaps a short resume of the winter campaign, and the races of the celebrated gelding who has incidentally done much to advertise Uxbridge, would be timely, since his return to his home stable. He first started at Port Perry, and in a go-as-you-please race in minor stores, was second to Gipsy Girl, with Black Joe third and J. B. F. fourth. At Stellville Looking Glass won a very close race in straight heats from Sphinx B., Black Joe and Gipsy Girl. Willcox, passing the second heat in 2.19 1-4. He repeated his performance at Ottawa in the 2.14 class, beating Cole, the crack American mare, Miss Hunter, Bivouac, Black Joe and Maude Abbott, and pacing the three fastest heats of his career up to that time—2.19 1-2, 2.21, 2.22. Practically the first defeat he suffered in the season was at Gipsy Girl, with Black Joe third and J. B. F. fourth.

The Girl drew the pole, a big advantage in a two-horse race, and Looking Glass broke a third place heat after they had away, and the other before the heat was finished. The mishap was unknown to the driver, who drove the gelding out. The same effort without shoes was costly, and when in the second heat the new shoes plug never left were, any chance Looking Glass had of winning was lost. The Kingston 2.20, 21, 22 race, for four, considering the reputation of the horses and the thoroughness of the stake —$2,000. In the free-for-all at Tweed, after Cola was the first, Looking Glass stepped the last three heats in the fastest time of the meet. That it was a hard race is proved by the 2.14 class, that the greatest interest was centered. Looking Glass and Gipsy Girl were favorites, and with Cola and Cartland, made the fastest three heats ever faced a starter over the line. That the racing public attributed the loss of the latter race wholly to accident, was shown by the Ebtawa heat way in which Looking Glass was backed down to $6 against the field. The race was the best of the season, but the result was never in doubt. Gipsy Girl was first away in every heat, but could stay the pace Looking Glass won in straight heats, establishing a world's record for the three fastest heats at the time, 2.19 1-2, 2.19, with Cola second in each heat, and Girl third. As three years of Gipsy Girl was reported as saying after the race that he still considered her faster than the gelding. Dr. Forrest boasted a challenge in the Ottawa Journal which was not taken up, while horse again for any amount, but

A Warehouse Burned.

Bowmanville, March 29.—The fire brigade was called out yesterday forenoon by an alarm from the factory of Bain Rubber Company's factory. Philip Alcumbrack, an employe, was working in the cement house, where the rubber in crude form is mixed, when an explosion took place. Gasolene is used in the process, and it is supposed that a spark from friction caused the explosion. The fire was promptly extinguished and no damage was done to the other part of the factory, which is some distance from the cement house. The loss will be considerable, as large quantities of raw material were stored in this building and were destroyed. Loss is covered by insurance. Alcumbrack was badly burned on the face and head.

To Be Tried For Murder.

Port Arthur, March 29.—The preliminary examination of Chas. Dupault, who is charged with killing John Mein on March 18, was held here yesterday morning before Justice Magistrate Dohle, and the prisoner sent up for trial at the next assizes on the charge of murder. The prisoner waived examination.

A Decisive Vote.

Paris, March 29.—By the decisive majority of 316 to 269, the Chamber of Deputies last night passed the Government bill for the suppression of all forms of teaching by the religious orders. The complete text now begin by the former Premier, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, in 1901.

STOMACH TROUBLE

A Thorough Test of Iron-ox Tablets for a very Severe Case.

September 19, 1902.

I never tried anything that can be compared with Iron-ox Tablets for stomach trouble, as I had a very severe case of nervous dyspepsia, and tablets are more than I ever expected of them. Your Tablets have done me so much good that I am giving them to my little girl, she is troubled with nervousness.

Later—January 26, 1903.

I can truthfully say it is a wonderfully good remedy for any stomach trouble. Mine was a very severe case, as it troubled me four years, and your Tablets have done me a world of good.

TALKED A WHOLE NIGHT

Legislature Evenly Divided and Liberals Need Three M.P.P.'S.

Premier Ross Declines to Put Dr. Nesbitt's Motion For a Two-Cent Passenger Rate. Whereat His Many Members Who Spoke and How They Did It—Jim Conmee "Kidded"—When Hanna Quoted.

Toronto, March 29.—Dr. Nesbitt was responsible for another serious situation for the Ontario Government. He has the Ross government talking against time at an all night session waiting for the trains to bring in enough Liberal members to vote down a resolution declaring that no subsidy shall hereafter be granted to any railway, steam or electric, except upon the express condition that the passenger rate shall not exceed two cents per mile. Last week Premier Ross succeeded in carrying a resolution that after Good Friday Government orders shall have precedence. The effect of this is to take all the business promoted by private members until the whole Government program is cleared off the paper.

Dr. Nesbitt briefly stated his reasons for asking the House to commit itself to the two-cent principle, and was followed by Mr. Lennox and Mr. Whitney. On the arrival of 6 o'clock Hon. J. J. Davis was on the floor and Mr. Whitney moved "six o'clock" being an intimation to the Speaker to leave the chair. He suggested that it might be advisable to adjourn if the Government would consent to have private members' questions resumed on Wednesday. That was agreed to and Hanna to concur, but the Attorney-General whispered something in his ear and he suddenly changed his mind and insisted that the Government would stick to its original proposition. Mr. Whitney then expressed his preference for a resumption of the debate after dinner.

It All Rested It.

At the evening session Hon. Mr. Davis resumed and talked all around the subject. Pettypiece, whose railway taxation bill was scheduled for yesterday, also assisted in keeping up the talk. Mr. Graham followed. While he was talking the usual hour of adjournment arrived, and the Premier, while not pressing for an adjournment, broadly hinted that the practice ought to be adopted to. He was willing to allow the debate to go on on Wednesday, as well as the Opposite bill, but Mr. Whitney still complained that the last opportunity of private members had been taken away from them by the Government consuming six hours.

The reason for all the talk was that the Opposition had a substantial majority in favor of Dr. Nesbitt's motion. If the morning trains do not bring in the required support for the Government the debate will continue without interruption until this afternoon.

The Ministers remained out of their seats till twenty minutes to nine, although the Conservatives were in their places calling "Division," and "Call in the members."

At 11 o'clock Mr. Mickenson observed that the practice of the House was to adjourn at 10 o'clock.

Mr. Graham was willing to move the adjournment of the debate, but Mr. Whitney said it was open to the Government to adjourn the House.

The Accommodating Premier.

The Premier said the Government always surrendered its right to go after 12 o'clock, but in the interests of the Opposition, "We're most accommodating," he said.

"In the meantime," remarked Mr. Whitney, "your last opportunity to secure consideration for resolutions on the paper has been taken away by the Government deliberately taking the time of the House for six hours on a subject which has been thoroughly disposed of in an hour." He pointed out that after the Government business would have precedence over all other business.

"I hope my honorable friend does not put me in the position of pleading for an extension of time," observed the Premier, meekly.

"No, no," Mr. Whitney said.

Afraid of the Position.

Continuing, the Premier said he hoped the papers would not put him in that position. The question was a most important one and a great deal of valuable information had been brought out. It was an exceedingly useful debate, but the Government would be willing, rather than have the practice of the House set aside at the caprice of any one, to have this question, and that of Mr. Pettypiece, which was set down for consideration to-day, taken up on Wednesday.

Mr. Whitney replied that the Premier had not explained why the last opportunity of private members had been taken away. If the Government gave way, they would be at the disposal of the Government. He thought it would be well to proceed to a division on the question.

Mr. Graham finished his speech at 11.15, and Mr. Gross of St. Catharines began to perform a book act, kept it up in spite of the jeers of the Opposition.

"Kidded" James.

Mr. Gross spoke till 12.45, when Jas. Conmee took the floor and after three-quarters of an hour "off with" him, but recommenced the book relating to the taxation of railways. The Opposition was getting restless by this time and indulged in the gentle art of "kidding" the genial James.

It was expected that a division would be reached at 11 o'clock this morning.

Hanna the Cause Stands.

At midnight the standing in the Legislature was even. The only official "pair" was that between Hanna and Latchford (Renfrew). Three Liberals were absent, Sam. Clarke, G. Guibord, Valentine Stock. The redoubtable Samuel missed his train yesterday afternoon by just three minutes. He is reported to be walking to Toronto from Orangeville. Several other members were out of the House yesterday, Caldwell (Liberal) and Powell (Conservative), are thought to have a personal understanding on their absence. The same applies to John Smith (Liberal) and W. A. Kribs (Conservative). Lecky (Conservative) and Lee (Liberal) and Dr. Ramsay (Conservative). The Liberals claimed one majority early this morning, maintaining that the Smith-Kribs pair should be a Stock-Kribs pair, thus giving Smith a vote, and a vote.

Dr. Nesbitt's Motion.

That in the opinion of this House no subsidy in land, or cash, shall be hereafter granted to any railway, steam or electric, except upon the express condition that the passenger rate upon such road shall not be exceed, at any time, two cents per mile.

Mr. Preston's Amendment.

That all the words in the motion after the word "house" in the first line thereof be omitted and the following substituted therefor: In settling the terms and conditions of grants to railways in land and cash, this province and the policy hitherto adopted of insisting upon specially favorable terms as applicable to settlers and colonists and their effects, every effort shall be made to secure a rate of not more than 2 cents per mile where the imposition of such conditions would be reasonably practicable, having regard to the earning powers of the railway concerned, the cost of construction and all other circumstances connected with the case.

Dodged Pertinent Query.

Again the seats of Messrs. Conmee and Bowman were vacant when Mr. Hanna's question concerning hotel licenses in the Soo bill was reached. Both came into the Chamber during the debate on Dr. Nesbitt's two resolutions and rate resolution.

The Premier's Promises.

Just before the House rose at 6 o'clock Mr. Crawford gained the floor and said as one interested in the promotion of temperance he would like to ask the Premier if it was his intention to give the temperance people what he has promised them.

The Premier shook his head, but Mr. Crawford was insistent. He repeated the question, and the Premier replied:

"I will endeavor to answer my friend's question in time. I hope my hon. friend won't be so persistent."

Third Readings.

The following bills were read a third time: Respecting the Township of Nountsha in the County of Dundas (Whitney); to empower Owen B. Van Epp to practice medicine in the Township of Pelee (Auld).

NINETY PERSONS KILLED.

Awful Result of Cyclonic Disaster at Reunion Island.

Hamburg, March 29.—An expert bureau here has received a cablegram from Reunion Island, confirming the announcement of the disaster caused by the cyclone, March 21 and 22. The island was completely devastated. The capital, St. Denis, was destroyed, and many public buildings were damaged or totally destroyed. Fourteen hundred inhabitants among the islanders, and provisions and clothing are needed. The crops are destroyed. The damage is estimated at $5,000,000. Ninety persons, including nineteen whites, were killed.

St. Thomas Bylaw Fails.

St. Thomas, March 29.—The voting on the bylaw to grant $50,000 to Alma College was defeated by the ratepayers to-day. Thomas yesterday by a majority of 11. The ballots in favor numbered 633, with 644 against.

London, March 29.—(C.A.P.)—Times' Washington correspondence wires that the colony is unlikely to listen to Canada's suggestion of conference until the autumn general elections.

OPERATIONS A FAD.

PUBLIC GRADUALLY AWAKENS TO THE FACT.

The latest fad in operations has been the appendicitis fad; before that the fad for removal of tonsils (piles, etc.) held away. Hundreds of patients were frightened and bullied into having it operated upon and robbed of their last dollar. Now comes the news of a new fad in case of hemorrhoids or piles only, easily cured at home with a simple remedy costing but 50c a box.

"I procured one 50c box of Pyramid Pile Cure for my brother, who had suffered from piles for many months. He was induced to using Pyramid Pile Cure I had the worst kind of bleeding piles, and practically got no relief for over thirty-one years, and no one knows except those who have had the piles how much I have suffered.

"I am a poor man but have often said I would give a fortune, if I had it, for relief. I have found it, and now I have been cured for 50c., I should be very ungrateful if I did not thank you most heartily for the privilege to use my name and this letter, when I know there are so many who suffer as I did."—T. A. Wehmiller, 1109 Hildebrand Road, Washington, D.C.

The Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich., publish a little book on this disease and sure of piles, which they will be glad to send free to any applicant, and we advise all sufferers from this painful disease to write to them for it.

C.T.R. Gold Bonds.

London, March 30.—A circular was issued yesterday to the proprietors of the Grand Trunk, inviting applications for £101,000 first mortgage 4 per cent. fifty-year gold bonds of the Grand Trunk Western Railway, the bonds to be redeemable in 1950 and the first coupon payable in full on July 1 next. The Grand Trunk Railway unconditionally guarantees the interest on the bonds.

Bills Disallowed.

Ottawa, March 30.—The Dominion Government has disallowed two more bills passed by the British Columbia Legislature during the session of 1903. One is an act to regulate immigration into British Columbia, and the other to further amend the Coal Mines Regulation Act. Both bills are directed against the employment of Chinese and Chinese.

Martin For New Brunswick.

Fredericton, N. B., March 30.—The faculty of the University of New Brunswick, acting as a committee of selection for the Rhodes' trust, have chosen Dexter D. Martin, B. A., of St. John, as the Rhodes scholar from the Province of New Brunswick for the present year. This is the first selection yet made in Canada or the United States.

ON AND AFTER APRIL 5

Grand Trunk Pacific Contract Debate Will Be First Order.

Leader of the Opposition Secured Some Exceptions, Such As Right of Members to Ask Questions and Private Bill Legislation—No Agreement Concerning the Terms of Purchase of Common Stock of G.T.P.

Ottawa, March 30.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier moved in the House yesterday that on and after Tuesday, April 5, next, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway resolution should be the first order of the day till the question is disposed off.

Objection was raised to this proposal by the leader of the Opposition, who pointed out that members should not be deprived of the right to ask questions and private bills legislations should not be kept back. The debate on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway contract might be long and it might be short, Mr. Borden explained, and it would be unfair to give it indefinite precedence to the exclusion of all other business. Sir Wilfrid admitted the force of the objections and made the necessary amendment to this motion.

Mr. Borden called the attention of the Prime Minister to that portion of the correspondence between the Government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, in which reference was made to an agreement concerning the terms of the purchase of the common stock. He asked if this agreement could be produced. Sir Wilfrid replied that there were no agreements outside of the terms of the contract which had been presented to the House in full.

In Committee of Supply.

The House then went into committee of supply, taking up the public works estimates. A hot discussion arose on the appropriation of $60,000 for the Lansdowne drill hall and armory, but it was passed.

These votes were also passed after discussion: $10,000 for Stratford armory; $8,000 for Toronto Public buildings repairs; $20,000 for Toronto drill-hall; $20,000 for Toronto examining warehouse; $10,000 for Toronto postoffice; $18,000 for Toronto Junction postoffice, and $2,800 for a public building site in Longueuil, Que.

The House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

G.T.R. IS LAYING OFF MEN.

Master Mechanic of the Shops at Stratford Will Give 200 Notice to Quit April 1.

Stratford, March 30.—Robert Patterson, master mechanic of the G. T.R. shops, returned to the city yesterday morning, bringing the unwelcome news that as a result of the losses sustained by the company during the severe winter, the extension of the shops will not only be delayed, but there will be a large reduction of the present staff.

"How many men will be laid off" Mr. Patterson was asked.

"About two hundred," was the answer.

The present staff of workmen numbers about 900, 250 of whom were added during the past year. The reduction will, therefore, bring the staff down to its normal strength, about 650.

G.T.R. Fireman Burned.

Woodstock, March 30.—A distressing accident occurred in the yards of the Grand Trunk Railway here yesterday morning. John McMillan of Sarnia, the fireman on a freight train was engaged in shoveling coal into the firebox of his engine when the engineer, reaching the stopping point in the station yards, suddenly shut off the steam. This action created a strong current of air in the box, which rushed towards the open door, carrying with it an immense flame of fire. The fireman received the full force of the blaze on the head and chest. His clothing ignited and before the flame was gotten under control he was terribly burned about the face, head, shoulders and chest.

Hamilton Not Guilty.

Ottawa, March 30.—The jury in the case of W. S. Hamilton, restaurant-keeper, charged with the murder of John Fitzgerald, late of the Bank Pusilers, returned a verdict of not guilty at 5.45, after having been out since 1.30 o'clock.

ROSS WAS REINFORCED

Rescued From Defeat By the Arrival of Absentees.

All Night Debate Ended After Arrival of the 7.45 a.m. Train—Mr. Pyne's Amendment Carried By a Majority of Three—The Absentees and the Pairs—Tired and Red-Eyed Members Met Again at 3 p.m. Tuesday.

Toronto, March 30.—After an all night session, during which the Hoss Government fought for its very existence, the Government forces in the Legislature were, with the arrival of yesterday morning's trains, reinforced sufficiently to carry a vote with the usual Government majority of three.

The three Liberal absentees who, by their arrival, saved the situation were Messrs. Gerrie, Wentworth; Clark, of Northumberland; Guibord of Russell, and Valentine Stock.

They made their appearance in the Chamber at 7.45, and were welcomed by the beleaguered garrison with rounds of applause.

Mr. Mackay, of North Grey, had at that hour been speaking over three hours and practically ended his remarks in order that the vote might be taken without delay.

The Vote Was Taken.

The Whips were instructed to call in the absentees, and the division, at 8.09 a.m. the Whips re-entered the Chamber, made their bows to the Speaker, and the vote was immediately taken.

The amendment of Mr. Preston, of Brant, that an effort be made to insure a fair rate for coal to all railways wherever reasonable and practicable, was first voted upon. It was carried by a vote of 44 yeas to 41 nays. The motion of Dr. Nesbitt was declared lost on the same division.

The Liberal Whip announced the pairs as follows: Hon. F. R. Latchford and Dennis Murphy; Mr. Barber and Dr. Jamieson. The absentees, when the vote was taken, were six on each side, as follows:

Liberals—Tudhope, Caldwell, Barber, Cameron, Latchford and Lee.

Conservatives—Carscallen, Powell, Jamieson, Murphy, Lackner and Beck.

The time consumed by the various Government speakers was as follows: Davis, 2 hours; Pettypiece, 20 minutes; Hoss, one hour and 50 minutes; Gross, one hour and 15 minutes; Connor, three hours and 21 minutes; Thompson, 45 minutes; Mackay, two hours and 55 minutes.

TUESDAY'S SESSION SHORT.

Members Somewhat Fagged and With a Redness of the Eyes.

The members had a somewhat fagged appearance and a slight redness about the eyes when the Legislature resumed at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. About half the members got in an appearance after their all night sitting and ante-breakfast division. Hanna was conducting somewhat listlessly, and the House rose and sat and rose and sat in committee with uneventful monotony.

Mr. Gibson's weather insurance bill got its third reading. The bill to amend the general road companies act passed through committee, and Mr. Harcourt's bill on public schools had the same experience.

Mr. Gibson's bill amending the judication act passed committee, and a second reading was given Mr. Harcourt's bill extending the provisions of the legislation obtained by Toronto for the establishment of a board of Education to other places, with the exception of the cumulative voting clause, and an additional section whose fate Mr. Harcourt was not certain about, permitting the boards to take out libraries. The bill will come up in committee on Thursday.

County Councils' Bill.

Mr. Davis' bill amending the county council act would permit the county council to submit to the electors a bylaw declaring that thereafter the county council should be composed of the reeves of townships and villages and the mayors of towns not separated from the county, instead of representatives of the county council divisions.

Mr. Whitney opposed the bill. There was no one in favor of preserving the present system. There should be a uniform system of municipal Government all over the province, and the bill would not secure this.

The Premier defended the measure, but denied it was a Government one, and G. Tucker opposed it, adopting arguments similar to Mr. Whitney's. Mr. Tucker at the close of his address moved the six months' hoist for the bill.

The debate was carried on by R. A. Thompson, John Barr, and H. J. Rickard, who thought it would be better to have a uniform system, but did not see how that could be accomplished.

Another grant was voted for supplies, and the House adjourned.

Col. Otter in Consultation.

Toronto, March 30.—"Colonel Otter is conscious and is progressing favorably" was the bulletin posted on the door of the residence last night. Drs. Nattress and Peters held a consultation yesterday and reported that he was slightly improved.

THE BEST DOLLAR CORSET

We believe that the B. & C. One Dollar Corset is the best Dollar Corset sold in Canada. Our reasons for this statement are these: The B & C. Corsets are made of the best materials used in the manufacture of Corsets, they are made on exactly the same lines as the celebrated Kabo Corset, one of the best known Corsets made in the United States, and the B. & C. Corset is the only Corset made in Canada with the Soft Loop Eyelet, having no metal eyelet to rust and cut your whitewear. Now, while these are hundreds of women who know these statements are true, there are many others who don't and we want all Corset wearers to know from experience that what we say is correct, therefore we will sell this week only 100 prs. of $1.00 B. & C. Corsets for 85c a pair.

Now, if you wear a dollar Corset we ask you to try the B. & C. and after wearing this Corset for one week, if you are not convinced that it is the Best Dollar Corset you have ever worn, we will cheerfully REFUND YOUR MONEY and take back the Corset.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Plenty of soft water these days.

Who said all danger of a flood was past?

"The old Moles," said Ald. Green, "is giving us scriptural measures, 'pressed down and running over.'"

A boat race on Coleman St. would be an interesting feature this evening.

That's one good thing about granolithic sidewalks, the water doesn't float them away.

"Blast the old river," said nearly everybody, you met this morning.

Speak well of the upper bridge that carries you over.

How would we ever get along with one bridge, like the good people had 25 years ago?

If things would stay like this all the year round there would be no need of a public bath in Belleville.

The theorists, of course, are out in force these days. Some think that, if a channel were blasted out into the bay, the ice which at present chokes up the mouth of the river would go away, allowing the water to at once lower. Others point out that the piers, five in number, which lie directly in the channel, are the primary cause of all the trouble. These piers are only used during the summer, when the logs come down.

J. ARTHUR MARSH

A few days ago Mr. Whitney was asked his opinion of Ross' attitude upon the liquor question, upon which he intimated he would keep on humugging, then appeal to the people, and the Rev. Doctors and liquor men would join and support him. The ruse was a transparent one, judgment, but is it not true? In the past tavern-keepers and other liquor dealers have supported Ross, practically through fear of license inspectors and certain Rev. Doctors have fallen into line, because they are Grits, which is more important to them than prohibition. A holy combination, truly!

Dr. Beattie Nesbitt is making the Ontario Government sit up nights, and there is beginning to be a faint glimmer of belief that, if the Ontario Opposition contained more genuine fighting men like Dr Nesbitt, the finish of that arch-humbug, Ross, could, with the naked eye, be seen approaching.

Those pianos which are standing in a foot and a half of water these days ought to have a liquid tone.

The Russian stories of the war are most wonderful. They are compelled to retire, but have all the best of the scrap. Baron Munchausen must be fighting for the Czar and helping to write the despatches.

The G.T.P. debate will start on April 5. April 1 would have been the most appropriate day, so far as the Government is concerned.

There is a serious conflict of veracity between the Russian and Japanese stories of the war, and most people will believe the Japs. The Russian is a born stretcher.

TOXEDORO.

Mrs. Richard Wickett has returned home after having spent the winter with her daughter in Grand Rapids, Mich.

We are glad to learn that the children of Mr. and Mrs. Neil Vanalleo, who have been very sick with pneumonia for the past few days, are slowly improving.

Mr. Hugh Blair, of Kansas City, U.S., is spending a few days in our village with his parents. The father has been very sick all winter. The family have but little hope of his recovery.

Mr. Sam Westover, formerly a resident of our village, now of Toronto, has been renewing old acquaintances in our midst.

Mrs. Howard has been spending a few days at her brother's, Mr. Albert Parks, of Plainfield, whose wife has been very sick with pneumonia.

Bills Deahane has been on the sick list for a few days.

TO CURE A COLD IN ONE DAY

Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. Grove's signature is on each box. 25c.

And right there the question arises, why should Belleville merchants and citizens have to put up with discomfort, and expensive discomfort, too, in order to facilitate the work of bringing down logs which go to furnish work for the people of another municipality? If the logs were cut up in Belleville sawmills it would not be so bad, at present the corporation of this city does not benefit in any way from the logs which come down; why, then, should we be compelled to submit to endure the effects which plenty of people think is caused by the piers which, but for the logs, would not be necessary?

Verily, the Harbor Commissioners of Belleville get a certain amount of toll on all the logs brought down, but you don't see or hear of the Harbor Commissioners doing much worrying these days. With thousands of dollars in the bank they will cheerfully stand by and see the city's interests suffer, but never a cent will they spend to try and better things. No, the city must stand all the expense. True, the chairman of the Ancient and Honorable Board of Harbor Commissioners throws a fit occasionally and weeps over the city's "enormous tax rate," but he never thinks of attempting to relieve things for the County by assuming the expense of trying to get rid of the ice blockade, which job could very easily be conducted within the province of the Harbor Commissioners. The piers, of course, cannot be removed now, but they can and should, be next summer.

The Radical and Socialistic party in England are denouncing the Balfour Government for not disallowing a Bill passed by the Transvaal Government permitting Chinese and others entering South Africa to be employed in the mines, there being in that country a scarcity of labor. This is what is called Liberalism. One would think the Transvaal people knew best what they wants are as well and better than the bowling demagogues, who have little else to do than create discontent.

WHY shouldn't one Optician know more than another, than I

As a matter of fact he does.

DO we have the best instruments and plenty of experience?

Easy to answer, however, judge by our custom. People come to OUR Optician because he is recommended. His examination is thorough and accurate.

He has but the one profession and in that we claim he is as competent as any in Canada.

WELL AGAIN.

The many friends of John Blount will be pleased to learn that he has entirely recovered from his attack of rheumatism. Chamberlain's Pain Balm cured him after the best doctors in the town (Monon, Ind.) had failed to give relief. The pronounced cure from pain which this liniment affords is alone worth many times its cost. Sold by all druggists.

Man must gather, first or last, the harvest he has sown.

Like Other Evils, cramps and diarrhoea come suddenly. Promptly give a dose of Perry Davis' Painkiller and the pains will go immediately. A bottle at hand will save hours of suffering—be prepared.

JAPS DRIVE COSSACKS

Fierce Cavalry Fight Lasting An Hour and a Half.

Under a Hot Cross-Fire at Chengju the Little Fellows Held, Their Own But Were Unable to Occupy the Position Abandoned by the Russians—Sandino Beat a Hasty Retreat—Admiral Togo's Report.

St. Petersburg, March 30.—The Emperor has received a despatch from General Kuropatkin giving a lengthy report from General Mishtchenko, dated 10 p.m., March 28, which says that an important engagement took place near the town of Chengju, in which the Russians were defeated, retiring in perfect order. The Japanese suffered heavily, but the Russian losses are not stated. Cavalry and infantry both sides were engaged. The Russians occupied a commanding position. The Japanese fought gallant, ly, but, owing to their heavy losses were unable to occupy the position abandoned by the Russians.

Gen. Kuropatkin's Report.

General Kuropatkin's report to the Czar is as follows: I have the honor to respectfully communicate to Your Majesty the report of General Mischtchenko, dated March 28, at 10 p.m., which says: For three consecutive days our cavalry have attempted to draw the Japanese cavalry into action, but the Japanese, after contact was established, retired beyond Chengju, about 50 miles northwest of Fushun, having learned that four squadrons of the enemy were advancing from beyond Chengju, on March 27, six companies marched against the enemy and, on March 28 reached Chengju at 10.30 a.m. As soon as our scouts approached the town the enemy opened fire from behind the houses. Our troops immediately dismounted and occupied the heights, 500 yards distant. An engagement ensued.

Japs Held Their Ground.

In the town were Japanese infantry and a squadron of cavalry were lying in ambush. They were reinforced by three companies and attacked the Japanese with a cross fire. Notwithstanding our great outnumbering position, the Japanese gallantly held their ground, and it was only after a fierce fight of half an hour's duration that the Japanese ceased fire and sought shelter in the houses. The Japanese hoisted three cross flag at two points.

Soon afterwards three squadrons of the enemy were seen advancing along the Kasan road at full gallop toward us. Against them two of the squadrons succeeded in entrenching while the third fell back in disorder to the position occupied by our troops. A number of men and horses were killed.

Fired on Japs For an Hour.

For an hour afterward our companies poured a fire on the enemy at once in the town, preventing them from leaving the streets and houses. An hour and a half later I saw a mass ing of the engagement four companies of infantry on the Kasan road, hastening to attack. I gave the order to advance with the reserve force with a covering squadron, advanced in open order and formed in line behind the hill. The squadrons were placed in front and the reserve in the rear, with the object of deliberation of a parade.

The Japanese squadron which was thrown into disorder was evidently under the cover of the hill which we had just evacuated, and their infantry arrived too late.

Then Retreated.

The detachment protecting our rear guard arrived quietly at Kasan, road, at 10 p.m., and we began in order to give attention to our wounded. At 11 p.m. our forces reached Noosan. It is supposed that the Japanese had heavy losses in killed and wounded, but, unfortunately, three officers were severely wounded, one receiving a bullet wound in the chest and Vasclvitch in the right arm. Lieutenant was also seriously wounded in the thigh, but did not leave the field. Three Cossacks were killed and 20 wounded, including five seriously. General Mischtchenko speaks in high terms of excellent conduct and gallantry of officers and Cossacks, and especially praises the Cossack squadron of the Argunsk Regiment, commanded by Krashshatanoff.

Still Not Bottled.

Tokio, March 30.—Admiral Baron Yamamoto, Minister of Marine, and Vice-Admiral Togo's account of the attack upon Port Arthur on March 27 was thus in the Lower House of the Japanese Diet yesterday. The report was received with tremendous applause. Admiral Yamamoto referred feelingly to the death, March 31, of an officer, who was killed in the engagement, and then dwelt upon the great difficulty of bottling up Port Arthur effectively. He said that this project was still far from completely accomplished, the Minister of Marine declared that the revival of the martial spirit at Port Arthur since the arrival there of Vice-Admiral Makaroff was apparent, and he expressed the opinion that the Russians would emerge boldly from the harbor and attack the Japanese fleet. The House unanimously passed a vote of thanks, encouraging the Government, praising the army and navy, including the spare no cost in the prosecution of the war.

Story of Fight March 27.

Admiral Togo says: "About 3.30 a.m. of the 27th of March the bottling up squadron, composed of four ships, escorted by four torpedo boat destroyer flotilla and torpedo boat flotilla, reached outside of Port Arthur and without impeding the searchlights of the enemy steered straight toward the entrance of the harbor.

"At about two marine leagues from the entrance to the harbor the bottling-up squadron was discovered by the enemy. Torpedoes from the batteries and guardships showered hot fire upon the squadron, but in spite of a terrific fire the ships made their way into the inner roadstead, one after the other. The steamer Chiyo Maru anchored at a position about half a cable from the Golden Hill, blew up itself and sank. The Fukia Maru passed a little ahead of the Chiyo Maru by its left side, and, at the moment when she was lowering her anchor was struck by torpedo from the enemy's destroyers and sank in that position. Hachi Maru Maru anchored to the left of the Fukia Maru and blew up itself and sank. Yobeyama Maru, colliding with the stern of one of the enemy's torpedo boat destroyers, remained between the Chiyo Maru and Fukia Maru and anchored in the middle of the roadstead. At this moment the ship was shot by a torpedo from the enemy and consequently, by reason of that torpedo, she was carried toward the left shore and sank sideways. The result of the action being as above described, for some space left between Hach Hiko Maru and Yobeyama Maru, it is a matter of regret that the roadstead could not be completely closed up.

"The casualties were as follows: "Killed—Commander, Hirosaraka, one under-officer and two sailors.

"Seriously wounded — Sub-Lieut. Shimada.

"Slightly wounded—Lieut. Masaki, Engineer Kuroiwa and six sailors. The remainder were safely taken off by our torpedo boat destroyers flotilla and torpedo boat flotilla.

"Of the torpedo boat flotilla, the Oadaka and the Sazanami, while escorting the 'bottling-up squadron,' received shot one mile from the entrance of Port Arthur and engaged in a fight with one destroyer of the enemy, and inflicted damage upon her. The enemy's ship retreated raising an enormous column of steam as if her boiler was broken."

Cossacks Paralyzing.

London, March 30.—A correspondent of The Times at Newchwang, Manchuria, telegraphing on March 29, "The Russians to-day ordered the Americans flag on the correspondent's mess to be hauled down. The proclamation of martial law completely paralyzes the commercial interests of this port.

Britain Will Not Frighten.

London, March 30.—The Associated Press learns that the British Government has no intention of protesting against the Russian action in declaring martial law at Newchwang.

Illness Gets 8 Years.

Hamilton, March 30.—Eight years in Kingston Penitentiary was the dose William Hillis, a Beamsville, Guelph criminal, who broke out of the jail here in January, and who was recaptured at Flint, Mich., got yesterday afternoon from Chief Justice Meredith. The prisoner was charged with two offences, burglary, bringing stolen goods into Canada, and five years for jail breaking, the latter to run consecutively. In passing sentence, the judge told Hillis that he would like to see a permanent enemy to society and that he could have him shut away for thirty-three years. Herbert S. Yates, Hillis' pal, got only five years.

Liszt Playing Chopin.

As Liszt played, his demeanour changed in many ways. The hitherto steely dramatic content of the work—Chopin's Barcarolle—became more watery, his teeth were set, his lips and his mouth grew tense, his face got more rigid; his gray eyes burned with the composer's inspiration, and his body straightened out from a bending somewhat away from the keyboard. When he attained the climax—moment of terror, there was vehemence almost diabolical—there was a sudden sweep of his great hands, and the trumpets down crash fairly made one shiver. His mouth opened wider, and I think his breath came quickly, as one labouring under great excitement. Indeed, it seemed that the spell of the great Concert-poet, with whom, in his earlier years, he had been on such friendly terms, had completely mastered him; and then he drew himself again in his presence, and he would seem more grave than ever. Devoted to Chopin's inspired art, and show him that Liszt still knew and could portray his interpretations.—Edward G. Pratt, in the Booklovers Magazine.

The Song of the Blouse.

It was in the Christmas number of Punch that Thomas Hood's famous poem "The Song of the Shirt" appeared, and both before and since that time the "sweating" system, existing, one half of the world does not know what the other half lives, has been strikingly exemplified. In a recent issue of instances is in a paragraph which has been attracting the notice of the daily papers, to the effect that a board of guardians in the north of London were applied to for relief by a young man who is reported to have stated that he was employed by a City clothing firm for the magnificent sum of eighteenpence per week. Single, of course, had relatively to obtain a sewing machine, and always paid for her cotton and thread. The "sweating" system for a long day's work being a dozen blouses, for which she was paid, stated, it makes one think of the bitter lines in the poem just quoted.

Along with the barbarous York, Where women has never a soul to save, If this is Christian work.

Rejected With Scorn.

A certain social organization called the Young Women's Guild found itself in difficulties after the lapse of some twenty years. The "young" women were no longer "girls" named. Mr. William H. Crane, the actor, was once consulted by some charming girls in regard to the name of their prospective club. Their object, they wrote, was the building of character. Crane replied that to be suggested in the title and also the fact that they were unmarried. Crane replied that he had a name for the club, "the Building and Loan association."

The first Americans had a hard time keeping warm. Their trials are unnecessary if settled late many homes of to-day. For it is unnecessary to put up with the uneven heating of stoves, the dust and impure air of the hot air furnace, and the many other inconveniences of imperfect heating systems when you can get the and Oxford Radiators which form the perfect system of home heating.

The accompanying illustration shows where the water is intended to be the fire-pot at the rear and is thrown by a diaphragm from the rear towards the front of the firechamber and then passes over the surface of the horizontal sections. Thus the coldest water of this system is kept on outside of heater preventing the radiation of heat into the cellar.

CRIMINAL VAGARIES OF A PEER.

Just Recently Out of Jail in Pretoria, South Africa.

Lord Haldon, who succeeded to the peerage at his eponymous father, "Piggy" Haldon, in December last, has been until now unable to take up his seat in the House of Lords owing to his having been until a month ago in jail at Pretoria, charged, in company with two disreputable compatriots, with conspiring to defraud a man of the name of Cowie by offering him a parcel of glass crystals, alleging them to be diamonds. The case came up for trial the other day in the police court, accepted him on the ground that he had permitted it to be made the tool of a gang of swindlers, and that he was not primarily responsible for the attempted fraud, which, it may be added, did not succeed.

Lord Haldon at the time of his arrest was acting as checker and conductor on the railway at Pretoria, a position which, though humble, he had been exceedingly glad to get, as he had been literally starving when he received it, having been in a state of complete destitution at Johannesburg and at Pretoria after being mustered out of the Imperial Yeomanry at the close of the war.

This is not the first time that Lord Haldon has been in trouble, for as I mentioned at the time of his accession, he placed himself in an unenviable position some years ago by raising money in London on a note which he had endorsed with the signature of his mother, who is wealthy in her own right. He wrote to her a letter informing her that, compelled by dire necessity, he had been obliged to put her name there to. Although the note was for a comparatively small amount, which she could easily have paid, yet she preferred to prosecute her son's letter in court and to make it public rather than take up the bill. If no prosecution followed, it was because there was a strong presumption in favor of the belief that the swindler who had discounted the note had been well aware at the time of the fact that the Honorable Lady Haldon's signature was fictitious, and that he only let Lord Haldon have the money with the view to be subsequently able to blackmail his family.

Mad Versus Wombat.

The old question of the relative status of the sexes is discussed by William K. Hill in The Westminster Review. Mr. Hill's article seems to be the question, "Do the achievements of woman now or ever approach those of man?" In answering the question he considers the leading characteristics of reason, imagination, creative initiative, emotion, courage, moral stability, judgment, strength and endurance.

Reason is equally the characteristic of both sexes, but its derivatives, reasonableness and reasonableness, is said to be more strongly marked in man than in woman. Man usually thinks when he must. Woman is inclined to act often before she thinks. In the matter of imagination, as manifested objectively in its works, the only form in which it can be estimate it, woman cannot at present set anything against such masterly achievements as the Iliad, the Divina Commedia, Hamlet, Faust, the Venus of Milo, the Parthenon, or the Choral Symphony, to cite only a few leading examples. The chief quality of lied quality of initiative the weakness of woman is largely assertive in man, and it is difficult to cite any considerable number of women who have initiated any work with positive touch great works or great reconstructions.

The superiority of woman is conceded in the qualities of courage, moral stability, mental endurance and truth, but the alleged supremacy of the in physical strength and endurance is denied.

Appropriate.

One day while his apparatus for deep sea sounding in search of steel piano forte wire was being constructed Lord Kelvin entered Mr. White's shop in Glasgow along with the great Dr. Joule, celebrated for his determination of the mechanical equivalent of heat. Joule's attention was called to a bundle of the pianoforte wire lying in the shop, and Thomson explained that he intended it for "sounding purposes." "What note?" innocently inquired Joule and was promptly answered, "The deep C."

THE PRINCE'S WRAITH

An Apparition Whose Coming Was Foretold.

King Gustavus IV. of Sweden, who reigned in the early part of the last century, was taking supper one evening with the Prince of Baden and others, among them a famous Swedish seer, Swedenly, halfway through the supper, the king let drop his knife and fork and, turning to Lowenklein, said, "Don't you see?" at the same time gazing across the table. No one understood what he meant, and so he dropped the subject. Later, after the Prince of Baden had departed, the king said to his companions: "When I asked you whether you saw anything, I had myself distinctly seen the double, or wraith, of the Prince of Baden enter the room and, passing round the table, place itself behind that prince's chair, where it quickly faded away and vanished. You know," added the king, "the terrible import attached in our country to such apparitions, and, having given you the key to what you may well have thought unaccountable conduct on our part, I now request you to keep strictly to yourselves what I have imparted to you." The following evening and at the same hour, according to Count Lowenlejehn, while the court was seated as usual at supper, the letter of home's rods was heard in the palace quadrangle, and a courier was speedily announced, who brought tidings of a disastrous carriage accident in which the Prince of Baden had lost his life.

CALIFORNIA'S CHARM.

How the Visitor From the East Finally Captitulates.

You will not find everything in southern California. You will miss the wide stretches of green in the open places, far removed from the dusty cities, the shade trees, the clear streams of water, the blue lake nestled in among the pine clad mountains. You will miss that splendid mixture of the changing the seasons, when your whole nature comes into closer touch with the great mother heart of nature than at any other time in all the year.

You miss much, but when you have been here a year, when month after month of rare and beautiful weather has come to you, when all the sea wooes you and the flowers charm you and the brown mountains beckon you and the soft air caresses you, after a year has passed you find there are some compensations for the many things you have left behind you. You come to realize that nature has done much when she has given you a delightful climate, and that the drinker could not rest them upon the board until their wives emptied.

But even after that was accomplished the hardy drinker was expected still to have breath to orate, and the whistling jugs, a comparatively modern invention, were intended to indicate this. Many of them were made by German silversmiths—though they have also been in use for earthenware during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and their form was such that when the contents of the jug had been imbibed a whistle was uncovered through which the drinker might blow if he were able.

The most advanced type of all had a little windmill besides the whistle, which worked a dial showing the power of the blow. Sometimes an ordinary jug was placed on the table and won by the last tosspot who could get a sound from it.—Pearson's.

Has Many Climates.

Perhaps no portion of the world of the same area is better favored than the New South Wales, with its varied climates and soils, for the production of fruits, vegetables and flowers. It is really surprising how luxuriantly a garden can be grown to perfection, and at a minimum expenditure of labor. Exotics from cold, temperate and even tropical countries thrive equally well within the limits of this favored country's small area; and still more remarkable is the fact that so many of these plants from different climates will grow side by side in many favored localities. With all the advantages it seems strange that comparatively little attention should be devoted to the raising of vegetables for home consumption, the cultivation of flowering and ornamental plants and the adornment of the homes of the districts.

Beggars in China.

The beggars of China have a regular system of blackmail. Every town has a band of them, with a "king." The "king" goes about among the merchants and others collecting "tribute, in return for which he gives a signed document insuring them against all annoyance for a certain length of time.

AN EARLY AIRSHIP.

It Was Built in England in 1835, but Was a Failure.

We are told by Peter Farley, who wrote as an eyewitness, that in August, 1835, the Eagle was officially advertised to sail from London with government dispatches and passengers for Paris and to establish direct communication between the capitals of Europe. This early type of airship was 160 feet long, 50 feet high and 40 feet wide, and she lay in the dockyard of the aeronautical society in Victoria road, near Kensington gardens, then quite a rural spot.

Built to lift an abundant supply of gas, she was covered with oiled lawn and varnish. Some seventy-five feet long and seven feet thick, with a cable secured by ropes to the balloon. An immense rudder and wings or fins on each side for purposes of propulsion completed her fittings. The deck was guarded by netting.

After all this preparation and advertisement the Eagle never got beyond Victoria road, for Count Lennox and his assistants failed to provide the necessary motive power.

The Barber's Pole.

The origin of the barber's pole, itself almost now a thing of the past, originated in the days of barber surgeons, when bloodletting was considered a panacea for most of the ills that flesh is heir to. A long pole was used for the patient to grasp during the operation, and a fillet or bandage for tying up the arm. When the pole was not in use, the tape was tied to it and twisted around it, and then it was hung up as a sign. At length, instead of hanging out the actual pole used in operations, a painted one with stripes round it in imitation of the genuine article and its bandages was placed over the shop.

Wedding rings are curious relics of a very ancient marriage custom. All the northern nations set great stress upon a man's power to take off his finger without getting down the glass or beaker, and in Saxon graves old ale buckets are often found made without foot or stand, so that the drinker could not rest them upon the board until they were emptied.

But even after that was accomplished the hardy drinker was expected still to have breath to orate, and the whistling jugs, a comparatively modern invention, were intended to indicate this. Many of them were made by German silversmiths—though they have also been in use for earthenware during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and their form was such that when the contents of the jug had been imbibed a whistle was uncovered through which the drinker might blow if he were able.

Physical Culture.

It is a mistake to think that excessive physical exercise is beneficial. The opposite is the fact. As some one has said, "Man is not constructed to be a running and leaping animal, like a deer or cat." To emphasize bodily development above the mental development is a step toward resumption of the life of the savage and lower animals. Physical culture is a desirable thing; but, as in everything else, the extremes are to be avoided. A person may have too little bodily exercise and may also have far too much or violent exercise. One who is walking a considerable part of the day would need but little else as exercise except, perhaps, calisthenics for the arms, back and chest and on retiring or rising. And the same advice is applicable to a woman who does her own housework. But one confined over a desk or typewriter should make a conscientious habit of walking, bicycling and calisthenics every day for an hour or thereabouts.

Wanted Breed; Had Courage.

One day, riding along the road, General Gordon came upon a regimental prayer meeting, which was very impressive. The men were kneeling or standing with bowed heads about the chaplain, who was praying in a voice of wonderful compass.

The general checked his horse and removed his hat and waited for the end of the prayer. The chaplain asked the Lord to give the men of Lee's army supreme courage to meet the great crisis that had come upon them, fortitude to bear new privations and troubles, strength to fight against the pursuing enemy. Just then a tall private rose from his knees and shouted to the chaplain: "Pray for bread, chaplain; pray for bread! We have courage to spare, but to fight we must have something to eat. Pray for bread!" This broke up the prayer meeting.

The Coiner's Curl.

Many east London barbers, who have been journeymen in many west end establishments, declare that young cosmetomongers and barmen, with the peculiar rolling curl that protrudes from under the cap or bowler, are far more particular about their hair than the sons of the aristocracy in general. This same curl, standing forth from a surface of hair that seems to have been flattened, is not achieved without much trouble. Scores of these young dandies of the east subscribe to a "toilet club" and have weekly attention given to their distinguishing curl in a manner that might be expected of a patrician beau.

His Unreasonableness.

She—Oh, I would have given anything to have had it! He—Well, why didn't you buy it? She—The idea! They wanted half a dollar for it!

TIMELY TOPICS.

This is the way they keep warm in Toronto. The News says: "The people in a certain part of the city dug up during the winter three hundred yards of sidewalk and burned the planks for fuel." A good argument in favor of granolithic walks.

The Metropolitan line of railway commenced running in the neighborhood of Toronto, after a snow blockade of 25 days.

A report is current in Ottawa that the Ubiel Justiceship of the new division of the High Court of Ontario is to be offered to Sir William Mulock. If he accepts, it will indeed be the crowning act of his life. He has already in many cases belied his professions of optimism, while in Opposition. This would cap the climax. We do not believe he would accept it. His ambition is to succeed Laurier.

A consolidation of the Canadian Independent Oil Companies is threatened. Is this amalgamation for the purpose of fighting the oil monopoly of the United States, or for the purpose of raising the price of oil?

* * *

A good deal used to be heard from first journals when the Conservatives were in power about provincial autonomy. Dominion usurpation and interference with provincial rights. Now provincial enactments are being constantly disallowed by the Laurier Government, and not a whisper is heard from them. The Globe announces in its issue of the 27th inst the disallowance of no less than three acts which were passed by the British Columbian Government last year, one "imposing restrictions upon the Japanese residents in the province. Another act prevented the employment of Japanese upon construction in the vicinity of any shaft of public work, and another in coal mines." Had disallowance of such acts been the work of a Conservative Government, what a Grit growl we should have heard.

"Liar" a Flattering Term.

At a little gathering of officials the other day the talk turned on the recent diplomatic duel between the Russians and Japanese, and there was quite a difference of opinion as to whether the Muscovite or the little man from the Far East is the most expert diplomatist. "But, my dear man," said one of the disputants, "who had a touching faith in the veracity of the Jap, these Russians are such liars!" "Tut, tut," replied the other, "you should have known their grandfather."

The reply reminds me of the story Sir Horace Rumbold tells about General Ignatieff. The general was a natural born fibber. As Sir Horace puts it, "inaccuracy oozed out of him," and in Constantinople he was known as "the father of lies." On this occasion he quite surpassed himself. "Hang it all, Ignatieff," said his colleague, giving him a dig in the ribs, "I believe you're the most unmitigated liar that ever was born!" "Your flatter me, my dear fellow," replied the general, with a laugh; "but, then, you've never met my father."—London Tatler.

One of Queen Elizabeth's Fads.

England's virgin queen certainly had more than a spice of feminine vanity, and it is on record that one of her little fads was to have every hair on her head kept the same length. It was the duty of her barber to see to this, and for this purpose she received a weekly visit from a worthy man whose trade adorned a comic looking shop in Lombard street. The queen's barber was of course much patronized by the nobility and by all who frequented the court, and no doubt he added to his income by selling the precious snippings of Her Majesty's hair, for it was his privilege to keep them, and they were of course much in request by her many admirers.

Eating at Night.

Every living bird and beast strives its utmost to cram itself with food before retiring for the night, and this food is digested as the night progresses. The evening feed is the feed of the day with the brute creation, and yet doctors tell us to refrain from eating heartily at night, and even advise us to retire to rest with a more or less empty stomach. Are we following nature when following this advice?—Country Gentleman.

FOR INFLAMMATION OF THE EYES—Among the many good qualities which Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Vegetable Pills possess, besides regulating the digestive organs, is that efficacy in removing inflammation of the eyes. It has called forth many letters of recommendation from those who were afflicted with this complaint, and found a cure in the pills. They affect the nerves centres and the blood in a surprising, yet safe way, and the result is almost immediately seen.

Mary Ann Hewitt tells us that what has to be hailed out.

If you have a cough or cold do not neglect it; many without a trace of that bloodthirsty disease have died on the consumptive's grave by neglecting what was only a slight cold. Had they used Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil Syrup before it was too late, their lives would have been spared.

Mr. A. W. Levy, Mitchell, writes: "I take Pleasure in recommending Parmelee's Pills to those who are troubled with Dyspepsia. I suffered severely from this complaint for about six years ago I caught a severe cold which settled on my lungs, but for three months I had a cough and had a physician attending me, but gradually grew worse until I was on the verge of Consumption, and had given up hopes of living. At last I was induced to try Hickle's Balsam of Horehound and Tar, before I had taken one bottle I found myself greatly relieved, and by the time I had finished the second bottle I was entirely cured. I always recommend it for severe colds and consumption."

A long carriage makes a heavy load.

No one knows better than those who have used Dodd's Kidney Pills, just what relief they have given.

For dyspepsia, dizziness, pain in the side, backache, biliousness, disordered stomach.

On occasion knowing what one wants is as difficult as getting it. "Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is a speedy cure for dysentery, cholera, diarrhoea, cholera morbus, sea sickness and complaints incidental to children teething. It gives immediate relief in all cases and counteracts the effects of indiscretion in eating until the fruit, vegetables, &c., are ripe, with wonderful rapidity and never fails to counteract the effects of the diseased fear cholera if they have a box of this medicine convenient.

No prayer ever failed to be heard because it was too short.

AT DEATH'S DOOR—DYSPEPSIA CONQUERED—A GREAT MEDICAL THUMBNAIL SKETCH—"Dyspepsia is adviser and others tald me I cur, I not possible I can." I consequently to use Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspepsia Cure, and it was one of the worst of its kind. I have got a fine appetite, sleep well and my weight decreased from 218 to 119 lbs. All the food I took for thirteen months was digested by Dr. Thomas' Vegetable Discovery consisted of Pills. I am now entirely cured and have regained my usual weight, can eat anything with a relish and feel like a new man. I have sold over thirty-five bottles of Discovery since it cured me, as I am well-known to people in my locality. I know best how I was, and thought I could not possibly be cured. They are eager to buy this valuable medicine. I certainly saved my life as I never was expected to recover, and was pronounced safe by. I am not exaggerating one word in this letter, and will be able to contribute this testimonial and award if any one desires. Thousands are winning others of its merit as a certain cure for Dyspepsia.

Yours truly, JEAN VALCOURT, Wotton, P.Q. Genera, Merchant. Never be afraid of going into a store you can't do much.

Do not consider keeping your sick headache when you can so easily obtain Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, for they will effect a prompt and permanent cure. Their action is mild and natural.

The average, working man requires 48 hours of human labor.

The Dodd's Kidney Pills Revived. Constant application to business is a tax upon the nervous system. If this be not relaxation, lassitude and depression will follow. Relaxation is to change some from stomachic troubles. The use of these remedies brings on nervous irregularities, and the Montreal Witness to assimilate food properly. In this condition Dodd's Kidney Pills and Pills will be found a recuperative of rare curative power, and will prove a healthful action, dispelling depression, and invigorating the whole system.

If you have a good business, it is always better to advertise where you are.

HAD LA GRIPPE—Mr. A. Nickerson, farmer, Dutton, writes "Last winter I had La Grippe and it left me with a severe pain in the small of my back all the time. I was not able to catch me whenever I tried to climb a tree. Several of my friends told me months, when I bought a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil and used it both internally and externally, morning and evening, for three days, at the end of which time I was able to work completely cured."

When one stops hooping and he or son goes on crutch.

Public speaking is one good effect on the system really makes them of perfect health. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil proper remedies had been used at Hebden's post office. I purchased a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Pyscery Cordial for my children, and they fails to effect a cure. Those who have used it say it acts promptly and thoroughly, subdues the pain and cures.

The biggest brave does not always make the best shot.

Use the best, cheapest, and effectual worm killer, Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. Sold by druggists.

HER FRANK OPINION

By A. S. RICHARDSON

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

Suzanne's voice rose decisively above the exclamations of dismay.

"It might have been worse, and Miss Cranford can stand it."

She ran into the hall and leaned over the balustrade. A young man, good to look upon, and evidently fresh from riding, was watching the florists at work.

"Frank!"

"Cousin mine?"

"Will you please go"—

"I will," responded the young man, running up the stairs—"anywhere you wish."

"Bless you, dear," said Suzanne, dragging Frank into her mother's room, where six pairs of feminine eyes rested despairingly on a hideous figure cornered tear in Suzanne's wedding veil. "That must be mended, and only one woman in town can do such work"—Elsa Cranford. Now, if"—

"Where does she live?" Frank picked up the shreds of lace, reflored by time, and looked at it critically. "I suppose that if you were not marrying a poet you would wear a nice, clean, new veil that would not tear when you looked at it. This is rotten."

Mrs. Lynde was shocked.

"But this is an heirloom. It isn't every girl who can be married in the veil worn by her mother and her grandmother before her."

Frank hit his lips. He wanted to say that the average girl who married a title through the nose or less flagrant mediation of a social matrimonial broker did not care to discuss her grandmother. When he had heard in Paris of his cousin's engagement to this heir of an impoverished English name, he had discovered that, even after two years' wandering on the face of the globe, Americanism was strong within him, and he hated to see the bulk of the Lynde fortune go to build up a decrepit English estate.

"You will find Miss Cranford at 213 Elmhurst avenue. Tell her she must fix it at once and wait for it. We cannot take chances at this hour. Pay her anything—everything—but have it done. Tell Forbesno the brougham must meet the 11:20 train, mind he?—

"Don't apologize, Suzanne," laughed her cousin, taking the package. "If you had a whole racing stable at your command today every horse would be out. I'll use my own mount and enjoy the ride."

And so he rode away past the stajdy manors of industrial magnates, past the less pretentious homes of real suburbanites, into a sleepy, country-like lane lined on either side with small cottages and gay gardens. At 213 he tied his horse to the cap of a near house post, and stalked up the path. A slender, graceful young woman was training a climbing rose on the shady side of the porch. She drew off her garden gloves as Frank stated his errand and stood in the warm June sunlight studying the torn veil critically.

"It will take at least an hour," she said, turning toward the house. "Will you wait?"

"Yes, thank you."

He sat down on the step and removed his hat. Above him on one side of the table, strewn with magazines, papers and sewing materials, sat an elderly woman with carefully dressed white hair. On the opposite side of the table was a vacant chair. Miss Cranford paused before it, looked at the unconscious Mr. Lynde with a slight frown and sat down. After all there was not such a wide breach between the status of a footman in a millionaire's household and a professional member. Besides, under existing conditions at the Lynde residence a tired footman might be forgiven a slight breach of discipline.

She clipped her thread thoughtfully. Dame Fortune moved in a mysterious way. There was young Harry Lynde, brother of the bride, insignificant and stupid, and here was a footman molded on the lines of a Gibson model, with the easy grace which no end of dancing lessons could impart to the unfortunate Harry.

The little garden was very quiet, and Elsa's needle flew in and out of the long waves. Finally Mrs. Cranford's curiosity triumphed over her dignity.

"I suppose everything is ready for the wedding?"

"Everything, I believe." He frowned slightly.

"It is a great occasion, with Lord This and Lady That coming all the way from England, but every time I think of that poor child"—

"To stop that nonsense, mother," exclaimed Elsa sharply. "She does not deserve pity, no matter what comes to her in the future. She marries Lord Harwood with her eyes open. She knows the man's past, she knows his need of her money, and she loves him."

The "footman" crushed his riding hat in his hands.

"My dear, you are so positive."

"Well, mother, dear, we ought to know. She pours her confidences into no other news for weeks. And they will be full of it again when she sues for a divorce. It is all so very silly. Everything that man can give her she could buy with her own money. The one thing he cannot give her money cannot buy, yet that one thing I or any girl without a dollar of her name may have some day—the honest love of an honest man. I may be old fashioned, but I believe that with some women love still counts, and when it does it is everything—far, far above title, coronets, castles and all the rest in the queer throne room."

Silence once more fell upon the trio. The shining needle fairly flew. The girl's bright eyes were fixed on her work. The man, gazing through a vista of prim gardens and close cropped trees, was murmuring under his breath, "The honest love of an honest man."

Would she understand the difference between that little affair of three months in old Japan and an "honest love?" Then there had been Madeline! But that could not count! Why, he had even forgotten her last name!

Miss Cranford was folding the precious veil.

"Perhaps"—he would like to see the ceremony at the church?"

"Could you"—

"Yes—I know—er—where the cards are kept."

Mrs. Cranford protested. Her daughter smiled scornfully.

"They would not mind, mother. It's all a part of the show."

A tinge of color spread over the "footman's" face. He paused on the lower step.

"I'll send—I mean I'll bring the card over this afternoon."

* * * * * *

Elsa Cranford in a simple dimity frock and a flower trimmed hat was caught in the crush of scintillating robes. An usher with a gardenia in his coat was just offering his arm to a stately dowager when he dropped something. He bent over, and the dowager's train passed on to another usher. When the first man straightened up, he extended his arm to Elsa. She gave him her hand, and all the color faded from her face; then, with head proudly uplifted, she started down the aisle at his side.

"Please don't look like that," he whispered. "I was beastly coddish of me, but I do look a bit like Harry's Englishman, and—and—well, I'm glad I heard your frank opinion on such things anyhow."

Suzanne at the pew door. She slipped in without a word, but as she raised her eyes she caught the pleading look in his, and the rose color came back to her cheeks.

* * * * * *

The wedding party and guests had left the church. Reporters with notebooks and sightseers crowded around the chancel. Elsa walked slowly toward the side entrance. The vestry room door opened suddenly, and Frank Lynde stepped out. He bent his head gravely, and there was no laughter-in his eyes now.

"Will you tell your mother, please, that directly this infernal excitement is over I am coming to call personally on her? For I understand that she and I have some good friends in the old days—and—and I want you to think of me, an honest man."

But it was six months before she would admit the fact, and then she simply reiterated her statement that she did not envy the Countess of Harwood.

Strength From Proper Breathing.

The Japanese, although men of very small stature, are among the strongest in the world. Any boy of fourteen or fifteen years will faithfully practice their system of producing strength will find himself at the end of a few months able to cope in feats of power with the average man of twenty-five, and all this without the dangerous practice of lifting very heavy weights.

It should always be remembered that rest must be taken after each exercise. While resting try deep breathing. Stand erect, though not in a strained position, and at each breath draw the abdomen in and throw the chest out. As the breath is exhaled let the chest fall inward again and the abdomen extend. From twenty minutes to half an hour is a long enough time to devote to jiujitsu, and this includes the time spent in breathing during rests, for deep, correct breathing is in itself one of the best exercises possible. In inhaling draw the breath through either the nostrils or the mouth, as preferred. In exhaling always let the breath escape through the mouth.—St. Nicholas.

Two Views of a Café.

When a woman has a bad cold she is usually told by her masculine relatives that it is a visitation sent upon her by muse she is imprudent and deserves nothing better. When a man has a cold he regards it as a gracious dispensation of Providence visited upon him, because "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth."—Baltimore News.

Pepys, Pepsins or What?

A correspondent (an American, we presume) writes to ask how he shall pronounce the name of the excellent diarist we occasionally quote. "Do you," he asks, "call Pepys 'Pepsin' or 'Peeps' or 'Chumley' or what?" Even among contemporary London talkers there is disagreement, but the question should be settled by one Mr. James Carcasse, whom Pepys kindly took in his boat to view the river fleet and who returned the compliment by a somewhat virulent set of verses in his voice "Londra Infernalis."

Get thee behind me, then, dumb devil, begone,
The Lord hath Ephthatha said to my tongue,
Him I must praise who open'd hath my ear
Else
Sent me from navy to the ark by Pepys.

The rhythm is dreadful, but the rhyme is correct, and the man who rowed in the sanie boat with the diarist called him "Tippa." — London Chronicle.

[An accepted American dictionary authority also gives the word the correct pronunciation of his name.—Ed.]

They Hunger For Praise.

Actress—Isn't it a shame that Mr. Certain Toiler, "yet is seems to be against the rule of many business houses. Perhaps they fear you'll demand a raise if they compliment your work. Why, even a man friend of mine, who is engaged in window decoration, says he gets $25 a week, and he is not satisfactory. He dreams of it all night when it doesn't give him a nightmare, and he works it all day. He longs to be told when it is effective, but he has to be content with the fact that, as he puts it, he'd be fired if it were not satisfactory. As for me, I design these dull dresses and evolve dainty things and also arrange them for display. I long for praise when I feel that my labors have been crowned with success. But, alas, my firm also pursues the claim policy—perhaps it is the best policy—in spite of the fact that I'd work the skin off my fingers to try to exceed my best work if only that were praised."

Sensitive Horses.

The horse does not like a nervous, fidgety, fussy, irritable man. He is too nervous and irritable himself. "Why is it," one teamster was heard to ask another, "that Fisk's horses are always gaunt? Phin feeds them well." "Yes," was the reply, "but he's like a wasp around a horse." A well known owner of race horses, not at all a sentimental person, recently made an order forbidding his employees to talk in loud tones or to swear in the stable. "I have never been a good mannered horse," he says, "that was being sworn at all the time. It hurts the horse and is a senseless way, too, to keep my word good to discharge any man in my employ if I catch him swearing within the hearing of any horse in this stable."—Country Life in America.

Wedded in a Bunch.

According to an old Breton custom, all the marriages of the year take place on one day. After the legal wedding has been performed the couples take their stand in a row behind the high altar of the church, and behind them sit their fathers and mothers, and so do their cousins and their uncles and their aunts, all arrayed in their brightest colored raiment and the whitest and stiffest of coiffes. The scene in the church is picturesque beyond description. They go through the ceremony in a bunch. The moral support is there to give to the timidest bridegroom!

Three In Chinese.

Religious superstition asserts itself in Chinese architecture at the universal sacredness of the numerals three and nine is shown in the arrangement of temple doors. There is a regular gateway to each of the halls of the imperial palaces, and all its entire arrangements bolism points either to three or its multiples.

Disappointment.

"I hope," said the dread bridegroom anxiously, as he boarded the Cunarder with his American bride, "that your diamonds are safe in your trunk."

"My dear," replied she, "I am not the first of our family to marry into the British nobility. My aunt married a duke. My diamonds are safe at home in papa's vault."

The Danger In It.

"See here," cried the victim, after the accident. "I thought you said it was perfectly safe to go up in that old elevator?"

"So it was safe to go up," replied the elevator man. "The dangerous part of it was the coming down."

In Training.

Mr. Newly Rich—You must learn how to behave, Maria, if we are going to enter society. Mrs. Newly Riche—How will, my dear. The new set of servants I have engaged have been in the best families.

Be Pleasant.

Let us take time to be pleasant. The small courtesies, which we often omit because they are small, will some day look larger than the great deeds which we have coveted or the fame for which we have struggled.

Natural History.

Eva—Mother says I'm descended from Mary, queen of Scots. Tom (her brother)—So am I then. Eva—Don't be silly, Tom. You can't be—you're a boy!—Punch.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

THE GOVERNOR'S SON.

A good-sized audience witnessed the above play last night, and apparently found it enjoyable. Things dragged somewhat at first, but after the company warmed up to their work the audience was treated to a series of such provoking complications and some of the situations were certainly very humorous. The music was good and the dialogue very interesting and at times, to say the least, somewhat spicy, if not risque. John McVeigh, as the little role of the Governor's Son, was very good and made a pretty boy. His song "If I Were Only Mr. Morgan," in the leading parts were well taken, but probably the most laughter was caused by the actions and sayings of Harry H. Hewitt, a runaway Scotland disguised as a Dutch Count. Adolph Schultz, Chris Grace Hazard, who took the juvenile part of Bertie Brown, a little bit of a girl, was appreciated by the audience, as was also her song, "Oh, Mrs. Moon." Hilda Hawthorne, as Mrs. Franklin-Pane-Berrymore, made a very captivating widow and sang "The Widow's Will" in a very pleasing manner. The costumes and stage setting were very good.

THE EARL OF PAWTUCKET.

This comedy, which comes to the opera house on Saturday night, deals with the adventures of the Earl of Cardington, who followed an American girl from London to New York to win her for his wife. He assumes the name of a former New Yorker with the latter's consent. The latter had fled to Europe in order to avoid paying alimony to his divorced wife, who turned out to be the object of the Earl's journey. This led to interesting complications when he reached New York, and his stay at the Waldorf Astoria was made interesting by the relations of the real Montgomery Putnam and their legal advisers. There he met the object of his search, who was introduced to him as Miss Harriet Fordyce, her maiden name, and who, of course, knew he was masquerading under the assumed name. He is compelled to pay a portion of the alimony and fall under suspicion for the murder of the real Lord Cardington. With such a basis the plot is pearly and cleverly worked out. Incidentally there is some seathing, although inspirational, satire on the American propensity for stage.

EASTER NECKWEAR.

Quick & Robertson make a wide display of new Neckwear for Easter. Shades and color combinations are pleasingly different. Exclusive, in fact, but you pay nothing extra for that. The latest shapes 25c and 50c.

THE WORST FLOOD FOR MANY YEARS.

Another Shove at 2 O'clock This Morning Caused Water to Rise Again.

Some People on Coleman Street Had 18 Inches of Water on Their Floors.

About 2 o'clock this morning the immense body of ice in the river took another shove and the consequence was that to-day we were experiencing a serious flood. Owing to the mouth of the river being blocked with ice to a depth of several feet the immense volume of water behind it could not percolate through, and it was forced over the river bank on the west side, a short distance below the Bridge street bridge.

The residents along the lower portion of Coleman street were suddenly awakened from their slumbers by water rushing through their houses. In a few minutes, at the junction of Coleman and Bridge streets, the water was rushing over the roadway like a miniature river. Up Bridge down over what is known as the flats, and in a short time Bridge, Block, Mary, King and Colborne streets were flooded from a depth of one to two feet.

Even at that early hour in the morning many inquisitive citizens left home, fearing that the worst was yet to come. In many houses the water was so deep as to render their stoves useless. The loss in many households will be considerable in regard to damage done to the effects. Many families have moved upstairs, the ground floor were completely in possession of the flood waters.

As soon as practicable the civic authorities were upon the scene and every effort put forth to relieve the distress where it was most needed. Pumps were placed in the cellars and the water drawn off. Some heavy charges of dynamite were used and the wisdom of this was apparent shortly after the noon hour, when the ice gorge was broken up and the water was carried out for some distance. The water immediately fell, not some inches, but some feet, and surprisingly short time the alleys and streets which were previously flooded were drained. Policemen were able to cross, dry shod, some places only a few minutes previous there were two or three feet of water. After the shove had stopped the water again rose and overflowed to overflow the banks. Whilst the ice was in very large quantities it was noticed to be piled up along the river edge, but it was not in serious nature.

The general impression now is that the trouble is over for another year at least.

During the morning the water rose to such a height as to cause some manufacturing concerns to shut down, but this at noon they were able to start operations.

Chevalier's action in providing a convey ance to carry pedestrians over Brodie street bridge was much appreciated, as the service, was much appreciated, and was certainly a great convenience.

During the day tea and a considerable quantity of water was carried over the bridge by members of Front street, near No. 1 fire hall.

On a number of streets the sidewalks were floating about this morning, seriously in repairing the same will be considerable.

This afternoon is considerable quantity of water down the river from the vicinity of Belleville, but it was much broken up and did not cause any further trouble.

Corbyville Ice Arrives—Another Flood.

Shortly after 3 o'clock this afternoon another large body of ice came down from the vicinity of Corbyville, filling the river up to Cooper's mill. This caused cellars and alleys on the west side of Front street to again become flooded.

STOLE AN OVERCOAT.

YOUNG MEN MADE POOR RETURN FOR LINDSAY Y.M.C.A.'S HOSPITALITY.

On Saturday night two young men, who gave their names as S. Brownlee and S. Bellrose, were provided with lodging in the Y.M.C.A. building at Lindsay. After their departure on Sunday morning a man's grey overcoat, nearly new, was missed and it was suspected that it had been taken by one of the men. A description of the men and missing article was sent to various places, the local police involving one. Last night two men, giving the names of J. Macdonald and Chas. Record, sought protection at the police station here. Officer Hayes, who was upon duty, searched the men up and also detected the missing coat. He learned from them that they were in Lindsay on Saturday night, and after some conversation they admitted taking the coat. The men were then locked up and the authorities at Lindsay notified of their arrest.

WHAT AND WHY.

Why should substitutes for Scott's Emulsion be refused?

Because they do not begin to offer the equivalent of food-value contained in Scott's Emulsion.

Why should special care be taken to avoid so-called wines, cordials and extracts of cod liver oil?

Because they contain a large percentage of alcohol and afford only temporary stimulation.

Does not Scott's Emulsion also stimulate the body?

Yes, but it is stimulation through nourishment.

What vital food principle is involved in the action of Scott's Emulsion?

Direct and perfect nourishment without tax on the stomach.

THEY ACTUALLY DO THE WORK

FOOD EATEN IS WORTHLESS UNLESS DIGESTED—SOME STOMACHS MUST HAVE HELP.

Food taken into the stomach which, from the nature of the food or the condition of the stomach, is not digested, is worse than no food at all. This is a true statement as far as it goes and a great many people would go only this far with their reasoning. They argue with themselves that because their stomachs do not do the work given them they must be given less work; in other words, they must be starved. It would be just as sensible for a man whose arm or leg is unable to do all his own work to cut down his business to his own capacity as it is for a man to starve himself to relieve his stomach. The sensible business man employs help and goes forward with his business. Likewise the sensible dyspepsia will employ help for his stomach and give his body proper nourishment. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets actually do the work assigned to them. They relieve weak and overburdened stomachs of a great portion of digestive duties. Their component parts are identical with those of the digestive fluids and secretions of the stomach and they actually take up the grind and carry on the work just the same as a great, strong, healthy stomach would do it.

On this account Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are perfectly natural in their action, and effects. They do not cause any unnatural or violent disturbance in the digestive processes. They themselves digest the food and supply the system with all the nourishment contained in what is eaten and carry out Nature's plans for the sustenance and maintenance of the body.

How much more sensible is this method than that employed by many sufferers from weak stomachs. By this means the body and brain get all the good, nutritious food they need and the man is properly nourished and enjoys life to carry on his work and perform his duties. He could not possibly be in proper working condition by starving himself or employing some new fangled, inefficient food that does not contain enough nutriment for the needs of the body. Bones and knits the bone baby. A strong man doing strong work must be properly fed and this applies to the brain as well as the body.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, by relieving the stomach of its work and enable it to assimilate and regain its normal health and strength. Nature repairs the worn and wasted tissues of a broken limb, which is of course not good during the process of repair.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50 cents a box and they are the one article that the druggist does not try to sell something in the place of that's "just as good." Their unqualified merit and success and the universal demand for them has placed them within the reach of every one.

A SPRING NEED.

INDOOR CONFINEMENT IN WINTER HEARD ON THE HEALTH.

Ninety-nine people out of every hundred actually need a tonic during the spring months and the hundredth person usually makes no one take if he too infused a little extra vigor and power into his blood. The reason for this condition is quite apparent. In the cold days of winter, when we are warm during the winter months, ventilation is associated and the health is neglected. There may be nothing seriously wrong—nothing more than a variable appetite; little pimples or eruptions of the skin; a feeling of languor, but a desire to avoid exertion; perhaps an occasional headache. There may not feel serious; perhaps you may think that the trouble will pass away—but it won't unless you drive it out by putting the blood right with a health-giving tonic. And there is only one blood renewing, health giving, nerve restoring tonic—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills For Pale People. Over and over again it has been proved that these pills cure when other medicines fail, and thousands of grateful people testify that they are the best of all spring medicines. Miss D. Bowen, Collins, N. B., says: "I have used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for a run down system and have found them better than any other medicine it have tried. In the early spring my blood was out of condition and I had such disagreeable that if I turned quickly I would almost fall. I took Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and the trouble entirely disappeared. I think these pills an ideal spring medicine."

If you want to be healthy in spring don't dose yourself with purgative purgatives, and don't experiment with other medicines. Get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at once and see how quickly they will banish all spring ailments. Sold by all medicine dealers everywhere, or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Canadian Wheat Good.

Ottawa, March 30.—The committee of the National Millers' Association of Great Britain reported very highly of the Canadian wheat, which gave good crops the first year and graded much higher than the English wheat, which had a lack in the strength of stalk, as compared with the Red Fyfe, Percy and Preston, all of which rated eighty.

London, March 30.—The Alien Immigration Bill was introduced in the House of Commons yesterday and passed its first reading.

Women at Shooting Parties.

Lady "stalkers" are numerous in Scotland, and three or four peeresses have placed quite a large number of splendid "heads" to their credit. The woman who can shoot well and understands the habits of game has many advantages when among the members of a shooting party in the open air, and a moderate range befitting her twenty bore she can be relied upon to bring down the birds as surely and decorously as her male neighbors.—Scottish Field.

Huxley on Men.

Professor Huxley once wrote to Mrs. W. K. Clifford about men: "They are very queer animals—a mixture of bone and muscle, with a considerable modicum of malice, with an angel sobbing about somewhere inside. They are fond of a posset, and when they can do exactly as they please they are very hard to drive."

...stewed Prunes.

Here is a prize recipe for stewed prunes, given by a California fruit growing association: Wash the prunes in several waters, nearly cover with water and allow to stand over night. Simmer over a slow fire until tender. Do not put in any sugar until before the prunes are done.

BALFOUR AND BANNERMAN.

Premier Sent No Reason For Resigning With Means Majority.

London, March 30.—The usual notice regarding the adjournment of the House of Commons over the Easter holidays yesterday gave the Liberal leader, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, an opportunity to make a spirited attack on the Government.

He caustically criticized in detail the whole policy of the Ministry, which, he declared, especially in the matter of Chinese labor, was marked by indecision, confusion and vacillation, a tortuous course, and a misty atmosphere."

Sir Henry added that he did not think it was in accordance with the spirit of the constitution that Premier Balfour should retain power when the country had shown at every opportunity afforded it that he no longer enjoyed its favor.

Mr. Balfour, replying, said he was unable to see why the Government should resign while it retained the confidence of the House. He pointed out that the Government majority even now was larger than the majority with which Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman assumed office in order to carry home rule. Sir Henry could settle the question of the Government's resignation or not by a vote of censure.

The House adjourned until April 12. Mr. Balfour says that the budget probably will be introduced on April 19.

Halifax For Establishes.

London, March 30.—(C.A.P.)—Premier Balfour, replying to Mr. Cameron-Bell-Hammerton, M.P., stated the Government gave lip service to the monopolists, but the whole scope of the mysterious document recommending a preference and taxation of foodstuffs was stood by the majority of retaliation, which was progressive free trade and opposed to stationary or petrified free trade. He assured the Opposition nothing would be done during the life of the present Parliament with regard to the fiscal question.

Regret His Decision.

London, March 30.—(C.A.P.)—The Bristol Conservatives have passed a resolution expressing deep regret at the decision of Sir Edward Clarke, Beach not to seek reelection at the next general election.

TROUBLE FOR MR. CORMEE.

Rat Portage Liberals Split in Twain Ge...

Port Arthur, March 30.—At Rat Portage last week was held the biggest political meeting in the history of the town, over 200 qualified voters being present. Delegates were elected to the convention to be held here on April 6.

By private telegram received from Rat Portage yesterday morning, it is said that Mr. Ross will split the delegation from the Rainy River district, as he is to-day in receipt from the Port Arthur Association will be held this evening. The party in power in the province promises a course of dissatisfaction, which has split it into two factions.

Marine Men at Ottawa.

Ottawa, March 30.—The annual meeting of the Dominion Marine Association was held here yesterday morning. A large attendance being present. The annual report, which was adopted, urged the importance of harmony with the United States on lights and signals in inland waters. There was a discussion on the importance of enlarging the Welland Canal, and the qualifications of masters, mates and engineers. In the afternoon a delegation of the association conferred with the Marine Department in the matters brought forward.

Windsor, March 30.—Patrolman William Giles of the Windsor police force yesterday wrote to the Attorney-General of Ontario, asking him to investigate the mysterious death of Giles' brother-in-law, "Lexy" Longlois, whose death was reported a few days ago from Gore Bay. Mandamus Lalonde, Giles says "Lexy" did not die a natural death.

The whole of the wheat is the food for every need of life.

Whether your employment calls for the use of brain or muscle, you must eat the food that will furnish these parts in your body. The only perfect food is the one which supplies nourishment to every element, and Nature has given us that in whole wheat. Each grain contains exactly the proportion of brain-nerve-muscle and tissue-bone-building elements that the body requires. The only foods in which you can get the whole of the wheat are Famine For Britain.

London, March 31.—(C.A.P.)—Colonel George Harvey, editor of The North American Review, has an article in the April number of The Nineteenth Century Magazine. He does not see how Britain could be shielded from famine in the case of a war with the United States. The Russian surplus of wheat and Canada could not be relied upon, because the Canadian granaries would be overrun by the American forces. The success of Mr. Chamberlain's project would produce prompt retorials, but it would take more defensive legislation than that to disturb the existing Anglo-Saxon cordiality.

Boa Joes Scale Spreads.

Ottawa, March 31.—Dr. James Fletcher, botanist and entomologist at the Genral Experimental Farm, gave evidence before the committee on Agriculture and colonization yesterday. He informed the committee that the stink weed, which has become such a pest in the West, had been located in the county of Ontario. The San Jose scale was the worst insect pest in Canada. During the year it had become worse in the section previously infected.

Bigamy.

Owen Sound, March 31.—Margaret Plummerfeldt and Albert Tucker are in custody here on a charge of bigamy. It is alleged that Mrs. Plummerfeldt and Tucker were married by a local pastor about Jan. 18. The woman's husband is in Owen Sound and Tucker is said to have a wife living in Sarnia. The principals give the extraordinary excuse that the marriage took place with the consent of the prosecutor, William Plummerfeldt.

JAP ADVANCE AT HAIJU

Reached the Seaport South of Anju on March 27.

Japanese and Russian Reports of the Fight at Chongju on the 26th Do Not Agree—Admiral Togo Partially Successful in Closing the Harbor of Port Arthur With the Fire Ships.

Seoul, March 31.—The Japanese advance occupied Haiju, a seaport south of Anju, March 27.

The Jops at Chongju.

London, March 31.—The Japanese Legation here has received the following official report from Tokio of the fighting between Japanese and Russian forces at Chongju, Corea, Monday: "On March 26 a portion of our cavalry occupied Chongju, defeating the enemy. The enemy, who numbered about 600 men, retreated in the direction of Wiju. Our casualties were Lieut. Kono and four men killed; Capt. Kurokawa and 12 others wounded of the cavalry forces. There were no casualties among our infantry. Two dead bodies were left by the enemy on the field, but it is reported that some seven or eight were killed inside the town. Those were promptly carried off by the enemy on horseback or by ambulance. The Russians were seen conveying in an ambulance two dead men, apparently officers, and bloodstained bandages were scattered around. The enemy must have sustained losses at least equal to our own."

The Russian Version.

St. Petersburg, March 31.—A later official despatch from Gen. Sakharoff to the author-ity of the inhabitants of Chongju, Corea, the Japanese lost 40 killed, 100 men wounded and a number of horses during the fighting there Monday. The Japanese employed 500 Corean bearers to carry their wounded to Anju. Gen. Mishtchenko adds that Capt. Stupoff, who was among the Russians wounded, succumbed Tuesday.

Port Arthur Blocked.

Washington, March 31.—Information has been received here from Tokio, under date of March 30, to this effect:

"The Japanese have been successful in an attempt partially to close the channel of Port Arthur. Four Japanese merchant vessels, escorted by twelve destroyers and six first-class torpedo boats, arrived at 3 a.m., March 27. The Japanese merchant vessels successfully entered the channel inside the lighthouse. Two were destroyed, sunk by Russian destroyers, two of them by their own explosives. Loss in killed, two officers and two men; loss in wounded, one officer and eight men. No casualities Japanese torpedo vessels. Very small gap in channel."

Should the cablegram from Tokio prove to be correct, it is believed here that it will be difficult for the Russian ships to pass the channel.

WAR NOTES.

Newchwang, March 31.—Five merchant ships which arrived on Sunday last, but were not admitted into the harbor until yesterday report that they saw a Russian fleet of nine battleships cruising off Port Arthur at a distance of twelve miles out to sea.

Chee Foo, March 31.—The captain, mate, engineer and purser of the Japanese coasting steamer Hanyei arrived at Tengchow yesterday morning and reported that the Hanyei had been fired on and sunk by the Russian fleet near the Miaotao Islands on the morning of March 27.

St. Petersburg, March 31.—Alexis Harbin correspondent of the Russky Viedomosti explodes the recent report that three Japanese officers were hanged for attempting to blow up the Sungari bridge on the Trans-Siberian Railroad.

Vladivostock, March 31.—One of the mines in Possiet Bay has been exploded by a whale. The mutilated carcass subsequently was washed ashore.

St. Petersburg, March 31.—A correspondent of The Russky Vydomosti writes from Port Dalny that the Russian cruiser Boyarin sank two hours after striking the mine there, and that six of her crew were lost.

All Classes Affected.

Stratford, March 31.—The reduction of the staff of the Grand Trunk shops was announced yesterday morning, when the night shift, numbering thirty-two, was laid off. The further reduction, to make up the full two hundred men, will come into effect on Friday morning. All classes of workmen, will be affected.

FOR EASTER HOLIDAYS

House of Commons Quits Work Till Tuesday Next.

Time For Receiving Private Bills Has Been Extended to April 20—After the Recess the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill Will Be Taken Up—Another Day in Committee of Supply—Several Items Passed.

Ottawa, March 31.—Three hours wrestling with estimates and an advance of private bills to the committee stage constituted the work of the Commons yesterday. The House then adjourned until after the Easter holidays, when the real business of the session, the new G.T.P. deal will be taken up. The time for receiving private bills has been extended to April 28.

Mr. Sinclair (Portsworth) was informed by the Minister of Agriculture that during the season of 1903 there was shipped from Montreal to Europe 2,700 barrels of apples in cold storage at an extra cost of 36 cents per barrel for such cold storage.

The Minister of Agriculture, in reply to Mr. McGowan, said there was no record in the department of any beef having been shipped from Montreal last season in cold storage.

Can't Prohibit the Jops.

In reply to a question by Mr. Bourassa, the Prime Minister said that the law of British Columbia prohibiting the employment of Japanese in mines, had been disallowed by the Federal authorities.

Mr. Casgrain complained about delay in distributing voters' lists to members, and wanted to know what was going to be done in future.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that provisions to the meeting of Parliament that the voters' lists was pushed as fast as they were received at the bureau. Even during the printing of reports for Parliament had taken up the time of the bureau, but as soon as these were completed the printing of the voters' lists would be resumed, and the lists would be distributed to all members alike, as was promised.

Quebec Public Buildings.

The House then went into committee of supply and passed several estimates for public buildings in Quebec which, much debate. Appropriations for new public buildings and repairs in Manitoba and the Territories were also passed, and a number of private bills were given a second reading and referred to committee.

The House then adjourned at 6 o'clock until Tuesday next.

Small Veterinary Staff.

Ottawa, March 31.—The organization of a small veterinary staff is contemplated by the Militia Department. This will in no way affect the appointment of veterinary officers to corps. Each cavalry corps and each artillery corps will have its veterinary. The new establishments, however, give only one veterinary to a brigade, instead of one to each battery of the brigade, as hitherto. But where a battery is independent, as most batteries now are, it will have its veterinary officer.

Fast Train Wrecked.

Moncton, March 31.—The fast freight going west was badly wrecked yesterday afternoon five miles above Hopewell; nine cars left the rails and went over a bank and were badly broken up, and three were thrown across the track. None of the train hands were injured. A refrigerator car, containing a butter stove took fire and the train hands had considerable difficulty in getting it out. An auxiliary train was sent out to clear the road.

Little Jack's Legs Crushed.

Toronto, March 31.—Little "Jack" Hall and his mother and uncle were running to catch a Belt Line car last night, just above Earl street. The lad was in the lead and, unable to stop himself, he ran against the moving car. The speed at which he was going caused him to slip as he struck the car, and he fell across the rear wheels. The result was that much of his legs was caught above the knees and crushed almost to a pulp.

Lady Minto Injured.

Ottawa, March 31.—Lady Minto and party were skating at Rideau Rink yesterday afternoon, when a rather poor ice. About 1 o'clock, in turning the end of the rink, Lady Minto tripped and fell, suffering a compound fracture of the right leg just above the ankle. She was taken to pain. Drs. Chabot and H. A. Powell attended her. She was taken to Rideau Hall in a private ambulance.

Drowned in a Well.

St. Thomas, March 31.—The wife of Samuel Wesley Switzer, was drowned in a well yesterday morning. Her husband had gone to work and her mother found the body. She was of a melancholy nature, and an aunt met death in a similar way some time ago.

Four Children Cremated.

Riverdale, Mich., March 31.—Four children were burned to death near a mill six miles north of here. They were the children of Wesley Switzer, who was working in the mills. The mother left them alone in the house while she went on an errand to a neighbor.

If you have not yet visited our display and intend having a new hat for Easter we would advise you to do so at once as the longer you give us to fill your order the more satisfactory it will be.

NEW SPRING JACKETS

We have just received from Berlin, Germany, another large shipment of Ladies' and Misses' Cloth Jackets in the latest styles for Spring and Summer wear. We have made an unusual effort to show a complete range of the newest shapes in the most fashionable cloths, in both black and colors, and can show a large variet, in all sizes.

Most of the better ones are exclusive in style, no two alike. We would advise an early choice to secure best selection.

As these came to us direct from the largest mantle makers in the world you will find the prices very moderate.

LADIES' CLOTH COSTUMES

We are showing very pretty styles in Ladies' and Misses' Cloth Costumes in plain cloth and fancy tweeds. The new styles are showing in long skirted coats, coats with medium length skirts and the short eton or bolero jackets—to suit the different styles of figures. No one style will suit every form and we have a large variety of shapes to select from. See the very latest styles in our Mantle Department.

NEWFOUNDLAND AND THE DOMINION.

The reported settlement of what is known as the French shore difficulties in Newfoundland, has again brought to the front the advisability of "Rounding off the Dominion" by the admission of that colony into the British North American Confederacy.

Some writers express the opinion that, this difficulty being removed, there will be little or no difficulty in arriving at a basis upon which a union can be effected. They seem to forget that the removal of the trouble which Newfoundland has for so many years had with French invaders of her soil, may make the public men of that colony less anxious for union than they would otherwise be. It is known that Premier Bond never was, or never has been, an ardent Confederationist. It was only when the colony was in extremities, and on the verge of bankruptcy, that he consented to consider the question of union, and even then his demands were of such a character as to cause negotiations to be broken off. The Ottawa correspondent of the Mail gives the result of the negotiations in 1895 between the Government of Canada and a deputation from the Government of Newfoundland. The results of that conference are summarized. A careful study of the facts will show that Canada was not so niggardly in her offers as has been alleged:

"Just since 1895, says the correspondent, has there been anything like a serious attempt on the part of the two colonies to come together. At that time Sir Mackenzie Bowell was Prime Minister, and in the negotiations which then took place he was associated with him Sir A. P. Caron, Hon. Geo. E. Foster and Hon. John Haggart. The Newfoundland delegates consisted of the present Prime Minister of the colony, Sir Robert Bond, Messrs. E. P. Morris, W. H. Horwood, and G. M. Emmerson. The memorandum of the terms proposed by Canada included the following: Loan of $1,000,000 at 3 per cent., or $30,000 per annum. Then, in addition, the following sums were to be paid yearly to Newfoundland as allowance for legislation, $50,000; 80 cents per head of the population up to 400,000, $165,000; this payment was to be readjusted on the basis of the census returns. There were to be an allowance for Crown lands and rights of minerals and metals and timber, $150,000. This made a total annual allowance to the colony of $895,000.

"The Dominion undertook moreover to maintain all services in Newfoundland which fell under the head of general or Dominion services; to keep up efficient steamship services; to make a grant of $40,000 towards the maintenance of police constabulary until the militia were introduced into the island; the fishermen of Newfoundland to participate equally with those of Canada in the bounties to fishermen, granted by the General Government at any time. Newfoundland was to be represented in the Senate by four Senators, and in the House of Commons by ten representatives.

"A snag was struck in the negotiations by the demands of Newfoundland. The colony desired the assumption of the entire debts of the colony and the completion of the transinsular railway, and an annual payment to the colony of $850,000. Canada was only prepared to supplement her proposal by making the total annual payment to the colony $450,000, and by subsidizing the construction of the Newfoundland Railway from River Exploits to Port Aux Basques by a subsidy of $6,000 per mile. At this point the negotiations were broken off, and they have not been renewed since.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Is there any more ice in the river to come down?

"Look out for me!" said the Corbyville ice. "I faret, you know."

The flood has gone down, but dust is not yet blowing in many cellars on the west side.

The Mississauga Indians want their wild rice, and may now some wild oats if they don't get it.

The civic authorities are coming in for severe criticism at the hands of a few people for not starting their blasting operations in the river corner. "They waited," said one indignant party, "till the flood was at its worst before they woke up. The fact is, the ice in the harbor should have been broken up when the ice first began to move; then I believe we'd have had no flood to speak of."

The gas people have, they tell us, located the main cause of their trouble at last. Yesterday they discovered a place in the main which contained between five and six inches of the phenomenally severe winter, it is believed, was responsible for the trouble. It is certainly a blessing that things are going all right once more, for the superintendent of the gas works was rapidly becoming grey-haired, and the chairman of the board soon have been worn away to a shadow.

We notice that our old friend Winnie, at the Hockey Minstrel Show, is to sing a song entitled "I Want My Pay." That is not, at all appropriate. Everybody knows Winnie is a pure amateur.

What though the "original" poetry on the flood, in an esteemed contemporary, was clipped from the funny column of the Montreal Herald without credit! It was not dry reading, anyhow.

We regret that our remarks yesterday re the Harbor Commissioners, did not do that body justice. But then if we used language which would do them justice many of our staid readers would stop their paper.

To-morrow being Good Friday, and a holiday, it might be in order for many people to clean the snow from their sidewalks which has been there for four months or so.

Doesn't it do your heart good to stand on the lower bridge these days and see Belleville's fleet fishing at anchor in the harbor! The schooner Annie Lake and Mc. O'Flynn's ballchalp make a brave showing.

Kouropatkin admits that on the first land battle of the war, he was forced to retire. He must do better than that before the Czar's standard will be hoisted over Tokio.

The price of bread has been reduced in Petesboro from 10 to 9 cents. Which shows that, after all, there are some well-bred people in the northern town.

A Brockville man had a violin which he sold to a Perth man for $6. Now the instrument turns out to be a genuine "Guarnerius," to have been made in 1711, and connoisseurs value it at $5000. The Brockville man now probably feels as though he had been entertaining a violin angel unawares.

The Hamilton Spectator makes some pertinent remarks concerning the farce of "concurrent" sentences. A criminal named Hillis, who had given the Hamilton police no end of trouble, was tried on three serious charges and found guilty. Then the judge sentenced him to eight years on one charge, eight on another and five on another, "the sentences to run concurrently." Which means that the criminal might as well have been given an eight year sentence and be done with it. The other two sentences are a farce. Why is this practise indulged in by judges? If a criminal commits three separate crimes and is tried on three separate charges, why should he not serve three separate sentences? To the lay mind that question is unanswerable.

The Toronto Star had a special from Belleville which said the water rose 12 feet here yesterday morning. It's lucky for many of us that the distance was exaggerated by about 10 feet.

Some esteemed contemporaries indulge in a mild sneer or two because Dr. John Potts, a prominent Methodist clergyman, well known in this city, preached on Mars Hill in Athens last Sunday. Why? Dr. Potts is a strong upholder of Pauline doctrines; his theology is as sound as the foundations of Mars Hill itself; he is recognized as one of the leading members of one of the leading Christian churches in the world. Why should not Dr. Potts, when requested to do so, stand in a historic place on a historic occasion and try to tell the same truths which were told centuries ago by the most eloquent man he world has ever seen, St. Paul? More presumptuous things are done every day.

The Ontario Government whip chartered a special train in order to bring an M.P.P. in in time to save the Government from defeat, and now it looks as though the people may have to foot the bill. That would be as bad as making the people pay for Ross' bust, which he presented to himself a few years ago.

Mr. Gamey caught Hon. Mr. Ross in a characteristic piece of shuffling, and when the Premier said he had taken Stratton's now celebrated advice and "forgot something." What an absent-minded humbug he must be!

To-morrow being the 1st of April, we would suggest the following as a few appropriate practical jokes:

Special meeting of Council, to pass the Bulldog By-law.

Mass meeting of ratepayers, at which resolutions might be passed pledging the city to buy $100,000 worth of bonds in the proposed Ontario Electric Railway.

Caucus of Belleville prohibitionists, at which resolutions expressive of their admiration for Hon. G. W. Ross might be passed. The said resolutions to be written on parchment. Proceedings to be opened with devotional exercises.

Caucus of Belleville hotel-keepers, at which resolutions expressive of their esteem for Hon. G. W. Ross might be passed. The said resolutions to be written on asbestos. Proceedings to be opened with a corkscrew.

The Chairman of Water, attired in a bathing suit, might go down and repair the broken main.

The Chairman of Gas, wearing a smile and a Tam o' Shanter, might deliver an address on "Some advantages of natural gas over the manufactured article."

The Chairman of Public Works, accompanied by the Street Surveyor, might sing the beautiful ballad, "There'll be work for all next summer, when the new sidewalks are built."

The Chairman of Fire, accompanied by the Fire Chief, might render the classical selection, "It's a long way between hydrants sometimes."

The Chairman of Industries might read a paper on "Brighter days for Belleville when the furniture factory comes."

The Chairman of the Executive might render a base solo, entitled, "Three-tenths of a mill isn't much."

The Chairman of Light might burst forth with the beautiful sacred solo, "Let your lower lights be burning."

The Market Chairman might present specifications for a couple of new clocks on the city clock.

The Parks Chairman might show how he would be cheaper to purchase a hoe-new mower than a one-horse article, inasmuch as the cow might be milked afterwards and the lateral fluid sold.

And the Mayor might—but there, if he presided at all the functions he'd have enough to do.

A REDHEADED GIRL

By C. B. LEWIS.

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

It was while the brig Delay, Captain Josiah Barnes, master, lay at Port au Prince, after a voyage from Hull, that a redheaded girl came aboard to secure passage to Boston. She had gone to the island from Salem two years before with an American family as governess, but had become tired of it and desired to get back to the United States. The wife of Captain Barnes was aboard and his crew numbered seven men. He had also taken as passengers two American sea captains whose vessels had been shipwrecked among the West Indian islands. If it hadn't been that one of the captains offered to surrender his stateroom to the redheaded girl and sleep in the main cabin on a shakedown she could not have taken passage by the Delay. Indeed it was a close shave at best, as Mrs. Barnes, who was fat, forty and plain faced, looked her over and said to her husband:

"Josiah, she's redheaded, and that means that she's a terrible flirt."

"Yes; she's got red hair," replied the captain, "but I don't see nothin' giddy about her. She looks as sober as any gal who ever went to sea, and that passage money will come in handy for us. She'll probably be seasick clear up to Boston light and not eat $2 worth of provisions."

"Well, we'll take her," said Mrs. Barnes, with a doubtful shake of the head, "but you see if it don't result in a tornado, waterspout or calamity of some kind. Redheaded girls are born to make trouble."

A day later the Delay weighed anchor and set out on her return voyage, and the attitude of the redheaded girl as she moved about was so demure that the captain could find little to pat ting her on the head and speaking words of sympathy and encouragement. The brig sailed at 9 o'clock in the morning, and the girl passenger did not make her appearance at the table at noon. Mrs. Barnes' anxiety had forced her to look into the stateroom and offer her sympathy, but not a sound was she was secretly glad to find the redheaded girl in her berth and apparently suffering the pangs of seasickness.

Something like a surprise party awaited the dame when supper time came round. She was thinking of making a cup of tea with her own hands and adding a dish or two when the redheaded girl suddenly appeared in the cabin fully dressed and looking as pert and saucy as if the old brig rested in a corrugated instead of climbing up and down watery hills of exceeding steepness.

"Le, but haven't you been seasick?" exclaimed the captain's wife after a long stare.

"Of course not," was the reply.

"And you ain't goin' to be?"

"I hope not. Where are the gentlemen? They must have missed me. I'm so glad I'm the only girl aboard, as I will have them all to myself. Do you know if both captains are married men?"

Yes, ma'am; I know what they are, and each one is the father of at least seven children," replied Mrs. Barnes, with extra emphasis, during determination to crush the redheaded girl at the very outset.

"Well, they can flirt with me for a few days just the same," said the girl as she surveyed herself in the cracked mirror hanging over the table.

At supper the redheaded girl made herself charming "at home." She laughed and chatted and made eyes, and Mrs. Barnes could not help but see that her own captain, as well as the two others, was more than interested. She grew red in the face, and her blood boiled, and as soon as the meal was finished and the girl had gone on deck, escorted by the two other captains, she drew herself up before her liege lord with folded arms and demanded:

"Josiah Barnes of Providence, what did I tell you?"

"I dunno," he absently replied.

"Don't lie to me, sir! I told you that redheaded girl was an impudent minx, and my words have come true. She even made eyes at you across the table!"

"I—I didn't see 'em if she did."

"You saw 'em and almost blushed, Josiah Barnes, that girl has got to stop or she'll get a piece of my mind that will make her red hair curl. I won't stand by and see no such shameless fools of three or four men who ought to know better."

The captain's advice was for her to go slow, and he was glad to get on deck and out of reach of her tongue. That was the beginning of things. That night the redheaded girl walked the deck with a captain on each side of her.

The next day the "minx", got a piece of Mrs. Barnes' mind. It was a terrible piece and ought to have brought her to her senses, but it didn't. On the contrary, after she got fairly started the redheaded girl got off three words to the other's one and read her a long and severe lecture on minding her own business. In this lecture were included a few observations on false teeth and gray hairs, and when the battle was over it was the motherly Mrs. Barnes who didn't know where she was. She tried to get even by calling her husband into the cabin and telling him what was what and that she'd take good care to see that everybody in Providence knew it, but the girl replied that was:

"It's all nonsense in your sayin' that I've fallen in love with that-girl, but I'm tellin' you that redheaded women are born to make trouble, and I don't care who hears me my so."

Inside of four days the redheaded girl was flirting with everything and everybody clear down to the cook, and of course jealousy crept in. The three captains hurled sarcastic remarks at each other, and the mate and carpenter had a glass in their hands and a feeling of revenge in their breasts. Mrs. Barnes tried again and again to stem the tide, but in vain, and at length she took refuge in tears and predictions.

The Delay sailed on and on and the flirtations went on and on, and as the brig crept up the coast Mrs. Barnes "felt it in her bones" that Boston would never be reached. The redheaded girl had brought disorganization from cabin to bowsprit and almost usurped command.

Ten days after leaving Port au Prince Charles has been opened up by a small shaft and a good body of medium grade pyrite ore uncovered. The extent of this body is apparently large but must be proved by further development. Average assays of this body give 70 per cent. copper and $6.75 in gold.

The company embraces some of the most responsible and successful business men of the interior, and in setting forth its plans with such care and foresight not always denoted in the most prominent mining enterprises."

A perusal of their advertisement will show the plan for securing the shareholders.

Yet just wait, Josiah Barnes—you just wait for Cape Cod," the captain's wife grimly repeated a dozen times a day, and Cape Cod was finally reached.

Then a gale sprang up, the big brig lost her foremast, and, though the redheaded girl sought her stateroom and the crew was left free to battle with the storm, the craft was driven ashore and became a total wreck. Crew and passengers were saved, and in due time the Captain Barnes appeared at the office of the owners in Boston to tell how it all happened. He was listened to until he had finished, and then the head of the firm handed him a letter that had been received the day before. It was from Martha, and it read:

I want to report that the Delay is ashore on Cape Cod and total wreck, and I want to report that a redheaded girl and a lot of fool men are the cause of it.

Write Notes to Themselves.

"Actors are great hands to write 'mash' notes to themselves," said a stage manager. "The leading young men, you see—the heroes that play the beautiful girls—are supposed to attract to the theater myriads of young women. They draw by pig or by the account; their friends talk seriously of the powerful, almost hypnotic, influences that they exert on romantic females. This power is the stock in trade of the actor who travels on his beauty instead of on his art, and he must always have tangible proof of it. So if the young woman does not send each mail with a bunch of authentic mash notes, he sees to it anyway that he gets mash notes all right. He times them so that they reach the theater during rehearsal. The manager every afternoon brings them to him—a half dozen pink and blue and cream envelopes, smelling of violet and orris. He takes them with a guffaw, reads them, passes them around, and every one pretends to be amused at their silly contents, but the minute the actor's back is turned the murmur passes back and forth: 'They're fakes. He wrote them himself. He spends two hours a day writing himself mash notes.' To tell the truth, this actor gets a number of authentic mash notes, but nobody believes it. It is thought that every note is a fake."—Washington Post.

"Barber, Barber, Shave a Pig."

In pig killing there is no more exciting moment than that of removing the bristles from the carcass. With such haste does the operation sometimes have to be accomplished that in a certain country family it was begun one day with a pair of fine brass candlesticks before the usual utensils could be found.

When Salmon P. Chase was at Kenyon college, which was then presided over by his uncle, Bishop Philander Chase, he encountered a similar difficulty and cut the knot with unhesitating decision. The bishop and most of the elders went away one morning, and young Salmon was ordered to kill and dress a pig while they were gone. He found no great trouble in catching and slaughtering a fat young porker," and he had the tub of hot water all ready for scalding.

The process should have loosened the bristles, but either the water was too hot or the pig was kept soaking too long at any rate, when the boy began scraping the bristles not one of them could be started. In pig killing phrase, they were "set." What could he do?

Then he bethought him of his cousin's razors, a fine new pair, just entitled to the use of their owner, a spruce young clergyman. He pilfered them and shaved the pig from toe to snout.—Youth's Companion.

A Promising Camp.

One of the most promising districts in British Columbia is that lying about the shining city, of Kamloops. Mr. Hedley, the discoverer of the Pacific Province mines, says: "In all variety, Grazing lands, where thousands of cattle may, and grow, fat on the nutritious bunch grass; fruit lands in the valleys; farming lands on the benches, and mining lands on the mountains with good transportation facilities; the country generally speaking, the glorious climate will make the Kamloops district."

A large amount of progress has been made in the mines, but the richest prize in the camp, which was treasure vaults in gold and silver and copper struck most attention. As a mining camp the district has not been boomed by the unscrupulous promoter but development has gone on quietly until to-day it is proved beyond a doubt that in all the rich sections of the great Dominion, Kamloops is second to none. The Cherry Creek Copper Mines, whose advertisement appears in another column, have secured one of the most promising properties in the camp, which was secured on very favorable terms. Mr. Redmond, M.E., in his annual report on the camp, says:—

"The group of claims which is well known, possess some promising surface showings on the contact of the Nicola and Coast belt. The following extract from the company's prospectus fairly describes these, and I believe is a conservative description:

"The veins on the 'O.K.' which have been opened up by surface work and a shaft east and west on the 50-foot level is a true fissure, about 90 feet in width at the shaft. The strike of the lead is northeast and southwest, with a dip to the southeast of about 60 degrees. The bodies are lenticular, occurring throughout the vein lines. From these lenses a high-grade pyritic copper ore assaying from 5 per cent. to 19 per cent. copper and from $4 to $8 in gold is taken. A sampling of the fissure where opened in the shaft gave an average of 12.60 per cent. copper and $6.75 in gold.

"A parallel vein on the Prince Charles has been opened up by a small shaft and a good body of medium grade pyrite ore uncovered. The extent of this body is apparently large but must be proved by further development. Average assays of this body give 70 per cent. copper and $6.75 in gold.

The company embraces some of the most responsible and successful business men of the interior, and in setting forth its plans with such care and foresight not always denoted in the most prominent mining enterprises."

A perusal of their advertisement will show the plan for securing the shareholders.

TIMELY TOPICS.

It's lucky the water went down before our Easter visitors arrived. It's no joke entertaining visitors with two feet of water on the parlor floor.

People on the flats will sleep in waterproof pyjamas next spring.

It would not be a bad thing if some of that water had run down the middle of Front St. for an hour or two.

The ice having broken one of the guys on the footbridge, we more that any guys who rock it and frighten women and children be taken out and shot at sunrise.

There was, last Good Friday, a baseball match in this city. It will have to be ping-pong or nothing to-morrow.

The Harbor Commissioners, it seems, bore part of the expense of blasting out a channel in the harbor yesterday morning. The Intelligencer was informed at the time that the city was compelled to do it all, and rejoices to find that the Harbor Commissioners were persuaded to do half their duty, anyway. They should have borne all the expense, and should see that the piers which obstruct the channel are removed before next spring.

1,000 Robbed in Twenty Years.

Washington, March 31.—In the House yesterday Crumpacker (Indiana), declared that 5,000 persons have been robbed and put to death in the last 20 years in the United States.

Why Kingston Rejoices.

Kingston, March 31.—Last evening the street railway line was in full operation.

Brothers in Death.

Regina, March 31.—John and William Norris, brothers, aged about 25 and 30 years, who were living together at their homestead, about 18 miles southeast of the city, were found dead in their house Tuesday. It is reported that one brother was in bed and the other was partly undressed. Mounted police and a coroner have left to investigate the fatality.

Otter's Condition.

Toronto, March 31.—Last night it was stated that Col. Otter was conscious and taking nourishment, and that all conditions were favorable to recovery.

Notable Instances in Modern Times in Great Britain.

We hear so much of American capitalists of industry, of Astor, Rockefeller, the farm laborer's son; of Edison, the newspaper boy, and of Hirkes, the youthful soap jobber, that we are apt to forget British giants of perseverance. Livingstone worked as a factory hand until twenty-five. The boy who sought and found him in the wilds was born in a workhouse. The great firm of W. H. Smith & Sons was begun by two brothers so poor that the wife of one had to go into domestic service. The house of Tangye began in a little workshop whose rent was but 6 shillings a week. That of Lever Bros. had a scarcely more pretentious start at Bolton. A coffee stall on a London curb was the fount and origin of Pearce & Plenty. Seven hundred pounds sterling once formed the total capital of the "universal" Whiteley. Bass' brewery was founded by a carrier and the Elder-Dempster line of steamers by a ship's apprentice, now Sir Alfred Jones. The inventor of Dessenter steel was once a poor, almost starving boy in London, the poorer for his age devoted his labor to an invention of whom profits the Government robbed him. So one might go on throughout the whole range of our industries. It is the sergeant and the plain constable of life's affairs who have made this nation industrially great and carried its flag and fame to the ends of the earth.—St. James Gazette.

ALWAYS BE SANGUINE.

Keep to the Highways and Shun the Most Gloomy of Lanes.

Keep to the broad highways of hope and cheerfulness. Expect to succeed. Think success, and you will succeed. Keep out of the back alleys of gloom and pessimism. Join the procession of the cheerful, the willing and the hopeful. Be sanguine. Know the pleasure of living. Enjoy the sunshine of hope.

Keep away from the scavengers and ragpickers who infest the back alleys of life. You pessimist is your own scavenger, your ragpicker. He may be a necessary evil, a boil on it were on everybody social, but too much of him is fatal. He never gave the world a smile. He never contributed to the good cheer of any human being. He never lifted the gloom from any distressed soul. He is the antithesis of progress. He is the pollywog which in the evolution of life is continually dragging backward toward the slimy past, resisting the progress of development which must go on with or without him.

Beware of the encroachments of the carping, pessimistic spirit. It is a hardy plant. It takes root easily in the mind, and, like the thistle, when once it gained a foothold it is well nigh impossible to uproot it, but it cannot live in an atmosphere of sunshine and cheerfulness. Therefore, keep to the highways. Keep out of the back alleys.—Exchange.

Children's Weight.

Some curious experiments have been made at one of the royal philanthropic institutions in Copenhagen. For some years back the seventy boys and girls in the place have been carefully weighed every day in groups of fifteen and under. Thereby it is proved that the children gain weight mostly in autumn and in the early part of December. From that time till the end of April there is scarcely any increase in weight. More remarkable still, there is a diminution till the end of summer.

Seidl's Silent Tongue.

One of the most striking anecdotes told in Hermann Klein's "Thirty Years of Musical Life in London" refers to Anton Seidl's first interview with Wagner in the library at Wahnfried. Seidl found the room dark, and, imagining nobody was there, he pulled out his letter of introduction and began silently rehearsing the speech he had prepared. Suddenly from out of the gloomy corner Wagner appeared, and Seidl was so nervous that he could not bring out a sentence of his speech. This proved to be his salvation, for Wagner, declaring, "If you can work as well as you can hold your tongue, you will do," secured him on the spot.

Where Dr. Figgis Preached and Bittion Princess Worshipped.

Passing up Waterloo Place, on the left-hand side, as one enters Lower Regent street, stands a dull red building of Corinthian architecture, as the walls is a notice to the effect that the last service will be held on Sunday next, when the sermon will be preached by Dr. Figgis, Vicar of Bristol. This is St. Philip's.

Built eighty-four years ago as a chapel of ease to St. James' Church, St. Philip's has sadly fallen from its high estate.

At one time 1,500 persons crowded its portals to listen to eloquent sermons from its then vicar, now Dean Figgis. Some of the highest personages in the land regularly attended Divine service there.

But for many years past the sore congestion has considered of half a dozen persons. It is for this reason that the church is to be pulled down and the land sold.

"All the rich folks who used to live in Carlton House Terrace and round there seem to have gone away, or else do not go to church any longer," complains the old caretaker, who has watched the congregation dwindling for twenty years.

St. Philip's has no parish and no endowment, depending entirely on its pew rents. These at the apogee of its prosperity amounted to £1,200 a year. Now they are absolutely nil.

When brilliant preachers like Canon Repton and Canon Figgis were vicar, large and fashionable congregations flocked to hear them.

At one time on a Sunday morning the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Princess Mary of Teck, the Duke of Marlborough, Lords Derby and Elcho, Mr. Gladstone and many other notables could all be seen in the pews.

One delightful old character was Admiral Boyle. Having listened to the account of St. Paul's shipwreck, he waited outside the church for Dr. Figgis.

"Well, all I can say," remarked he, "is that if a captain in Her Majesty's service had handled his ship as that man did he would have been court-martialed the same day and struck from the service."

"The Man in the Street."

Edward W. Parry writes to The London Spectator: "What is the origin of the phrase, 'the man in the street?' In 'The Greville Memoirs,' under date March 22, 1831, Vol. II., p. 131, occurs the following: 'The King will not consent to it (a dissolution), knowing, as the man in the street' (as we call him at Newmarket) always does, the greatest secrets of Kings, and being the confidant of their most hidden thoughts.' The origin of the phrase is interesting. Does 'the man in the street' still obtain at Newmarket, and is he a 'tipster,' or merely one who speaks with confidant knowledge, having none? It will certainly interest modern journalists to know there was a 'man in the street' in 1831 of similar characteristics apparently to his latter-day representative."

FOR INFLAMMATION OF THE EYES, which the many good results from Parmelee's Vegetable Pills immediately, and in regulating the digestive organs, is their efficacy in removing inflammation from the eyes. It has called forth many letters of recommendation from those who were afflicted with this complaint, which abound a cure in the pills. They affect the nerves centre which, in turn, has a surprisingly active way, and the result is almost immediately seen. Many a man who doesn't take water has to in his habit out.
If you have a cough or cold do not neglect it; many without a trace of the first symptoms of consumption, and into a consumptive's grave by neglecting a cough or cold. Mr. Archibald Hay used Hickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of Cough. He was too late, their lives would have been saved. Mr. A. Hay, Litchfield, writes: "I think Hickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup the best preparation on the market for coughs and colds. I suffered six years ago I caught a severe cold which settled on my lungs, and for three months I had a cough, and was under a physician attending me, but gradually grew worse until I was on the verge of Consumption, and had given up hope of being cured, when I was induced to try Hickle's Syrup. Before I had taken the bottle I found myself greatly relieved, and by the time I had taken the third large bottle I was completely cured. I always recommend it for severe colds and consumption."
A long mortgage makes a weary cause.
No one knows better than those who suffer from a physician attending upon such and what relief they have given [illegible] for Dyspepsia, Constipation, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Dizziness, Nervousness, and disordered stomach.
On occasion knowing what one is taking is a great advantage. Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is a speedy cure for dysentery, Diarrhoea, cholera morbus, cholera infantum and all looseness and complaints incidental to children. It is a pleasant, safe and sure relief to those suffering from the effects of eating too freely of fruit, green fruit, cucumbers, etc. It acts like a charm. Once tried you will enjoy yourself. She will laughing. I thought it horrible. Nothing can be compared with such unspeakable repulsion that I had following the reading of the book. To speak at all would have been impossible. Neither did I dare look in the face of the one who had given it to me. I shall be very sure to laughing—such as hollow laugh—and I shall be very careful nowhen! When she turned to me she had on the dejection about the note, this resolve glared still in her eyes.
"And you never suspected?"
"Not for an instant. I did not do anything [illegible] for my own peace of conscience. I fear that I have never loved her truly in any way. I thought her light, pleasure-loving. I did not know that it was assumed [illegible] for my sake.
"Then you had no knowledge of the contract she had entered into while a school-girl?"
"Not in the least. Another woman, and not myself, had been her confidante; a woman who has since died. I knew that the first and unfortunate marriage had ever reached me until the [illegible] upon me that Tuesday morning with her awful confession on his lips."
The district attorney, who did not once quite satisfied on a certain point, paused for the time, and then took the opportunity of saying:
"You observe, Mr. Jones, that the idea that this once light-hearted girl was your murderess and suicide when she left you?"
"And I repeat it, sir."
"Then why did you immediately go to Mr. Jeffrey's drawer, where you found the note, and endeavor to see if she had taken his pistol with her?"
Mrs. Tutt's head fell and a sob of horror broke through the pallor of her cheek.
"Because I was thinking of him. Because I cared for him still. He had left the house the morning before in a fit of unprecedented conduct, and had not come back to sleep or breakfast. It was my duty—and I mean no outraged in every sacred feeling of love and honor might be shielded in the thought of suicide. I remembered the old house and how I had heard him say, believe her, I don't believe she ever did so cold-blooded an act as that. Any such dreadful machinery is in that house. I never shall believe it till I have seen with my own eyes. He is a frightener, Cora. We are insane." I thought of this, and I went into her room to change the [illegible] of the note to the book. I went to his bureau drawer, not to look for the pistol—I did not think of such a thing—but to see if the rest of the Moore house were still there. I knew that they were kept in this drawer, for I had been present in the room when they were brought in after the wedding. I had also been short-sighted enough to conclude that if they were gone it was he who had taken them. They were gone, and I knew that I flew immediately from the house to the old place in Waverley Avenue. I was concerned for Mr. Jeffrey! I feared to find him there, demented or dead."
"No. Mr. Jeffrey had taken one of them himself, my sister the other. But the lack of a key or even of a light in the missing candles were not to the missing candles were not to the missing candles were not to the house after I was once convinced that he had gone to this dreadful house. If I could not get in I could at least communicate with Mr. Jeffrey or rouse the neighbors. Something must be done. I did not think what; I merely flew."
"And you knew that the house had two keys?"
"Not then.
"But your sister did?"
"Certainly."
"And joining the only key, as you supposed, gone, you flew to the Moore house?"
"Immediately."
"And nor what else?"
"I found the door unlocked."
"That was done by Mrs. Jeffrey?"
"Yes, but I did not think of her then."
"And you went in?"
"Yes; it was all dark, but I felt my way till I came to the gilded pistols."
"Why did you go there?"
"I suppose I felt—knew—if he were anywhere in that house he would be there!"
"And why did you stop?"
Her voice rose above its usual quiet pitch in shrill protest:
"You know! you know! I heard a footstep—a man's step—I knew it all, I don't remember anything else. They say I went wandering about town. Perhaps I did; it is all a blank to me—everything is a blank till the policeman said that my sister was dead and I learned for the first time that she had taken her own life. The Jeffrey house was not the signal of his death, but hers. Had I been myself when at that literary door," she added, after a moment of silence, "I should have rushed in at the sound of that shot and have received my sister's dying breath."

"We afterwards found that three candles were [illegible] delivered at the house at all; that they had been placed in the wrong basket and sent to a neighboring kitchen.
"Cora!" The cry was from Mr. Jeffrey, and seemed to be quite involuntary. It was the first time in which he had once kept him speaking together. It was as if all the past events over in my mind till I longed to [illegible] my sister in the grave. But in all my thinking I never attributed this motive to your sister. It was [illegible] enough.
There was a new tone in his voice, a tone which no woman could hear without emotion.
"There are other things to think of," she said, and her lips trembled. Never have I seen on the human face such an expression of [illegible] as saw on hers at that moment; nor do I think I shall ever see either, for as he marked it his own regard softened almost [illegible].
The major had [illegible] for sentimentalities. Turning to Mr. Jeffrey, he said:
"One more question before we send for the letter which you say will give full insight into the case's crime. Do you remember what occurred on the bridge at Georgetown just before you came into town that night?"
He shook his head.
"Did you meet any one there?"
"I do not know."
"Do you remember your state of mind?"
"I was facing the future."
"And what did you see in the future?"
"Death. Death for her and death for me! A crime was on her soul and I would die, and I did die within myself. I know no other course. I could not summon the police, point out my bride of a fortnight and with the declaration that she had been betrayed into living a miserable existence with a man she coldly deliver her up to justice, while I—I live on! I live on! side knowing the guilty secret which parted us; or live anywhere in the world under the name of assassin. Therefore, I meant to kill myself before another sun rose. But she was more deeply stricken with a sense of her own guilt than I realized. When I returned home for the pistol which was to end our common misery I found that she had taken the pistol-sent into her own hands. This [illegible] me to think, and when I found that, in doing this, she had committed suicide in my stead, I could face the world after she was gone, and so left a few lines for me to show to society that I, and I only, was responsible for my part. My revolt against her received a check which [illegible] my grief and only increased. But the lines she thus wrote and left were not true lines. All her heart [illegible] that I was a wicked heart she has atoned for."
He paused, quite overcome. Others amongst us are more accustomed to [illegible] for a moment. The following remark from the district attorney struck [illegible] as the most [illegible] aspects of the case.
"I am not encountered for many facts not hitherto understood. But there is still a [illegible] point upon which neither yourself nor Miss Tutt-ne has yet made plain. There was a [illegible] in the house. It was out when this officer arrived [illegible]. They were [illegible] pursuing in the upstairs room, aside from the one [illegible] such an hour of inspection there. Whence came those candles? And did your sister [illegible] one in the library herself, previous to the shooting, or was it [illegible] to attribute to any other lips?"
These are questions which, as I have already said, I have no means of answering," repeated Mr. Jeffrey. "The courage with which brought her here may have led her to supply herself with light, but as to what it is to conceive, she may even have passed over to the room of the [illegible] before she lifted the pistol to her breast."
The district attorney and the major looked unconvinced, and the latter, [illegible] his head, remarked, "Still, sir, [illegible] asked if she had any remark to make in the subject.
But she could only repeat Mr. Jeffrey's statement.
"These are questions I can not answer either. I have said that I stopped [illegible] in the house in the moment that I saw nothing of what passed within."
Here the major asked where Mrs. Jeffrey's letter was to be found. It was [illegible] in the library.
"Search in my room for a book that will be found open on the desk with it in my hand—descended to me with the rest of Mrs. Jeffrey's property. Your conduct, therefore, strikes me in the light of an impertinence, especially as no one else has [illegible] to have more interest than myself in [illegible] the case. Of course, what has been for many years re-[illegible]," I remarked. "You can get the memorandum then. In the meantime, on the spot, but without the benefit of [illegible] assistance."
"I own to nothing," he snapped. Then, realizing that the [illegible] regard was fatal, he added more genially: "What do you mean by memorandum? I am [illegible] of the capitulation of old-time mysteries and their accompanying [illegible] in which I once whiled away an idle hour. I am not, of course, what you shouldn't [illegible] it is only a proof of my curiosity in regard to this old mystery which every member of my family must feel. That curiosity has not been satisfied as yet. I have never been indiscreet on your part, may I [illegible] that I have never had a chance that little golden ball of mine which you sport so freely before my eyes in the old days [illegible] to see?"
"Read the papers," I said; "read to-morrow's papers, Mr. Moore; you better still, to-night's. Perhaps they will have [illegible]."
He was as angry as I had expected him to be, but as the ire proved conclusively that his strongest conviction had been curiosity rather than grief, I was accustomed at my ground, and turned to re-enter the house. Mr. Jeffrey accompanied me.
The major was standing in the hall. The others had evidently repaired to the library.
"The man opposite knows what we know," I said to him. "He does not include the facts concerning the picture in the southwest chamber or the [illegible] mechanism."
"You are sure?"
"As positive as one of my inexperience can be. But, Major, I am equally positive that he knows more than he [illegible] of Mrs. Jeffrey's death. I am even ready to state that I am [illegible] he was in the house when it occurred."
"Has he acknowledged this?"
"Not at all."
"Then what are your reasons for this belief?"
"They are many."
"Will you state them?"
"Gladly, if you will pardon the presumption. Some of my conclusions are [illegible] by learning. The very truth is that I have possibly been more of this old man than my duty warranted, and I felt quite ready to declare that he knows more of what has taken place in this house than he is ready to avow. I am sure that he has often visited it in secret and knows about a certain broken window."

"And so do we. I am also sure that he was here on the night of Mrs. Jeffrey's suicide. He was too little surprised when I informed him of what had happened not to have known something beforehand. On my hand, even if we had not the testimony of the lighted candle and the book he so hurriedly replaced. Besides, he is not the man to drag himself out at night for so simple a cause as the one with which he endeavored to impose upon us. He knew what we should find in this house."
"Very good. If Mr. Jeffrey's present explanations are true, these deductions of yours are probably correct. But Mr. Moore's denial has [illegible] to [illegible] to [illegible] turn out a here question of veracity."
"Not necessarily," I returned. "I think I see a way of forcing this man to acknowledge that he was in or about this house on that fatal night."
"You do?"
"Yes, sir. I do not want to boast, and I should be glad if you did not oblige me to confide to you the means by which I intend to bring him out. Only give me leave to insert a newspaper [illegible] evening and morning paper and in two days I will report failure or success."
"The major eyed me with an interest that made my heart thrill. Then, with a [illegible] nod, he [illegible] the privilege; I will give you a free hand."
At this moment Durbin reappeared. He had a book in his hand and turned to open the door of his [illegible] room. Taking it out, he handed it to the major, with this remark:
"You won't find anything there; the gent's been fooling you."
But the major, after a quick look, it looked under the cover, found [illegible] the [illegible] of the drawing-room. We as hastily followed him, and the district attorney was talking with Miss Tuttle, while Jeffrey was nervously paring the [illegible] at the window. I looked and entered and his eyes flashed to the book.
"Let me take it," said he.
"Undoubtedly empty," remarked the major. "The gas has been abstracted, probably without your knowledge."
"I do not think so," was Mr. Jeffrey's [illegible] reply. "I do not suppose that I would intrust a secret, for the preservation of which I am ready to [illegible] my life, to the open pages of a book? When I [illegible] that I [illegible] all the sorts of visits from the police and detectives, I [illegible] that all papers might be ransacked, I sought some hiding place for this letter, which now was without [illegible] [illegible] could discover. Look!"
And he held out the outside wrapper, he inserted the point of his penknife and drew out the letter, showing the inside cover and ripped it off with a flourish.
"I pasted this here myself," he cried, and showed us where between the [illegible] and the cover [illegible] a place thinned out to hold it; there lay a [illegible] of white paper, which, with a deep sigh, he handed over to the major's inspection. As he did so he remarked:
"I had rather have died any natural death than have had my miserable wife's secret known. But since she has [illegible] to [illegible] the story of her sin and her repentance, never even in some slight degree to mitigate [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] sorely tempted and she succumbed; that she was [illegible] and [illegible] her blood."
He again walked off. The major unfolded the sheets.

CHAPTER XXV.

Later I saw this letter. It was like no other that has ever come into the hands of [illegible] of [illegible], as her hand had power or her misery found words, it bore on its face all.

Will You Help A Sick Friend?

Get My Book For Him Now,

Send me no Money.
Only tell me which book to send. You certainly know of some one who is ailing—some sufferer. You will be grateful for the help my book may give.
And that book tells of a way to help. Tells of a way as certain as that a physician's office can help on trial. The book tells how for thirty years the hospitals and he doddies I searched for a way to cure deep-seated and difficult diseases. It tells how I found that way at last—the discovery of my prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. It tells how I proved it. It tells how I learned I created out the causes that bring on chronic ailments.
I found invariably that where there was a weakness the inside nerves were starved. Where there was a lack of vitality that the vital forces were spent. Where weak organs were found, always found nerves. Then the nerves commonly thought of, but the vital organs' nerves, the inside —the invisible nerves.
This was a revelation.
Then my search began.
Then I combined ingredients that would feed those starved nerves. I utilize these nerves. That prescription I called Dr. Shoop's Restorative. It known the world over now as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. After that I found how to make it for each hundred. In the extremely obstinate cases. Where [illegible] years were one in each forty treatments. Even the incurable. Cancer is for surgery, not medicine.
Then how to get this prescription to sick people who needed it. That thought. I must announce it. In the papers. But I [illegible] that I will they realize the truth of my discovery. I found a power of Dr. Shoop's Restorative! Then it came to me—like an inspiration. "I will let them try it on trial." Then they will know I am sincere." And I made that offer. I mailed to sick and city village in America. They agreed to co-operate with me. Now by any sick one.

THE HERRING IS KING.
Measured of All the Fish of the Sea—How and Why It Holds Such Sway—Coats to His Credit.
Of all the fish in the sea herring is king.
The herring or breakfast dish or as here it counters an savory is its familiar enough. In that capacity every one knows him. But the herring is king! There is another reason that altogether and needs some accounting for. For what! Still, one feels inclined to ask, is that insignificant little fish akin to the baby cannibal fish? Who crowned him and why? Was it the northern nations, to whom his advent brings such good, or was it further warranty anywhere for his kingship?
Here for the curious are chapter and verse for King Herring's claim. To begin with, he is countenanced by no less a person than Rare Ben Jonson, who in act 1, scene 3, of Every Man in His Humor" makes the facetious Cob claim ancestry from "Herring, the king of fish." And, to substantiate Ben Jonson's assertion, comes that other sixteenth century writer, Thomas Nash of Lowestoft, who was eloquent, not to say profuse, ferved, on the subject of the herring's kingship in a lively and paradoxical work called "Lenten Stuff; or, The Praise of Red Herring." It written, it is said, in gratitude for money lent the author by the people of Yarmouth by way of support while of the same. Here the herring's claim to royal estate is duly set forth in bombastic language suited to the dignity of the theme and the truth to tell, the satirical mood of the writer. Shorn of Nash's rhetorical extravagance, this, briefly, is the story of how the herring came by his kingship:
It appears that once upon a time all the fish of the sea had occasion to choose a king to lead them to battle. They did so, says Nash, "beshackled mightily their fishy wits for their claim was hedged round with limitations. No ravening fish, for instance, must they choose, lest, having destroyed their foe, he should eat them also for change of diet. He must, moreover, be one well known to all by reason of his wide sea wanderings, one, too, whom they could discern when inclisted should be begin to tyrannize. Now, none met these requirements save the herring; hence was he promptly elected king of shoals by the unanimous voice of all the fishy community—all, that is, but the plaice and flounder, who, being ravening fish, months at Master Herring instead of thanking God save the king!" with the rest and who have had, as every one knows, wry mouths for their mocking ever since. In such fashion was the herring raised to the kingly throne, and having come he to stay day, says Nash, a coronet to mark his kingship; hence, too, says he forth always with an army and moreover, in true kingly fashion sends forth herald to announce his royal progress through various waters. These herring heralds, by the way, when the wily fisherman catch be arrings sundry times round be mainmast of his lugger, bidding them bring the best a leaf of herrings for every swing. Then, their ransom paid, he flings them back into the deep, hostages to fortune.
Nash's eulogies of King Herring in "Lenten Stuff" know no bounds. Not content with proclaiming him king in his natural state, he lends him extravagantly — cured—giving him such titles as "Puissant Red Herring, Red Herring of Herring Hall, Golden Hesperides Red Herring" and various other panegyrics. All of this is as absurd as Nash meant it to be. Yet in spite of his humor, there is much truth in his enumeration of King Herring's puissance. Never yet was there so autocratic a monarch, for wherever he puts in an appearance he dominates everything and everybody.
It is also told tale how in those ancient days a certain Yarmouth fisherman having caught more herrings than he "with what to do withal, hung them in the sooty roof of his dwelling-a-tying" and straightway forgot all about them; how he built up his fire, the weather being cold, and, "what with his smoking and firing, the herrings, which were white as whalebone when he hung them up, became by degrees as jolum as tobacco." The good man and his wife did not discover this fact for some days, and when at length they spied the beautiful red fish they fell down on their knees and crossed themselves and

"A miracle, a miracle!" nun nen pentharum! Sancta Castle, Castle, miles away from Cerdic shore over the marshes, went they, where Sigebert, King of the East Angles, lived in retirement in the monastery of Dedi. Sigebert bestowed many privileges on the place where this miracle had come to pass and thus the very first red herrings brought prosperity to Yarmouth.
In olden times herrings were thought food for kings. "A white herring," says Nash, "is a meet dish for a prince." And so one English monarch seemed to think, for Edward I. in 1286 bound Yarmouth by charter to send annually to court twenty-four herring pies, each containing a hundred herrings, and forty lasts of red herring, now in 1300 ordered from the same place for the King's use. In the ancient reign the "puissant" fish served as handsome fare for a royal couple too. When Margaret, daughter of Edward I., married the Duke of Brabant 10,552 herrings were provided for the victualing of the ship which conveyed the bride and bridegroom to the continent. So much for the herring's association with royalty; so much for his claim to be royal himself, a claim as strong now as it was when Nash wrote so grandiloquently of it, for never was there a monarch whose rule was more firmly established, whose power increased more steadily.

FEMALE SINGERS IN CHOIRS.
WOULD BE DIFFICULT TO FILL DEPLETED RANKS IN ONTARIO.
The Roman Catholic church choirs in Toronto have not as yet been affected by the recently promulgated Papal bull which prohibits the presence of female singers in choirs. Although the bull has already been put into effect in the Hamilton diocese, and will soon take force in the Ottawa diocese, the church authorities in Toronto have not received word as to their local intelligence as to how it will affect this see. It is expected, however, that at an early date the Archbishop of the bull will be supplied to the churches of Toronto and the surrounding parishes, thus banishing women from the choirs.
When the change does come into effect, it is probable that for some time the musical services of the various churches will be seriously interfered with. The officials in Toronto, Ottawa and other Ontario sees will be much concerned to find that in those of Ottawa and the Province of Quebec, where the proportion of Catholics is much greater, there are affording larger male congregations, which may be drawn on for singers. In the Ontario choirs, in most cases, the women vocalists are in the majority, and it will require considerable effort to fill the depleted ranks.

"Clang!"
A jangle of bells in the engine room,
And the bell-fires glare in the stoke-hole's gloom;
For life and death on the signal ring.
The reunion steel of the furnace rings,
And the pent-up monster sighs and groans.
The stokers know not why the order rings,
But the steam gauge leaps at the summons—"Clang!"
"Purr!"
His death speaks low to the man at the wheel;
There's the thought of guns, the great ships reel.
What matter if Death waits in Honor's court?
There's a ringing cheer in the wild turmoil
Of the grinding jar of the gun's recoil.
Then the launched torpedo's quick retort,
And the battle is over—the ship's in port.
'Tis the strife of the gods of battle,
When Death stands grim at the wheel—
A tale of the strife of puppets
That go down in the ships of steel.

ABOUT THE NORTHWEST

Total number of immigrants	1900	1903
	49,500	135,000

Last year these immigrants brought into Canada $1,500,000 in cash and $18,000,000 worth of effects. These are the people who build up the country and make farm lands valuable.

Immigration from United States	1896	1900	1903
Average Wheat Yields—Manitoba	44	18.270	47.780
Territories	25.0 bushels to acre.
Iowa	14.7 bushels to acre.
Minnesota	14.3 bushels to acre.
Wheat receipts, 1903—Winnipeg	51,000,000 bushels.
Duluth-Superior	47,406,921 bushels.
Chicago	31,949,993 bushels.

There will, from all indications, be more settlers going to the Canadian Northwest this year than ever before, 175,000 American farmers are expected.
Intending settlers will do well to communicate with us, as we have 40,000 acres of selected wheat land for sale in the Saskatchewan Valley. Cash or easy terms.
Reasonable rates for refunding of fares.
Representative in Winnipeg who will personally take charge of intending purchasers, and show them land without charge.
Will sell in quarter, half or full sections. Land is all one price, and you select it yourself.
Will reserve land a reasonable time on payment of a small deposit, and if after inspection any other would be preferred, make your selection from any land we have then unsold.

ONE AVERAGE CROP WILL PAY FOR LAND.
This is worth consideration from the standpoint of the farmer, the investor and the speculator. The district is settling well and land will in two or three years be more valuable than now.

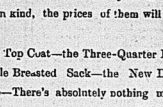
The Store For ·· Quality ··

This store excels not only in quality, but variety as well—never has it been able to show what it does to-day, and notwithstanding the fact that the clothes that wear the Quick & Robertson label are the uncommon kind, the prices of them will prove the greatest surprise of all.

The Rain Coat—the Top Coat—the Three-Quarter Length Overcoat—the New Single Breasted Sack—the New Double-Breasted Sack, are all here—There's absolutely nothing missing.

Easter Clothes



Naturally we are very proud of our Boys' Clothing Department. The showing we make for Easter is extraordinary—it is unusual, not only in wideness of variety and exclusiveness of style, but in lowness of prices—quality as it always has been is paramount

Suits for young men receive particular attention—our showing is so entirely different—the garments equal in style, individuality, and materials, the output of the foremost tailors, and our prices are less than HALF.

The Finest Haberdashery for Men and Boys.

This department is a complete store in itself—exclusiveness is just as possible, if not a little more so here than it is in smaller establishments.

We have it and our Up-to-Date methods of merchandising enables us to assure it to all without extra charge—our prices are regulated by quality only, and WE WILL SAVE YOU MONEY.

An Unusual Showing of Spring Hats.

This department can be depended upon, not only for quality and fairness of prices, but as a place where the newest creations will be shown as soon as they are issued.

In its exhibition of the spring styles will be found the Christys', Barrington and Hawes blocks in soft and stiff hats at $1, $1.50, $2.00, and $2.50.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

THE EARL OF PAWTUCKET.

This comedy, which comes to the opera house on Saturday night, deals with the adventures of the Earl of Pawtucket, who followed an American girl from London to New York in order to win her for his wife. He assumed the name of a former New Yorker with the latter's consent. The latter had fled to Europe in order to avoid paying alimony to his divorced wife, who turned out to be the object of the Earl's journey. This led to interesting complications when he reached New York, and his stay at the Waldorf Astoria was made interesting by the relations of the real Montgomery Pawtucket and their legal followers. There he also met the object of his quest, who was introduced to him as Miss Harriet Forsdyce, her maiden name, and who, of course, gave her own name on signing under an assumed name. He is compelled to pay a portion of the alimony, and fell under suspicion for the murder of the real Lord Cardington. With such a basis the plot is easily and cleverly worked out, naturally there is some scathing, although unintentional, satire on the American propensity for slang.

Mrs. Howell's Funeral.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Manley Howell took place yesterday afternoon at Moscondaga View, and was largely attended by relatives and friends. Services at the house were conducted by the Rev. W. Johnson, pastor of the Methodist church. Upon the casket were a number of beautiful floral tributes. The bearers were Messrs. W. Wood, S. Potter, J. Herbertson, D. R. and F. Lauder.

Coat Thieves Taken Back.

Police Constable Nevison of Lindsay arrived here yesterday afternoon and left in the evening, taking with him the two men, McDonald and Record, who were arrested here on a charge of stealing a coat.

RICH COLOR AND SOFT SKIN

May be imitated, but beauty is more than skin deep—it is hidden in the blood, and to create the poisonous products of indigestion by Ferrozone and complexion rapidly improves. Increases the red coloring matter in the blood, give it more nutrition and more red cells, do this and cosmetics won't be needed. Give up cosmetics, they wither too quickly. Use Ferrozone and have your complexion firmly established. There isn't a case of blotched skin, poor complexion or lack of color that can't be quickly remedied by Ferrozone. Try it. Price 50c.

The Flood Situation

WORST NOW SEEMS TO BE OVER —FOXBORO ICE STILL TO COME.

The ice in the river was this morning down as far as the lower bridge, and it is anticipated that it will move out to the bay, without causing further trouble. The river at present is practically clear from the city to some distance above Corbyville. At the railway bridge at Foxboro there is a considerable jam of ice, but this, if it should start, anyway would be scattered and broken up by the bending there.

Owing to ice and water surrounding No. 1 fire hall the horses and team were last night taken to a place of safety near by.

Whilst the ice has not yet been carried away from the park, yesterday and to-day a heavy stream of water was running over the roadway from the approach to the first culvert. This helped a considerable portion of the flooded to be washed away. Nevertheless repairs will have to be made before conveyances can drive over.

Some damage was done to the footbridge during the storm yesterday, but the cost of repairing the same will not be expensive. One of the supporting wires was completely carried away and another was loosened.

At the time of writing the water was still high, but not overflowing the banks. Many cellars are, however, flooded, and to a much greater feet, owing to furnaces not being able to be used.

A TRIP TO ST. LOUIS.

CANADIAN PRESS ASSOCIATION WILL TAKE A JAUNT IN MAY.

The Canadian Press Association has arranged with the Grand Trunk and Illinois Central Railways for an excursion to St. Louis in May. A special train of pullmans will leave Toronto on Saturday morning, 14th, and after a night's run reach St. Louis, arriving at the fair grounds at 7 o'clock on Sunday morning. The party will be lodged at the Inside Inn, on the grounds, where special rates have been arranged. The World's Press Parliament will meet on Festival Hall, 16th to 21st.

Mr. H. E. Charlton, general advertising agent of the Grand Trunk Railway, is executive from the Illinois Central, will accompany the party.

DROVE PREACHER OUT.

HYMN BOOKS HURLED AT PASTOR FOR "SLAUGHTER HOUSE RELIGION."

Cleveland, March 27.—Because the Rev. Dr. G. A. Fisher, pastor of the Franking Avenue Congregational Church, insisted his parishioners abandoning to a "slaughter house religion" the services were stopped this morning and he was driven from the pulpit.

A week ago Dr. Fisher was served with a notice to leave the pastorate, and this morning in preaching he preached his farewell sermon. He took his flock to task for "slaughter house religion" and for his dismissal, he told the congregation that they were "slaughter house religion."

Immediately there arose a dozen persons, who interrupted the minister, denouncing him as an atheist, and hurled their books at him. The pastor's friends rallied, and after a fistic battle made a rush for the pulpit, driving Dr. Fisher from the church. The two factions fell to each other's throats and finally, somewhat stricken, the pastor left the building and went home.

Dr. Fisher is a native of Philadelphia, a graduate of Colgate University, Hamilton, N.Y., and of the University of Chicago.

WHY CATARRH POISONS THE SYSTEM.

The catarrhal germ excites inflammation, offensive secretions are thrown off and pass into the circulation, contaminating the river of life, and poisoning every drop in the whole body. Every catarrh victim should use Ferrozone in treating Catarrhozone, the surest cure for every type of catarrh yet discovered. Catarrhozone can't fail to cure, because its vapor kills the germs and removes the cause of the disease. It soothes and heals, stops the cough and relieves. Don't be fooled up condition of the nose and throat. Scores of thousands have been cured by Catarrhozone, which is guaranteed. Use only Catarrhozone. Complete outfit $1.00; trial size, 25c.

Sports and Pastimes

FOOTBALL.

Chance for a Local Club.

A sporting organization of comparative recent origin, but the success of which is already assured, is the Midland Football League, which is now in its second year's existence. The annual meeting was recently held in Peterboro, when the officers for the year were elected. Last year only clubs from the purely Midland counties entered the league, but this year a number of other clubs have applied to be admitted, and it has now been decided to admit all clubs that so desire, which desire to compete for the handsome silver cup emblematic of the league championship, donated by Hon. J. R. Stratton.

At a meeting to be held in Peterboro, on Saturday, April 16th, the districts will be arranged and games scheduled. Any clubs desiring to enter should notify the secretary of the league, M. Hinchliffe, sporting editor of the Peterboro Examiner, as soon as possible, in order that provision may be made in the schedule.

BASKET BALL.

Unique League to Albert College?

As a fitting close to the basket ball season in Albert College, a unique sport league was formed consisting of eleven teams, each team representing a particular table. The eleven were grouped and a schedule arranged, the winner to receive a beautiful flower as a souvenir for their table.

A keen interest was taken by all in the various games, but on Wednesday night when the final game of the first round was played, excitement ran high. The gymnasium gallery was filled with the college girls and boys, ready to cheer their favorite team. After a very closely contested game the tehm managed by Prof. Doolittle was declared the winners. Score 14 to 4. Prof. Dennett conferred the game to the satisfaction of all concerned.

The teams lined up as follows:—

Prof. Doolittle	I. Macklin
Defence
G. Purchase	C. Mullin
C. Johnston	Forwards
	F. H. Hancock
J. McNeal
A. E. Wilson	E. Stevenson
C. Brereton	I. Macklin

In the evening Prof. Doolittle entertained his table to a supper at Wallace's.

CATTLE ARE STARVING,

MANY OF THEM ARE WITHOUT FOOD OF ANY KIND.

Bancroft, Ont., March 29.—Many of the farmers in the northern part of this country are without food of any kind for their stock, and as a result hundreds of cattle will die from starvation, in fact, many have died already. The roads are in such a condition that it would be impossible to get food in even though it could be procured. If the snow does not go off quickly, many a poor soldier will be left without a four-footed beast of any kind.

It will be remembered that some time ago it was reported that cattle were starving in the eastern part of Hastings county, owing to the winter supply of fodder being consumed and the deep snow and constant blizzards making it impossible for the animals to browse in the woods. The above item from the Bancroft paper is to show that a similar condition prevails in Hastings county, farther east. It is to be hoped the Local Legislature will do with a rush, also the farmers of the north country will maintain a serious set-back.

LADY MINTO'S INJURY.

SUSTAINED A COMPOUND FRACTURE OF THE RIGHT LEG.

Ottawa, March 30.—The Countess of Minto met with a very painful accident while skating at the Rideau rink shortly after noon today. Falling on the ice she received a compound fracture of the right leg just above the ankle. Her Excellency received a severe shock, but bore herself well, and was afterwards conveyed to Government House, where she is resting easily. The Countess of Minto and others of the party went immediately to the assistance of Lady Minto, and she was stretched out on the ice, unable to move, though perfectly conscious. Robes were brought and the patient was wrapped up and several doctors in the vicinity were called, but most of them were out. In a short time, however, Dr. Hall, Dr. Powell arrived, and afterwards Dr. Chabot and Sir James Grant. Splints were attended to in the rink by the physicians, and the patient, who had been suffering greatly, was much relieved. The ambulance of St. Luke's Hospital was summoned, and after what seemed a long delay it arrived. Then Her Excellency was carried on a stretcher to the ambulance and removed to Government House, where she is in the care of trained nurses. Dr. Powell will remain with the distinguished patient. The break is of a very painful character, as the extremities of the fibula, or fall one of the bones protruded through the flesh. Her Excellency, however, is of robust constitution, and it is anticipated that she will be able to withstand the severe nervous shock incidental to the accident.

RE UNION WITH CANADA.

Question of Confederation Up in Newfoundland Legislature.

St. John's, Nfld., March 31.—In the Legislature last night, Premier Bond said that no correspondence had passed between the Government of Newfoundland and that of Canada, regarding Confederation. However, the Imperial Government, having forwarded a copy of a resolution adopted by the Congress of Chambers of Commerce of the British Empire at Montreal in August last, favoring Confederation, the Newfoundland Government had replied that it could not concur that the present time was opportune for the opening of negotiations toward a union with Canada. There was no desire on the part of the people of Newfoundland for the inclusion of the colony as a constituent part of the Dominion. On the contrary, the reply said, there was an evident desire that the colony should maintain its autonomy and continue to retain its honorable and independent position as a part of the British Empire.

Strike Averted.

Glace Bay, C. B., March 31.—The threatened strike at Dominion No. 2, which gave promise of involving all miners in the employ of the Dominion Coal Company, has been averted by the action of General Manager Duggan in yielding to the request of the Provincial Workmen's Association that the dismissed firemen be taken back and that they be not required to do extra shovelling of ashes asked of them, and which caused the trouble. The result is considered a victory for the men.

Another Vote So Majority.

Paris, March 31.—In the Chamber of Deputies yesterday the campaign of the opposition against M. Pelletan, Minister of Marine, failed to shake the position of the Government, which obtained a majority of eighty on a test vote.

Australian Commission.

London, March 31.—(C.A.P.)—A bill will shortly be introduced in the Australian Parliament providing for the appointment in London of a High Commissioner at a salary of £3,500.

GAMEY RAISED RIPPLE

Said Premier's Statement Was Not True On Its Face.

Hon. Mr. Ross Said He Had Forgotten the G.T.R. Application of Feb., 1903, For a Subsidy, When He Answered Mr. Reid's Question on the 30th March This Year—Mr. Gamey Then Stated a Fact.

Toronto, March 31.—Before the orders of the day were reached in the Legislature yesterday Mr. Gamey raised a ripple of excitement by offering a list just laid on the desks for applications for railway subsidies. This contained a copy of application from the Grand Trunk Railway Co. made in February, 1903, for a subsidy. The application "humbly requests that the same assistance in the way of subsidies and land grants as may have been voted to other enterprises calculated to benefit the province will be extended to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company." Then, on March 9, this year, William Wainwright of the Grand Trunk Pacific wrote the Premier asking for the assistance of the Government towards the construction of branch lines, and referring to the company's application of last year. Mr. Gamey said on March 18, this year, Mr. Reid handed the Government: "Did the Grand Trunk Railway officials or the Grand Trunk Pacific officials during the spring of 1903 make application to the Government for a subsidy, money grant, or bonus?" the Premier replied that the subject was discussed informally on one or two occasions with Grand Trunk officials in the spring of 1903, but that no application had ever been made.

Gamey Raised a Ripple.

That answer, said Mr. Gamey, could not be true in the face of the statement just brought down and the letter of Mr. Wainwright; and he thought it advisable to draw the attention of the House and the country to the remarkable difference between the facts and the Premier's answer. "How any man can justify himself in making an answer of that kind is the most remarkable thing I have ever heard." He continued that there had been such cases reported lately, but unfortunately the case of the deception was not so ready at hand.

Called to Order.

"Order!" came from the other side of the House, and Speaker Ingram echoed the remark. Mr. Gamey could not make any comment on the subject. He merely stated the facts.

Mr. Gamey—All right. I understand your position, Mr. Speaker, and your privileges in this House.

There was a series of "Order!" and Mr. Gamey sat down.

The Premier said several applications had come to the office about the same time, and this one was among them. Only making up the list of applications he had forgotten this application. He thought Mr. Wainwright's letter of March 9, this year, he handed up the application of the spring of 1903. He had brought it down, as he would have to bring up a good deal of it in the first place. The answer to Mr. Reid's question was accurate as far as it went, as no definite application had been made. It was not a very "definite" application.

Mr. Whitney (sarcastically)—Oh, no; not very "definite."

The Premier said he showed his good faith in bringing down the application down, and he intended to set himself right had not the hon. member for East Grey brought the question up.

Mr. Stanley—Mr. Wainwright's letter was dated March 9, and your answer to Mr. Reid's question was given on March 18.

Pays For Special Train.

Then the leader of the Opposition asked if it was true that the Grand Trunk at an early hour that morning chartered a special train from Tavistock with one of the members on its license.

Mr. Ross said: "I understand a gentleman did come."

"At the Government expense?" suggested Dr. Barr.

"I suppose it is the Government's expense," the Premier said.

Another Ashes Bill.

Mr. Whitney then directed an inquisitorial shaft towards the Premier's desk in regard to the Ashes Bill. When would the bill get its second reading?

Mr. Ross said he was unable to say, but it would be in time to allow the usual effort to be made to discuss it.

Mr. Ib. John of West York asked the Premier to say when he was going to bring down his temperance bill, or was he going to do it all?

Not a word came from the Government leader.

"I want an answer," insisted Mr. John.

"He'll have to take his answer when he gets it," feebly replied Mr. Ross. "I suppose I can say now."

Factory Girls Rank Hair.

Mr. Dryden's factory girls' amendment came up for a second reading. The clause requiring female employees to wear their hair coiled on the head was changed to enable them to wear caps, which would enable the flowing tresses and prevent them getting tangled up with the machinery. The hour for knocking off work was fixed at 6.30, instead of 7.

Mr. Dryden informed Mr. Downey that a second female factory inspector would probably be appointee.

Hilton, Dec. Harcourt's bill, providing for the amalgamation of school boards in cities and towns passed the committee stage after the section requiring the merging of public library boards with the school boards was struck out.

Third Reading.

The following bills were read a third time: To consolidate the debenture debt of the Township of Osnabruck (McCart); supporting the Lakefront Cemetery, and to incorporate the Lakefront Cemetery Company (Clarke, Northumberland); to incorporate the St. Joseph & Stratford Electric Railway Company (Brown).

Mr. McCart introduced a bill entitled an act respecting certain bylaws and drainage of the Townships of Osnabruck and Cornwall.

The debate on Hon. Mr. Davis' bill respecting Canadian canals was resumed, but after supper was finally adjourned.

Mr. Pettypiece's Bill.

Mr. Ross said Mr. Pettypiece's bill had been before the House for two sessions and had attracted a good deal of attention. The question was how to tax Canadian railroads according to their earnings and how to pay. The municipal taxation on Canadian railways averaged $58 per mile, so that there was a wide margin to work on.

The Premier said it was his intention to bring down next Tuesday a supplementary revenue bill, which would provide further taxation for railways. Mr. Pettypiece's bill provided for a railway commission, the same as in many states of the union. Mr. Ross said in addition to the municipal taxes of $55 a mile, which the railways paid, they also paid land sums to the Dominion treasury. The Grand Trunk Railway in Ontario paid last year the sums on coal alone $663,000, or $30 a mile, so that they paid in taxes $803 a mile—the public supposed to income from the railways by from $150,000 to $200,000.

Mr. Pettypiece's Rebuke.

Mr. Pettypiece said the Premier's speech was "disgusting" if he was talking to the railways and not to the people of this province. (Tremendous applause.) The railways of the States paid in taxes, generally, not more than 3 per cent. of their net earnings, and if we did the same we would receive $2,000,000 from the railways.

He combatted the Premier's argument as to the taxes paid by the railways in coal duties. Labor supported almost as much coal as she imported, and on this the railways got the United States to pay the duty.

He suggested that the bill go to a special committee or some committee that would deal with it, but he was not to be shunted as it was before. If it was not a good bill, throw it out, and if it was good adopt it.

"If this Government doesn't support this bill, some other Government will after they are out," Mr. Whitney said by way of warning.

Don't Trust Too Harshly.

Mr. Whitney regretted that the bill had been left till so late in the year, but that should not be an insuperable obstacle to its being treated as it should be. He agreed with the Premier that the railways should not be treated too harshly, but he had no doubt that the real feeling would oppose any measure tending to impose further burdens on them. The bill had not received fair consideration. To give it fair consideration it was not to be committed in favor of it or against it.

The bill passed its second reading, and the Premier moved that it be referred to a special committee composed of Pettypiece, Dryden, Stock, Cameron (Huron), Davidson, Pense, Preston, Lucas, Sinclair (Hamilton), Hoyle, Duff, Smith (Soo), Clark (Bruce), Tucker.

Mr. Pettypiece said he had agreed with the Government as to the committee, but he suggested an amendment that the bill go to the committee of the whole House.

Mr. Hanna moved an amendment that the bill be referred to the committee of the whole House.

Mr. Speaker declared the amendment out of order, as the rule required that a public bill in the hands of a private member go to one of the standing committees.

Mr. Whitney moved the adjournment of the debate and another item of business was taken up.

Justice Was His Point.

The rights of Edward Spencer Jenison to the water power of the Muskoka River and Moon Lake Rapids were fully restored by the private bills committee of the Legislature yesterday morning. The bill was passed on a vote of 26 to 6, notwithstanding the determined opposition of the Attorney-General and a number of the Liberal members of the committee. By the action of the committee, Mr. Clergue and the Town of Sault Ste. Marie receive a black eye, as they put forth every effort to defeat the proposition.

When it was seen how things were going the minority made another attempt to have action deferred. A motion to this effect was defeated by 24 to 6, those who voted for adjournment being Barber, Connee, Gibson, Guibord, Hislop and Munro.

A motion to adopt the first clause of the bill the vote stood:

Yeas—Aird, Barr, Beck, Brower, Brown, T. G., Carscallen, Hugh Clark, Crawford, Davidson, Duff, Gallagher, Hendrie, Hoyle, Jessop, Kidd, Lucas, Macaulay, Morrison, Munro, Pardo, Reaume, Reid, Russell, St. John and Willoughby—26.

Nays—Barber, Connee, Gibson, Guibord, Hislop and Stock—6.

The whole matter was then referred to a committee consisting of Barber, Hoyle, Duff, Connee, Lucas, Auld and Hislop to arrange the details.

Among the features of the meeting are an address by Principal Peterson of McGill on Tuesday evening, and the report of a committee appointed to discuss the curriculum in the high and public schools.

FLOODS CAUSE DAMAGE

Two Thousand People Are Homeless in Lima, Ohio.

Five Hundred Houses Submerged—Sanitorium Patients Suffering—Bridge Carried Away Near Montreal—Narrow Escape of Train—Fort Hope in Danger From Rivers Overflowing Their Banks.

Lima, O., April 2.—Ottawa River has flooded a large portion of this town. Two thousand people either are homeless or confined to the second storeys or roofs of their homes to escape the raging waters. Fully 500 houses are submerged, and they have been washed from their foundations.

In many cases where people lived in one-storey houses they were taken from the roof by rescuers just before the buildings collapsed and were swept away. Many narrow escapes from drowning were experienced. Several of the largest manufacturing plants in the city are under water. The Labelle Sanitarium is filled with patients, many of whom are dangerously ill, and have been huddled into rooms on the second floor. All public places and homes adjacent to the flooded district are already crowded with homeless.

Power Canal Runs Dist.

Piqua, Ohio, April 2.—The hydraulic canal which supplies this city with water has overflowed its banks as the result of a terrific rainfall, and the two hundred residences in the western and southern portion of the city were surrounded by water yesterday. A number of manufacturing plants have been compelled to close down as a result of the flood.

Danger Feared at Fort Hope.

Port Hope, March 2.—The Canadaka River overflowed its banks last night. The bridge on the main street has been considerably weakened by the raging waters and extra temporary supports are being put in. Pedestrians are prohibited from walking on the north side of the bridge. Watchmen were placed along the banks last night to give warning if the situation becomes more serious.

Bridge Washed Away.

Montreal, April 2.—This morning an ice shove occurred at Chambly, on the Richelieu River, which completely carried away the Central Vermont Railway bridge. A train passed over a few minutes before and about the same time five of the seven spans of the new steel highway bridge in the same locality were likewise carried down the river, lodging against the dam of the Montreal Light, Heat & Power Co.

The Thames Still Rising.

London, April 2.—The Thames is still rising and now measures 12 feet higher than normal.

Made Counterfeits in Prison.

Binghamton, N.Y., April 2.—One of the cases to be presented to the grand jury to convene at Utica next week is that of Julius and Adelbert Chapin, prisoners confined in Auburn State Prison, who are charged with making counterfeit money in that institution. They are said to have made molds for silver dollars and nickels. Their benches were near each other, one of them being engaged at such employment that he had to use molten metal.

One of them would have the moulds, the other the metals, and at frequent intervals, the metal men would carry over a ladle full of his counterfeit material and pour it into the moulds, the guards supposing they were at their regular work.

The counterfeits were good, and some of them were smuggled out of prison and placed in circulation before the work was discovered.

Fire in Montreal.

Montreal, April 2.—An extensive conflagration occurred yesterday in the business section of the city, the fiery buildings being destroyed, the total loss reaching perhaps $50,000. The following firms were burned out: Watson, Jack & Co., agents; S. Pitt, woollens; Thomas Samuel & Sons, commission merchants; Robert Hose & Co., dry goods; Hadway & Co., F. J. Elliott, dry goods; W. J. Toft, importers; M. B. Davis & Co. The Bros', establishment was also damaged somewhat.

THIBETANS DEFEATED

British Expedition Opens Hostilities in Land of Llama.

Fifteen Hundred Natives Armed With Matchlocks Cohort Withstand Modern Arms—One Half Their Force Killed or Wounded—Invading Column Suffered Greatly From Intense Cold—Guns Frozen Up.

Tuna, British India, April 2.—The first clash occurred on the morning of Thursday between the force of Col. Younghusband and the Thibetans, whose camp at Guru was captured.

At 8 o'clock a flying column started to reconnoitre the Thibetan camp at Guru, whereupon a general from Lhasa came to interview Col. Younghusband. The general asked the colonel to retire with his mission to Yatung for the purpose of carrying on negotiations, threatening an attack if the mission proceed.

Col. Younghusband replied that negotiations had been proceeding fruitlessly for fifteen years, and that retirement was now impossible. The Thibetan general withdrew and Col. Younghusband ordered his troops to endeavor to disperse the Thibetans, blocking the road without firing upon them.

Details show that while the forces were face to face on the opposite side of a wall, which the Thibetans had built across the highway to oppose the advance the Indian troops deployed on their banks and passed 1,500 Thibetans in a circle like herding cattle. Under the new mission, the press correspondents and the official staff could go to inspect the capture and were laughing and chatting, they were unaware of the impending tragedy, being evidently heedless of the sullen demeanor of the Thibetans. The latter presently began to hustle some Sikhs who replied with the end of their rifles. Then the Thibetans fired a pistol, wounding a Sikh and this was the signal for all the Thibetans to draw their swords and rush at their captors, who opened fire on the surging mob. The officers emptied their revolvers.

The Thibetans were unable to climb the wall, which they themselves had built. Finally about half of them were able to break away to the rear, where they came under the fire of the artillery. The entire Thibetan force only about half escaped death or wounds.

The Thibetans fought heavily, owing to the inferiority of their weapons, which were matchlock rifles, but they displayed the greatest courage, many of them coming on after they had been wounded several times. The scene after the action was like a shambles. The dead were piled on top of each other, and a long trail of dead and wounded extended to the rear.

Among the Thibetans killed were the Lhassa general, the military commandant of Phari and Lata, and the representative of the golden monastery, to whose influence and violent hostility the existing difficulties were largely due.

The Daily Mail correspondent was seriously wounded.

While up to this time the British advance has met practically been unopposed, the expedition suffered great hardship from the great cold, and it was sometimes found impossible to use the Maxim guns and rifles, owing to the congealing of the oil.

BANDITS HOLD UP TRAIN.

California Express Messenger Shot Defending His Trust.

Sacramento, Cal., April 2.—Three masked men held up the Oregon express, southbound, on the Southern Pacific Railroad at Copley, near Keswick, killed W. J. Gill, the express messenger, and carried off the contents of the express box.

The train stopped at a small station for water when the men jumped on board, cut the train in two and took the engine and express car the track. O'Neil refused to open the car, whereupon they deliberately shot him.

The bandits then robbed the car. They then compelled the engineer O'Neil's helper to open the safe, but he showed that he could not do so. They then compelled the entire train crew of seven to place six sticks of dynamite on top of the safe. The explosion wrecked the entire car.

They then compelled the engineer to take them on five miles to Keswick, where they alighted and disappeared. An armed posse is in pursuit.

Dangerous Unionist Whip.

London, April 2.—(C. A. P.)—The editor of The National Review discusses Sir Alexander Acland-Hood, Chief Whip of the Unionist party, of inspiring J. L. Wharton's amendment, which he declares was undoubtedly an attempt to stab Mr. Chamberlain in the back.
